A. The average salary given to the orchestra leaders of the large picture houses is about $150 a week, while leaders of the less important theaters receive from $50 to $80 per week. The Union scale for players runs from $28 to $43.50 per week.

Q. I notice there seems to be some difference of opinion in some of the trade periodicals as to organs, orchestra and orchestral organs. Please tell me wherein lies the difference between an organ and an orchestral organ?

A. The church-organ, or pipe-organ, is a keyboard wind instrument consisting of few or many sets of pipes played from one or more keyboards; there may be five keyboards for the fingers (manuals), and there is generally one for the feet (pedal, or keyboard). The pipes, of which there are two main divisions, flue-pipes and reed-pipes, are arranged in sets (registers, or stops) and made to speak by wind admitted from the bellows on pressing the keys.

The orchestral organ is one built on the same principles as the pipe-organ, but to which has been added attachments which produce drum effects, xylophone, automobile honks, fire bells, bird calls, steamboat whistles, etc.

One is a serious instrument, incapable of frivolity, while the other becomes actually frolicsome at times.

Q. Is Shubert's "Unfinished Symphony" really unfinished, or is it just a title given it by the composer?

A. When Shubert died there was found amongst his unfinished mss. a symphony he had been working on but had not completed. It was afterwards finished by a contemporary and called "Shubert's Unfinished Symphony."

Q. Are there words to "Missouri Waltz?"

A. We have never heard of any words ever published for this waltz.

Q. My orchestra pit is built so high that the lights on the musicians' stands reflect on my screen, although they use shades. If the shades are turned so as to keep the light off the screen, then my patrons complain that they "get an eye-full." What would you do—sacrifice the screen or let the patrons suffer? Some people kick at anything.

A. I would build a rail in front of the orchestra and use a curtain of some dark material, then the musicians can take their lights and turn them away from the screen without annoying your patrons. If the rail should interfere with the audience seeing the screen, then I would suggest using paper shades in addition to the others, preferably of an orange tint.

Affiliated Distributors Are Incorporated

New Group Outgrowth of Astor Meeting—Sydney Cohen Remains at Head of Managing Committee.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the incorporation, under the laws of Delaware, of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, with an authorized capital of $100,000, for the furtherance of co-operative booking of pictures by exhibitors on a national scale. The new organization is the direct outgrowth of the meeting of exhibitors and producers called at the Hotel Astor the fore part of April, by Frank Rembusch, of Indianapolis, for the purpose of threshing out the subject of co-operative booking.

In reality the new organization is claimed to be the crystallization of a movement which has been gaining strength throughout the country for several months past, and which recently has been reflected in the formation of various exhibitors' booking associations in different states and groups of states.

The associations now operating, it is understood, are to form the nucleus of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation. They will maintain their complete independence, financially and otherwise, the primary purpose of the national organization being simply that of a clearing house to facilitate the acquirement of pictures.

The permanent committee appointed at the Astor meeting to develop a practical, working plan for nationalized co-operative booking, which consisted of Sydney Cohen, president of the New York State Exhibitors' League, chairman; Byron Park, Salt Lake City, secretary; Joseph Hopp, president of the Illinois Motion Picture Exhibitors' League; Louis Frank, treasurer of the Motion Picture Theater Owners' Association; Frank Rembusch, secretary and treasurer of the American Exhibitors' Association; King Perry, of Detroit, secretary of the American Exhibitors' Association of Michigan, and John Manheimer, president of the Manhattan local of the National Exhibitors' League, have held a number of meetings since the Astor convention and every effort has been made to reconcile the insistent demand throughout the country for some form of a national affiliation of such combined booking strength as to insure the various booking associations of a consistent supply of high-grade pictures with the equally insistent demand that any such national association should be exhibitor controlled, and that exhibitors should retain their funds in their own territories.

Each booking association will be represented in the new organization by a director. As soon as these directors are chosen officers for the affiliated will be selected. In the meantime the committee is managing the affairs of the corporation, with Charles C. Pettijohn acting as general counsel.

Six producers of special features have already aligned themselves with the new organization, and others have made application for releasing. The product of these producers will be booked on its merit.

Meetings have been held of the United Exhibitors' Association of Philadelphia and Eastern Pennsylvania and of the Michigan Exhibitors for the purpose of arranging for the affiliation of these groups with the new organization. Arrangements have previously been effected for the affiliation of other important factors.

Capital Society Sees "My Own United States"

Mrs. Wilson and Other Notables at Gala Red Cross Performances Praise Patriotic Picture.

THE big outstanding event of a patriotic week in Washington was the Red Cross benefit performance at Harry Crandall's Knickerbocker theater, when "My Own United States" was presented before official Washington and a capacity audience that cheered the production to the echo. The occasion was a benefit of the Interstate Commerce Commission Red Cross Auxiliary, a branch of the big central body which has as members the wives of cabinet officers, senators and other officials.

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson occupied a special box and became so enthused over the patriotic character of the production that she not only applauded, but at the conclusion of the showing exclaimed, "This is indeed a wonderful picture."

In boxes arranged on each side of the White House box were Mrs. Thomas R. Marshall, wife of the Vice-President; Mrs. Josephus Daniels, wife of the Secretary of the Navy; Mrs. Albert Burleson, wife of the Postmaster General; Mrs. Champ Clark, wife of the Speaker of the House; Mrs. Ollie James, wife of the Senator from Kentucky, together with many leaders in social and official life in the American Capital.

The Knickerbocker theater, which is one of the finest in the country, was especially decorated under the direction of Arthur L. Robb, who is house manager for Mr. Crandall, and patriotic bunting was displayed everywhere. Informal receptions were held in the Presidential Promenade, which is one of the most interesting features of theater service to the public to be found anywhere. This is a long room, decorated in French gray and ivory, containing portraits of all the Presidents of the United States, and large enough for the giving of a formal ball if the theater management desired. This is one of the show features of the Knickerbocker theater, and Mr. Crandall was warmly congratulated by his distinguished guests on this and the happy arrangement of his theater as a whole.

The screen showing of "My Own United States" was preceded by the recital of "A Man Without a County" by Colonel Barry Bulkley, one of the directors of the Knickerbocker Theater Company, accompanied by "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," played as an obligato by the strings. Then came a patriotic overture, and when the picture was scarcely half a reel passed the cheering and applause began. This was continued throughout the presentation and served as a remarkable tribute to the skill of the producer. R. F. Bingham interpolated in the sixth reel with a stanza of the song "My Own United States," intensifying the dramatic effect considerably. The ushers were all debutantes of Washington society.

"My Own United States" completed a big week's run at the Casino theater, another of the Crandall houses, and has made a remarkable impression. It is described as a most intensely patriotic production.

New Brunswick Has Graded Tax

Provincial Legislature Imposes 1 Cent Up to 25 Cents Admission—Rate Ascends to 10 Per Cent.

THE most important event to exhibitors and exchangemen in New Brunswick is the tax on the theaters. The bill is called the Theaters and Cinematographs act and was passed in the Provincial Legislature on Wednesday, April 25. The provisions are as follows:

On all tickets ranging from 5 cents to 25 inclusive a tax is to be levied of 1 cent. From 25 to 50 cents, 2 cents is charged; from 51 to 75 cents, 5 cents; from 76 cents to $1, 10 cents; from $1.01 to $1.50, 15 cents; from $1.51 to $2, 20 cents. When admission prices are more than $2 the tax will be on a flat ten per cent. basis.

It is proposed to have the theaters buy tax tickets of various denominations from the Government, and for the labor of selling them and seeing that the law is carried out the Government will allow each theater a small commission or rebate.

Every person attending a public house of entertainment after June 1 next will come under this tax, passholders not excepted. Children are exempted on Saturday afternoons but pay the tax every other day. All entertainments wholly for patriotic purposes will be exempt.

It is expected the revenue will net from $40,000 to $50,000 annually during the war and much more in times of peace.

GENERAL-KLEINE CO-OPERATE IN CANADA.

General Film Company, Ltd., Canada, and the George Kleine System are co-operating in Canada under an arrangement just put into effect. The business of the George Kleine exchange is being handled by General Film on a service basis, and the George Kleine System is not going out of existence and retains its identity in Canada. Incidentally, the entire Kleine staff remains working under the new arrangement.

In Montreal the exchange will be located, most likely, in the quarters of the George Kleine System, while in Toronto the General offices will be made the home of both organizations for that territory. The plan is calculated to reduce the distribution overhead of both concerns while maintaining the complete service of each.

LAWRENCE C. WINDOM SIGNS WITH WORLD.

Lawrence C. Windom has placed his signature to a long-term contract with World Pictures and has commenced the production of a picture starring June Elvidge. Mr. Windom has had a wild and varied theatrical experience previous to his entrance into the motion picture. He was associated with Charles Frohman, Henry B. Harris, Richard Mansfield, William Faversham, Elsie Ferguson and a number of other prominent theatrical folk.

His motion picture activities have been with Pathe and Essanay, for which companies he directed "Blind Justice," "The Chimney Sweep" and "The Way of Patience."

Rambles Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

PORTER EMERSON BROWNE, author of "Joan of Plattsburg," spoke most entertainingly at the luncheon served at the expense of Goldwyn as the aftermath of a private showing of the new war-without-battle feature on the screen of the Stanley theater on a recent morning. When representatives of the trade press and Harriett Underhill had finished off the ice cream, Mr. Browne was introduced by Fred B. Warren, head of Goldwyn's educational department.

The founder of "The Vigilantes" declared that propaganda to be effective must be subtle, offering "the sugar coated pill" as his expression of the best approach to a moving influence of public opinion. It was maintained by Mr. Browne that the public would not accept propaganda or other useful information unless it were offered under the guise of entertainment in some form—either a spoken, written, or acted story carrying the subtle "pill" beneath the sugar coat.

There. That ought to be considered reciprocity rendered in appreciation of the Rambler's "plate" at the luncheon. So, now we may proceed to distribute our own "sugar coated pills" and propaganda. The St. Paul Pioneer Press mentions one phase of propaganda that boosts a pill all must swallow without coating:

"While 'I Believe' is said to be neither religious nor irreligious the action of the drama thrills the spectators into a keen realization of the existence of life beyond the grave."

Here's another propaganda pill without coating especially for manufacturers of motion pictures to swallow. We quote from the Harrisburg (Pa.) Telegraph:

"Of 157 moving picture shows in Harrisburg witnessed by a committee of the Ministerial Association forty-five were found good; sixty bad, one very bad, eight good and bad, forty-three indifferent.

"In twenty-seven the clergymen found immorality, marital infidelity, free love, cheap sentimentalism, improper relations with other men's wives.

"In thirty-five were one or more suicides or murders; twenty-five showed intemperate drinking and drunkenness; twenty-five exhibited robbery or theft; fourteen showed gambling; eleven showed low resorts or habitues of the lower world; thirteen showed kidnapping or blackmail; forty-one showed gun-play.

"The committee reports that the 'educational plane is very low'; that the 'predominating tendency of the plays seen was, on the whole, for evil, decidedly; ruinous to the morals of children, and that the cleaning up of moving picture shows is the most important social work that can now be accomplished'."

Here is a sweetly coated pill advancing propaganda for better scenarios. We quote the esteemed Motion Picture News:

"A report current that Peter Milne is to sever his connection with Motion Picture News to accept a position in the scenario department of a producing organization is denied by Mr. Milne."

Mr. Milne's best girl recently slipped a pill from which the coating had been washed by the red ink at Little Hungary when a sailor attracted the young lady's displeasure by upsetting the only glass of water in the place all over her knitting.

"Do you know," said the girl to the sailor, "I believe you joined the navy to get out of going into the army."

The Pleiades Club held their final banquet at the Biltmore, and the season was closed in a blaze of glory. This club is the oldest dining club in New York, and, while entertainment is usually the order of the day, it does not take precedence over patriotic matters.

The big thing of the night came when a de luxe copy of the Year Book was raffled off. This was won by club member George W. Bowesman, who promptly turned it back to the club to be resold for Liberty Bonds, each bid to constitute a purchase, the bigest bidder to possess the book.

Amelia Bingham was the auctioneer, and in ten minutes the book was knocked down, and $27,700 had been subscribed. The bidders were Henry Evans, $10,000; Pat A. Powers, $7,000; Judge Charles F. Mexican's Meatless Marathon.

Felix Redondo, a Mexican, disappeared from Universal City in the recent filming of a scene for "The Lion's Claws," a serial in which Marie Walcamp is the star. Harry Harvey, director of the photodrama, ordered Felix to lead a lion into the arena for a jungle scene in which Miss Walcamp is pursued by the enfuriated beast.

Felix led by about six inches.

As if the winding jungle trail was a cinder track, Felix did a mile in nothing flat. The lion quit after a round or two, either to stock up on wind or because Felix didn't look like a good meal at close-up.

Working up to a long, vigorous stride, Felix loped off down the road.

"Be here at 8 o'clock to-morrow!" Harvey megaphoned after him.

"No savy," shouted Felix.

There is a scene in the new picture wherein Monte has his face plastered with cheese. "I'll admit it is good comedy," said Monte, "but Miss Dana missed my nose the first time, and the director called for a retake. The second time she smeared my left ear. After four trials she had my features completely fromaged, as it were; but I'll say that four retakes is rather rubbing it in—and besides, cheese never was my roque-forte."

Bob Doman on the Seat of War.

Paul Gulick, manager of Universal's publicity department, permits The Rambler to print the following interesting letter from Bob Doman who formerly worked with Paul at 1600 Broadway:

Paris, April 8, 1918.

Dear Paul:—

I started to drop a post-card to you yesterday but decided to make it a letter to-day. I quit the Herald about Thanksgiving time as Bennett, although liberal in promising to make a star out of me and full of veiled allusions to my future, did not come across with the old mazuma. Besides things are high here now anyway. So over to the Army Edition of the Chicago Tribune for six weeks at my old salary with Universal and then hitherwards to the International News Service at a very liberal jump. I am now thinking of getting married so if you know any likely girls in New York who want to come over put me on their trail. (Line forms at the right.—Ed.)

Well, Paul, it's air raids and the cellar for me about twice a week nowadays and in the daytime the long-distance Rubber Joe which shoots 'em over from 74 miles off ever so often. Am sticking close to the north side of the street and have learned how to fall flat every time I hear a suspicious sizzle in the air. Easter Sunday one fell a block away from me and, having my stereoscopic F 4.5—two lens—camera with me, I took a stereo of the fleeing crowd. Immediately pinched by gendarmes, followed by a crowd of 200 howling for my blood as German spy and taken to police station where I was promptly released upon showing my papers.

Bombs have fallen near my hotel, perilously near. One splashed two poor devils all over the white wall of a bank nearby. Visited the church where on Good Friday seventy-five were killed outright and twenty more later died from wounds. German shell. Terrible sight. Blood and crushed bodies everywhere. Shell hit pillar, bringing down roof. Our hotel cellar is deep and we have pickaxes and shovels to dig ourselves out with. Two story cellar built 150 years ago with a refrigerating room below both levels. Cold as an igloo but safe. Air bombs go through five story building and leave debris for blocks around but Rubber Joe shells only damage two or three upper floors. Mail will reach me addressed as below.

Lest They Appear Upon the Screen?

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

Big Clean-Up by Astra Stock Company.

Louis J. Gasnier, head of Astra, who is superintending the making of the new Pathe serial, "Hands Up," has changed his mind about the resemblance between a horse undressed and ready to go in swimming and a horse all dressed up and ready for a parade. In preparing for the serial he ordered James Horne, who is directing "Hands Up," to get a dozen or two white horses—to buy them.

Mr. Horne sent out his scouts and had them round up a bunch of real white horses, alive and kicking and everything. The horses were driven to the lot, and they were a pretty frowsy looking lot, most of them rough-coated, and all more or less soiled and shop-worn in appearance.

Gasnier was discouraged. "They are a fine looking bunch of dogs," he muttered wearily.

The next day he spied a cowman riding down the main stem of Hollywood astride a beautiful white horse; a horse whose coat was smooth and sleek.

Garnier pointed out this specimen to Horne.

"Why don't you dig up a real white horse once in a while; one like that?" He approached the rider who had drawn up.

"Where did you get that horse?" he demanded.

The cowboy leaned over.

"This belongs to Astra Film Company," he said, "we got fourteen more just like him."

"Gee," sighed Gasnier, "ain't it too bad now that you can't work a change like that with just a cake of Ivory soap and a pair of clippers in some actors I know about?"

In the corner stood the dismantled remains of a rural setting. Mr. Burr, realizing the value of the widely-advertised aggregation, will not change its name. As his argument he points to the Barnum & Bailey Circus.

"Both Mr. Barnum and Mr. Bailey are dead," said Mr. Burr, when interviewed, "but the name is still used. The same value applies to Louis Loeb's Trained Turtles. It would be foolish to loose this great prestige. By this I do not wish to intimate that Mr. Loeb is dead—far from it. However, just because I have taken over the management of these wonderful turtles is no reason why we should discontinue the name under which they became famous.

"Mike, the turtle which walks backwards to keep the dust out of its eyes; Jazbo, the turtle that climbs a three-foot curly rope; Ignatz, the turtle that is half parrot and half turtle—all these are still with the show and many other new members of the clan, including Mohunk, the turtle that swam all the way from Los Angeles to New York—in the wash basin of a Pullman. The show will be bigger, more fascinating, more startling, more elaborate and more magnificent than ever. I expect to have the entire outfit under canvas and suspicion in the near future. The turtles are now waking up for the season at Turtle Bay. This is no shell game—but a real treat, value received for money spent. Further announcements later."

Ruling Passion Strong in Pictures.

Nat Strong, Universal publicist, thought this one up:

Rupert Julian, directing "The Shadow Man," selected a genuine bell-hop to support Ruth Clifford and Kenneth Harlan. In one of the scenes our handsome laddie is ordered to execute a low and profound bow to Mr. Harlan, who slips a coin into his hand. The bow was rather short and snappy.

"How much did you give him?" Mr. Julian asked when he failed to understand the curt nod instead of the salaam he had ordered.

"One dime," Mr. Harlan answered.

"Try four bits," suggested Mr. Julian in a whisper.

It worked splendidly—even too much so.

"Better cut to a quarter," Mr. Julian decided.

With that rare coin his nibs was persuaded to make a satisfactory bow.

The Old Flag Never Touched the Ground.

Jack Cohn, manager of Universal's weekly news department, is paying the hospital bill for one of his cameramen because that individual didn't know it was dangerous to haul down an American flag and run up the German flag in place of the Stars and Stripes. A few days ago Jewel Productions decided to ship several prints of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" to England for presentation. The ending of the picture had to be changed a little and one of Cohn's cameramen was borrowed to take a few feet of new negative.

In the American version at the end of the picture the German flag is hauled down and the American flag, the Union Jack and the Tri-Color of France are hauled to the masthead in the order named. For the English version it was decided to change the order, giving the British flag the top of the pole with the Stars and Stripes next and the Tri-Color third.

The cameraman went to the parade ground at Central Park with his camera and the two flags of the Allies and the one of the Hun. First he had to haul down the Stars and Stripes in order to get the German flag to the top of the pole preparatory to hauling it down. The Hun emblem never reached the top. Before it was half way up something very solid in the shape of a fist landed flush on the cameraman's jaw.

Mrs. Justin Fair, wife of the ex-dramatic cricket of Newark, who came to New York to be a special writer in Pathe's publicity department, is lining all friend husband's pockets with bed-ticking.

Reason:

Justin has discovered that in order to be prepared for emergencies in the great city he must have a stock of nickels and two-bit pieces always on hand.

He has become so fascinated by the Automats that he recklessly orders three times as much as he can eat at the noon hour to enjoy the thrill of the so-to-speak comestibles dropping out of the chute.

The two-bit pieces he keeps handy for the slot gas-meter in his apartment.

Riffling a Stripped Deck.

There has been recently considerable shifting among the journalistic aces in our set. Wid's determination to start a daily paper drew Lynd Denig from the Dramatic Mirror's editorial chair to slip into a like berth with Wid's. Freddie Schader shifted over from Variety to the film daily. Louis Reid succeeds Mr. Denig at the Mirror. Jake Gerhardt has gone from the Mirror to General Film Co., where his experience and skill should register one hundred per cent.

Incidentally rumor has been coupling the name of Merritt Crawford with the editorial management of one of the two film-trade weeklies published in Chicago.

He Knows All About Cherry Trees.

Near his home in Hollywood a few days ago Sessue Hayakawa found half a dozen small boys shouting at the top of their voices as they marched around a mound of earth at the corner of a vacant lot.

"What are you playing, boys?" asked the actor.

"We've been playing war," answered one of the youngsters. "We're the Allies, and we've licked the Kaiser!"

"And what has become of the Kaiser?" queried Hayakawa, looking around for the vanquished enemy.

"Oh, there he is—he's under that pile of dirt," said the Allies' spokesman, pointing to the mound, "he's a dead one."

Hayakawa approached the mound and found the "Kaiser" coming up for air. As the actor started away he remarked to a companion:

"Young America has taken the lesson of George Washington's hatchet very seriously."

The Goldwyn studios now and then give birth to a new word. And it is not forgotten in the stress of work. Mary Garden called her screen friends the "cinemese." The word is used now by many people outside the studio. And there is still another, this time an adjective. It is "mabelescent," and describes anything peculiarly like Mabel Normand, which means merry and madcappish, and warmhearted and tender.—Goldwyn Publicity.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

The Bride's Awakening" Leads Universal for May 20

THE BRIDE'S AWAKENING," a Mae Murray special attraction in six reels, heads the list of Universal releases for the week of May 20. It is a preachment in favor of the universal publishing of marriage bans, a warning to mothers and young women against entering matrimony without first carefully investigating the past of the prospective bridegroom. The picture proves that many trifling incidents in pre-married life may lead to grave consequences unless they are investigated.

Reports from Universal are to the effect that the picture not only will create a tremendous sensation throughout the country, but that it is to be used by the prelates of the Protestant Episcopal church as an argument to force the publishing of marriage bans from the pulpit for four successive weeks before any marriage ceremony is performed by an Episcopal clergyman. This follows the plan now in use by the Catholic church.

The fifth episode of the ten-reel Boy Scout serial also appears to be a headliner scheduled for release during the week. Requests for the booking of this serial are being received from schools, churches, and organizations throughout the country. Up to the present Universal has refused to make any bookings outside of the regular moving picture theaters, feeling that the exhibitors should have the first call for the presentation of the picture. So great is the demand for the serial that the company already has made arrangements to make another serial in which members of the Boy Scouts will be the actors. In the present serial Sir Baden-Powell, the noted Englishman, who was responsible for the Boy Scout movement, takes prominent part.

"The One Horse Show," a Star comedy enacted by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, which is something entirely different from the ordinary slapstick comedy, leads the comedy offerings for the week.

The Nestor offering for the week features Carter De Haven in "The Bath House Scandal." It consists of a remarkable series of incidents built around a summer trip to the beach by a young man with rather an ancient female escort.

Kathleen O'Conner and Rube Miller, supported by the L-Ko beauty chorus, disport through 2,000 feet of film in "Who's Zoo." In this comedy the members of the L-Ko beauty squad are given every opportunity to do their best work following the orders of President Carl Laemmle, of Universal, that a female Charlie Chaplin must be developed.

Two Universal serials are still running. Eddie Polo goes through "Running Wild" (the sixteenth episode of "The Bull's Eye"), which has but two more episodes to run.

Marie Walcamp will appear in the eighth episode of "The Lion's Claws." The action is located in the wilds of India, and gradually works toward Jerusalem, with the British Expeditionary Forces.

The offerings of the week end with the three split reels consisting of the Universal Animated Weekly, the Universal Screen Magazine, and the Universal Current Events.

Bud Duncan Signs with National.

All doubts as to the length of "Bud" Duncan's stay in the Clover comedies now being produced at Denver by the National Film Corporation have been set at rest by the announcement made by O. D. Woodward, president, that the diminutive comedian would be seen in these comedies for many months to come. Duncan has signed a long-term contract and will be featured with "Dot" Farley and "Kewpie" Morgan in a series of weekly one-reel releases. "Bud's" genius for funmaking is being given free rein, and the comedian is appearing in a wide variety of roles. His first appearance on the screen since the dissolution of the famous "Ham and Bud" team was made recently in "The Wooing of Coffee-Cake Kate." Other comedies in the new series now ready are "Rip Roaring Rivals," "He Couldn't Fool His Wife," "By Heck, I'll Save Her," and "The Paper Hanger's Revenge."

Agnes Ayres in O. Henry Role.

Agnes Ayres, the attractive star in a number of the most successful four-reel O. Henry pictures, makes her reappearance in an O. Henry role this week in "The Purple Dress," a diverting and appealing story of New York department store life. Two other O. Henry players are featured with her in the persons of Evart Overton and Adele De Gardes. Another favorite in the cast is Bernard Siegel, character actor.

"The Purple Dress" is a most fascinating story, woven about department store life, a popular topic of O. Henry's. The friendly rivalry of the shop girls for the hand and heart of the handsome floorwalker is cleverly depicted by the famous writer.

Lois Weber at Work on Drama.

Lois Weber has started production at her Hollywood studios on "The Forbidden Box," a forceful photodrama of the uncharted seas of life written by E. V. Darling. It is the story of a modern Pandora, a part which Mildred Harris, whose Sydney Page in "The Doctor and the Woman" will long be remembered, should portray with rare artistry.

Harry Woodward, formerly with Griffith productions, will have the masculine lead; Kate Toncray, of the Lasky forces, has been engaged for an important part, while Priscilla Dean, whose Universal special production, "The Two-Soul Woman," is creating a furore, has been borrowed from Universal City for this one Lois Weber feature.

What Fox Players Are Doing East and West

THREE pictures were finished at the Fox eastern studios and one in the western studios last week. Miss June Caprice completed "Blue-Eyed Mary," Peggy Hyland, "Peg of the Pirates," and Miss Pearson wound up "The Firebrand." In the west Tom Mix ended his work in the interesting play of western life, "Ace High."

George Walsh, who recently finished "Brave and Bold" under the direction of Carl Harbaugh, has begun a new one called "The Sleep Walker," under a new Fox director, Bertram George. Miss Hyland will have Carl Harbaugh as her director in a new play by E. Lloyd Sheldon, called "Other Men's Daughters."

Jane and Katherine Lee are hard at work at the Biograph studio under Kenean Buell.

June Caprice, who went home to Boston for a few days vacation after completing "Blue-Eyed Mary," will begin work soon in "Miss Innocence."

William Farnum has begun the making of Zane Grey's "Riders of the Purple Sage." This picture will be directed by Frank Lloyd. The photoplay will have some beautiful scenes from the old cliff dwelling regions of Arizona and Utah.

Henry Lehrman is making a Sunshine comedy himself and is supervising the direction of another.

Mob Scenes in Fox's "The Caillaux Case" Are Real

ONE of the most striking features of "The Caillaux Case," the William Fox film expose of the pro-German activities of Bolo Pasha and Joseph and Mme. Caillaux in France and America, is the thrilling realism of the mob scenes. It is declared by the Fox management that never in the history of the organization has a mob become so violent in its action and gone so completely beyond control as in the scenes where Mme. Caillaux is acquitted of the murder of Gaston Calmette and later dragged through the streets of Paris.

As a result of this mob violence several people were seriously injured. Two, a man and woman, were knocked unconscious; another man's head was badly cut by a flying missile, and Madlaine Traverse, who played the leading feminine role, was so roughly handled by the rioters that she has since been under the care of a physician. In addition, the mob wrecked part of the sets. Order was restored only when Director Richard Stanton and his assistants plunged into the fray and by sheer force compelled the extras to subside from their violent demonstration.

True to the history of the famous trial of Mme. Caillaux in Paris Mr. Stanton had arranged for a demonstration of the populace immediately following her acquittal. He urged the crowd to be realistic. But this was before the final scene of the trial had been enacted and before the spectators had been roused to a high pitch of excitement by the closing action. Besides, many of the extras were French and had pronounced opinions on the Caillaux affair. They hardly awaited the signal to begin a wild demonstration. This demonstration, increasing with its own momentum, soon became a riot.

The courtroom became a bedlam of wild, shouting, maddened figures, completely oblivious of the fact that they were acting before a camera, and intent only on inflicting damage on the other side in a free-for-all fight. Chairs, books, court paraphernalia were hurled through the air. These missiles failing, even the court benches and pieces of the railing were used by the fiercely battling men and women. Meanwhile, the cameraman recorded on the film every detail of the violent conflict.

The same realism was evident in the street scene, where the mob finally gets in its clutches Mme. Caillaux, the assassin of the editor of Figaro. Remembering what had taken place in the courtroom, Director Stanton this time had warned the mob to control themselves. Miss Traverse, fearing the consequences, had tied on her clothing and had provided herself with a special bodyguard which was to protect her if the attacks became too violent. But it was all in vain. So vividly had she portrayed the heartless villainy of the ambitious adventuress that the courtroom violence was repeated in all its intensity.

The crowd seized her, pummeled her, dragged her over the stones, tore her clothing. Her pleas for mercy fell on deaf ears. Not until she was completely exhausted and had sunk to the ground pressing to her lips the Tricolor of France, did the mob leave her. Then, covered with scratches and bruises, she was able to walk to her dressing room only with the aid of Director Stanton and her maid.

The accompanying photograph shows a portrait (insert) of Miss Traverse just before the trial scene was taken and again when the mobs had dispersed after dragging her through the streets. The ordeal is plainly written on the features of the drawn, haggard, broken woman who only a few hours before was playing the beautiful wife of the "evil genius of France."

Kaj Gynt in Metro Subject.

Kaj Gynt, the Swedish actress, who supported Ethel Barrymore in "The Eternal Mother," returns to Metro in the All-Star production of Edith Wharton's novel, "The House of Mirth," which is being directed by Albert Capellani. Miss Gynt plays two roles, the slave girl in the Arabian slave market scenes, and in a double exposure she portrays True Womanhood. In the latter she is shown in miniature standing on one side of an alchemist's scales. Miss Gynt is well known on the Swedish stage and screen. She is a typical outdoor girl of the far North and excels in all sports.

Much interest is being excited by the production of "The House of Mirth." It bids fair to be a big success.

Toto Completing "Fire the Cook."

Toto, comedian of New York Hippodrome fame, has completed "Fire the Cook," which is set for release by Pathe on June 23. Clarine Seymour, the comedienne, again acts as a foil for Toto in this comedy, which will follow "The Junkman," a wholly original characterization to be released May 26.

Hearst-Pathe Has Views from France.

The decoration of American troops for bravery under fire is shown in the current release of the Hearst-Pathe News No. 35. The United States soldiers are shown lined up in full equipment, behind the battle lines as a French army official pins upon the breast of each a medal of honor and shakes his hand in truly democratic style.

The issue includes new pictures of General Foch, General Petain, General Pershing and President Wilson.

Bessie Barriscale Visits Paralta's New York Office

Bessie Barriscale, the Paralta star, is now in New York City after a hurried trip East to visit her sister, who is ill. Miss Barriscale left Los Angeles immediately upon the completion of "Patriotism," which she finished under the direction of Raymond B. West.

While visiting Paralta's New York offices Miss Barriscale showed enthusiasm over the outlook of the studios and confided that her coming productions are in her opinion the finest screen offerings in which she has appeared. "'Patriotism,' said Miss Barriscale, "is a story of the war, but there are no scenes of conflict in the picture, which is the story of a little Scotch girl who gives her all for the cause of liberty and democracy. 'Maid o' the Storm,' which I made just prior to 'Patriotism,' I predict will be my most popular picture. It is one of those sweet stories which have always won favor in the hearts of the American public, and I am anxiously waiting to receive the verdict of the public on it."

Howard Hickman, who will direct Miss Barriscale's next production, is engaged at the studios preparing the scenes for the next Paralta-Barriscale play, "The Rainbow," by William Parker. Miss Barriscale expects to return to the West within a few days.

Diamond Completes First Comedy.

"Way Up in Society" is announced as the first Diamond production. It has been finished at the New Orleans studios of the Diamond Film Company, R. M. Chisholm, president, according to word which has reached General Film Company, and will soon be ready for release.

"Impossible Susan" for Miss Fisher.

Margarita Fisher has completed "A Square Deal," and is now at work on an original story by Joseph Franklin Poland entitled "Impossible Susan." She has a strong cast. Among them Jack Mower, Lloyd Hughes, Heyward Mack, L. M. Wells, and Anne Schaefer.

Metro Players Shift from Coast to Coast

MAXWELL KARGER and George D. Baker, respectively production managers of Metro's East and West coast studios, have come to an agreement in the transferring of two of Metro's popular stars, to the great satisfaction of the stars themselves. Viola Dana has just returned from a seven months' sojourn on the Pacific coast, and will make further productions in the Eastern location, and May Allison will change places with Miss Dana, going to California as soon as she has completed the third in her series of splendid productions as an individual star.

Miss Allison's first picture on the Pacific coast will be "The Finding of Mary," a feature photodrama written by Hale Hamilton, her leading man in the forthcoming release, "The Winning of Beatrice." It is a mystery story of strong dramatic power. Harry Franklin will probably go West to direct.

Viola Dana has employed her time well in California, producing "The Winding Trail," "Breakers Ahead," "Riders of the Night," "Weaver of Dreams," and "The Only Road." John H. Collins directed her in all of these with the exception of "Breakers Ahead," which Charles J. Brabin directed, and "The Only Road," with Frank Reicher. Miss Dana's first production in the New York studio following her return will be "Opportunity," which has been adapted from a magazine story by Edgar Franklyn.

Russian Art Film Leads Pathe for Week of May 12

AN intensely dramatic Russian Art film, "The Dagger Woman"; the tenth episode of "The House of Hate," Part 1 of the gripping "Britain's Bulwarks" series of war pictures, another Harold Lloyd comedy, and an animal educational feature lead Pathe's program for the week of May 12.

"The Dagger Woman" is an exciting drama in which Ivan Mozukin and Olga Zovska, of the famous Moscow theater, are screened in the principal roles.

"Double-Crossed" is the title of the tenth "House of Hate" episode featuring Pearl White and Antonio Moreno. The cast in this episode also includes Helene Chadwick, one of the most photographed young women in America, who has appeared in several successful Pathe features.

The splendid workmanship of the women munitioners of England and British cavalry at the front are shown in Part 1 of the "Britain's Bulwarks" series. All of the scenes were made by official photographers of the British Government who were accorded privileges for obtaining subjects which are forbidden to everyone else.

"The Non-Stop Kid" is the title of Harold Lloyd's comedy in which a score of convulsing laughs are woven about the famous comedian, Bebe Daniels, his leading woman, and the supporting funmakers. "The Non-Stop Kid" has a strange series of adventures at the home of the "Wiggle" family.

The educational offering is "Strange Animals from Many Climes." It is more interesting and instructive than a visit to the zoo. Strange birds, rare animals, and prize ponies are among the specimens shown.

Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 40 and 41 are released on this program.

New Ebony Comedy Announced.

L. J. Pollard, president and general manager of the Ebony Film Corporation, Chicago, has announced the latest Ebony comedy, written by Scenario Editor Bob Horner from a story by Ralph R. Weddell, and directed by Charles N. David. The picture will be "The Bully." Many new comedies are in the making. Director Ralph G. Phillips is busy "shooting" scenes of his new company in a slam-bang of a thousand feet of fun. This comedy is "Mercy! the Mummy Mumbled."

Director David continues to direct Sam Robinson, Yvonne Junior and Samuel Jacks, while Director Phillips has taken charge of the newly engaged company of comedians. Production Manager A. B. Heath, who recently joined the Ebony organization, is an experienced executive and director of ideas. "No matter how good the director, he cannot make a good picture from a poor story," said Mr. Heath in discussing the new comedies produced under his supervision and to be released on the General Film program. "Hence, the working out of suitable comedy ideas as well as comedy action is necessary."

Finley Again as O'Garry.

"O'Garry Rides Alone," the second of the O'Garry stories produced by Ned Finley in connection with his Blue Ridge dramas, is released by General Film. This is another story of the Northwest Mounted Police trooper in which the producer-star appears in his favorite role. His leading woman is Marion Henry. The story abounds in fast action and has an attractive human touch which keeps interest keyed to a high pitch.

The fifth Blue Ridge drama scheduled for release is "The Man from Nowhere." Reports from Bat Cave, where the Finley company is at work, indicate that excellent progress is being made.

Scene from "Her Decision" (Triangle).

"Her Decision" and "Wolves of Border" Lead Triangle

A MARRIAGE drama, "Her Decision," heads the Triangle May 12 program, offering J. Barney Sherry and Gloria Swanson in the leading roles. It is a story of sisterly sacrifice. The heroine enters into a loveless marriage to keep the secret of a sister's disgrace. She loves a man without character and marries a man with character, who loves her. As a wife she falls in love with her husband.

Jack Conway directed the subject, which offers Gloria Swanson, former Keystone comedienne, in her second dramatic role. J. Barney Sherry is the other featured player. Darrell Foss, who had the leading role in the recent Triangle production, "Her American Husband," is Bobbie Warner. Ann Kroman is Inah Dunbar.

"Wolves of the Border," with Roy Stewart, is the second release of the week of the 12th. Alvin J. Neitz, who has scenarioized several recent Stewart productions, wrote the play. The Mexican-United States frontier is the scene of the story, which depicts the conditions in that region as they exist today. Roy Stewart is George Merritt. Jack Curtis has a "heavy" role as the foreman of the ranch. Josie Sedgwick is Ruth. Louis Durham appears as General Mardones, and Frank MacQuarrie as Joe Warner. Curley Baldwin is also in the cast. Cliff Smith directed and Steve Rounds photographed.

The concluding release of the week of the 12th is a two-reel Keystone comedy, "Newspaper Clippings." Francis McDonald, Triangle dramatic player who was recently seen in the mystery story, "The Hand at the Window," is a featured player in this production. Claire Anderson, former comedienne who has appeared in several new Triangle feature plays, has the leading role.

Harold Lloyd Going Fast.

Harold Lloyd, the Pathe-Rolin comedian, is hitting on all six cylinders in the Los Angeles comedy factory where he turns out laugh-getters with Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard. "Fireman Save My Child" will be released by Pathe on May 26, and "The City Slicker" on June 2.

In "Fireman Save My Child" the famous comedian invades a fireman's ball, livens things up generally and becomes assistant fire chief. The gay festivities are interrupted by the fire gong. "The City Slicker' deals with the adventures of Lloyd as a life-inspirer in a rube hotel.

Lloyd is speeding along with "Kicked Out" May 5, "The Non-Stop Kid" May 12, and "Two Gun Gussie" May 26.

Miss Kennedy Not Omitting Screen.

Just how theatrical rumors are originated and spread is always a matter for bewilderment. Madge Kennedy, who won wide popularity as a Goldwyn Pictures star, is the latest victim of a baseless rumor. Despite report, Miss Kennedy is not to quit the screen next fall to become once more a dramatic star or to go under the management of David Belasco. This announcement comes jointly from Miss Kennedy and Goldwyn.

Though she has great admiration for Mr. Belasco and his genius, Miss Kennedy has never met this great figure in the American theater.

Minter, Fisher and Russell Slated for May Mutuals

FEATURE productions now in course of preparation at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., will furnish pictures starring Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fisher, and William Russell for Mutual's May schedule.

Mary Miles Minter's next picture is "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor," a picturization of a brilliant little story by Josephine Dodge Bacon. It chronicles the amusing and interesting adventures of a young American girl returned after living abroad who cannot find her wealthy relatives, and to be self-supporting takes charge of the home of a fashionable American woman who is never at home in the daytime, and who never sees her thoroughly competent charwoman.

The rich woman's brother runs across Rosy, and falls in love with her. There is scandal galore until Rosy's identity is discovered, and she turns out to have better social standing and more money than her suitor.

Margarita Fisher, the "Flapper" ingenue, has finished "A Square Deal," and is resting up before beginning her next, which will be "Impossible Susan."

The next offering of William Russell will be "Up Romance Road," which was written especially for Mr. Russell by Stephen Fox. The story is an original comedy-drama of high merit, and the plot is a corker. It keeps Russell on the jump from beginning to end.

Mr. Fox also wrote "The Frameup," "High Play," and "Shackles of Truth," all well known Russell successes.

Select Names Three Productions for Release in May

SELECT announces three productions for release during May. These pictures are "The Lesson," with Constance Talmadge; "De Luxe Annie," with Norma Talmadge, and "The Ordeal of Rosetta," with Alice Brady. These three pictures, together with Clara Kimball Young's latest Select, "The Reason Why," which was ready for distribution the last day of April, will furnish the new Select productions during the coming thirty days.

"The Lesson," in which Lewis J. Selznick presents Constance Talmadge, is from an original story by Virginia Terhune Van De Water, with deep-searching analysis of marital woes, and it shows on the screen in dramatic form the reason why many spirited women feel compelled to leave their husbands and carve a career for themselves.

Constance Talmadge as a truly married woman is the novelty which this picture presents. In "Scandal," it will be remembered, the heroine pretends to be married, but actually is single. Keeping "Scandal" in mind, it may be said that "The Lesson" presents Constance Talmadge with scenes of greater dramatic tenseness than those she has had in any release since "Scandal." These scenes are interspersed among many incidents of laugh-provoking nature. Charles Giblyn directed. The cast includes Tom Moore, Walter Hiers, Herbert Heyes and Dorothy Green.

Norma Talmadge, in "De Luxe Annie," reaches the picture fans of the country during the same theatrical season that the celebrated stage play of the same name by Edward Clark is still being shown on tour in theaters of the prominent cities. In the supporting cast are Eugene O'Brien, Frank Mills, Edward Davis and Edna Hunter. Paul West prepared the scenario. Roland West directed.

"De Luxe Annie" is of that clever type of drama which, taking the audience partly into its confidence at the start, later thrills it with a dramatic surprise as the story takes an unusual and unlooked for turn.

In "The Ordeal of Rosetta" Alice Brady provides clever photodrama in which the star is seen in dual characterizations. Indeed, Miss Brady not only plays the roles of two sisters, but also the dream counterpart of one and the avenging spirit of the other, so that in this picture the Select star may be said to play four parts. It is an original story from the pen of Edmund Goulding. It relates the fortunes of a girl of gentle breeding who, born in Italy, is brought to New York by her father after an earthquake has destroyed her Sicilian home and presumably killed her sister.

Clever work on the part of Emile Chautard, who directed the photoplay, coupled with some exquisite bits of photography by Jacques Bizuel, shows Miss Brady in some of the comeliest pictures she has ever presented on the screen.

Universal Comedies for Soldiers.

Comedies of all kinds are in demand for the soldiers in the cantonments, according to information received at the home office of the Universal. As a result President Laemmle has issued instructions that every available print of L-Ko, Nestor, and Star comedies, the three brands released through Universal, be placed at the disposal of the cantonment theaters.

Owing to the fact that President Laemmle has issued orders that all prints not working be shipped to the cantonment theaters, exhibitors who leave their comedy booking until the last moment are very liable to be disappointed in failing to obtain the picture they want.

"The Paper Hanger's Revenge" (Clover).

The Clover Comedy Trio, "Bud Duncan, "Dot" Farley and "Kewpie" Morgan, present a riot of fun in "The Paper Hanger's Revenge," the fifth of the series released by General Film. "Dot" Farley does some of her best work in this subject.

What's on the Fire at Famous-Lasky Studios

CECIL B. DE MILLE has begun work at the Hollywood studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on "We Can't Have Everything," a new picture from a novel by Rupert Hughes, the scenario by William C. De Mille.

Vivian Martin soon will begin work on a production at the Morosco studios for Paramount. The picture will deal with the experiences of a young girl of the social set. James Young probably will direct the picture.

Wallace Reid, supported by Ann Little, having completed "The Firefly of France," is to begin work next week upon a picture to be directed by Donald Crisp. Probably this will be "Less Than Kin."

Elsie Ferguson has departed for Montana with Marshall Neilan, who will direct her next picture. Many of the scenes will be taken in Yellowstone Park, through special arrangements made with the Government, and a ranch has been engaged near Browning, Mont., with the use of the cowboys, horses and stock. "Heart of the Wilds," as the name would indicate, is a stirring story of frontier life, teeming with sensational incidents, in which United States soldiers play an important part.

The title of the picture Pauline Frederick is now working on is "Her Final Reckoning," adapted from "Prince Zilah," the play written by Jules Claretie. Emile Chautard is directing.

Edward Jose is nearing the completion of "Gismonda," the big Paramount spectacle starring Lina Cavalieri. The main street of Athens in the year 1500 has been reproduced on the grounds of the Fort Lee studio and the various merchants display signs over their doors in Greek.

Owing to the fact that Ince productions for Paramount are well ahead of schedule the plan has been adopted at the western studio of the organization to alternate Ray and Dalton pictures for the time being and later go back to a parallel arrangement. Mr. Ray is busy with "A Nine o'Clock Town."

Enid Bennett does not come in on this plan, as she is merely up to schedule. Having just completed "The Desert Wooing" under Jerome Storm, she is already at work on a film as yet nameless having to do with the experiences of a little girl, assistant to the wardrobe mistress of a big musical comedy show. C. Gardner Sullivan wrote the story.

Pathe Scenic Has Views of Russia.

Timely and beautiful scenes "In Southernmost Russia" are shown in a Pathe scenic of that title to be released May 26. The picture contains remarkable scenes from the Crimean peninsula with numerous glimpses of the port of Sebastopol, one of the best harbors in the Black Sea.

Ruth Roland and George Chesebro Stars of "Hands Up"

RUTH ROLAND, star of many successful serial and feature productions, has been engaged to play the leading feminine part, and George Chesebro to play the hero in the new Pathe serial "Hands Up."

The talented and graceful brown-haired heroine has been on the stage and screen for seventeen years, although she is only twenty-three at the present time. She is known and is highly popular throughout the United States for her remarkable personality, ability and daring.

Miss Roland won high honors in the thrilling serials "Who Pays?" and "The Red Circle." She was co-starred with Frank Mayo in "The Price of Folly," and added to her laurels by her portrayal of the character of Margaret Warner in "The Neglected Wife," the Pathe serial from Mabel Urner's novels. Miss Roland also appeared in "Comrade John" with William Elliot and "A Matrimonial Martyr," two five-reel features.

In this serial, by Gilson Willetts, dealing with the superstitions, traditions and ancient rites of the Incas, Miss Roland will have unusual opportunities for demonstrating her exceptional qualities as a screen favorite.

"Hands Up" is to be produced for Pathe by Astra on the Pacific Coast. Louis J. Gasnier, president of Astra, is in Los Angeles with Director General George Fitzmaurice. In a statement last week Gilson Willetts, author of the story, gave some details as to the things Mr. Gasnier is doing to make this serial in a big way. "He is sparing no expense to have every detail just right," says Willetts. "He has ordered a large number of real Inca Indian costumes. He has bought white horses for the principal characters, a beautiful black horse for the Phantom Rider and a fine looking Pinto for Hands Up.

"In a very beautiful location up on the side of a hill he is building an Inca castle. It has a tower sixty feet high."

Two New Leading Men In Goldwyn's Pictures

TWO new leading men are making their appearance in Goldwyn productions. Clarence Oliver has the role opposite the star in Madge Kennedy's newest photodrama—the most serious, by the way, yet chosen for her. Mr. Oliver is identified with such successes as "Officer 666," written by Carlyle Moore, who now is Director Charles Miller's aid in the Madge Kennedy play.

Another new leading man is Rodrique La Roque, who is Mabel Normand's screen partner in her newest production. The irrepressible star and her tall support—he stands 6 feet 2—are guided by Clarence G. Badger. Mr. La Roque, though long known in photoplays, makes his first appearance in the East with the Goldwyn organization.

Other players now busy at the studio are Mabel Ballin, Maude Turner Gordon, and Jules Cowles.

"Mutt and Jeff" at the Front.

Capt. Bruce Bairnsfather is to have something of a rival on the western front, says the London Kinematograph. Bud Fisher, the famous cartoonist, who invented our amusing friends of the film—Mutt and Jeff—has enlisted in the United States army and will be stationed "somewhere in France." Mr. Fisher is reported to have reached an understanding with his army superiors, whereby he will be permitted to send his cartoons regularly from the front, and we may look forward with confidence to seeing on the screen comedies with such amusing possibilities as "How Mutt and Jeff Beat the Kaiser." Mr. Fisher has completed arrangements with William Fox whereby the Fox Film Corporation will take over the distribution of these animated cartoons, but the production will be under the same direction as it has been for the past two years. I can imagine Mutt and Jeff getting fun even out of the big offensive.

Clever Touches Mark Billie Rhodes Comedy

BILLIE RHODES does some clever bits of acting, and Cullen Landis and Lillian Hamilton, playing with her in Strand-Mutual comedies, help put over some extraordinarily funny situations in "Her Terrible Time," the Strand release on the Mutual schedule for May 14.

The story is one of those happy little farces, snappy and original, which have made the Mutual-Strands so popular, with a small touch of the risque, not enough to offend, but just sufficient to intensify the interest.

Billie as Mary gets caught in Jack's bedroom on his unexpected return from a business trip, and when Jack's family walks in he announces that they have been married. After they have extended their blessing, Jack and Mary leave via the window to find the nearest preacher that Jack's story may be made good.

Famous Players' "Uncle Tom's Cabin" Should Go Big

MARGUERITE CLARK'S next Paramount picture will be "Uncle Tom's Cabin," from the book by Harriet Beecher Stowe. The production is practically completed and will be scheduled for early release. On the speaking stage this play has probably been the most successful attraction in the history of American drama. Innumerable companies have toured the country for more than forty years.

The motion picture version has been produced on a stupendous scale, with great ensembles of people and a cast of capable players. No expense has been spared in securing reproductions of the localities mentioned in the book and the company has traveled thousands of miles in this connection.

The photoplay follows the ideas of the author rather than the various stage adaptations which have been made. J. Searle Darwley, who has directed many of Miss Clark's most successful pictures, is in charge of the production.

Among the principal players are J. W. Johnston, Florence Carpenter, Frank Losee, Phil Riley, Harry Lee, Walter Lewis, Augusta Anderson, Ruby Hoffman, Susanne Willis, Mrs. Priestley Morrison, Thomas Carnahan, Jr., and Jere Austin.

Mary Miles Minter Makes Flight.

Mary Miles Minter, the winsome star of the American Film Company, who did so much toward helping Santa Barbara raise its quota during the Second Liberty Loan campaign, again gave her services for the Third Liberty Loan drive that began on April 6, and was appointed a member of the campaign committee. The American Film Company contributed three elaborate and costly floats to the parade committee, one a reproduction of a war tank, one a section of a trench, and the third a war garden. While the parade was taking place Miss Minter flew over the parade in the new hydroplane "F-1" and distributed Liberty Bond literature.

Bara Pictures Popular Abroad.

Demand for Theda Bara pictures has stimulated William Fox's player to great efforts to meet the situation, especially in foreign countries, where the trade has been thrown into chaos by the almost total cessation of French and Italian productions. In focusing the demand for an American film star who can fill the public eye in South America, the Antipodes, and even in Asia many foreign exhibitors have concentrated on Theda Bara as the one best qualified to fill this international bill.

To meet these Asiatic audiences Miss Bara is reaching out across the Pacific in her next picture, the scenes of which are laid in the Philippines, the title of which is "Under the Yoke." The story is by George Scarborough, scenario by Adrian Johnson, and it is staged under the personal direction of J. Gordon Edwards.

Farnum Bluebird Coming May 20.

Franklyn Farnum is featured in the Bluebird production, "$5,000 Reward," which will be released on Monday, May 20. In this feature Farnum is supported by a large, evenly balanced cast, among the members of which are William Lloyd, J. Farrel MacDonald, Wharton Jones, Mark Fenton, Gloria Hope, Frank Brownlee, Lule Warrenton, and Grace McLean.

The picture is adapted from a story by Charles Wesley Sanders. It was prepared for the screen by F. McGrew Willis, and the picture was directed by Douglas Gerrard.

The story carries a warning against circumstantial evidence as conclusive proof of the guilt of the suspected person. As Dick Arlington, Farnum appears in the role of the only relative of a wealthy crabbed old skinflint. Arlington, who is a full-blooded youth, makes his home with his old uncle. They have constant quarrels over money. The boy in having his fling loves the bright lights. Whenever there is trouble he usually is in the midst of it, and has to take most of the blame whether guilty or not.

Arbuckle Shifts from Sunshine to Moonshine

THE Blue Ridge Mountains of Kentucky, with its moonshiners, feuds and revenue officers, is the locale of "Fatty" Arbuckle's latest comedy, which is a Paramount release of May 13. The story has to do with the illegal operations of moonshiners and their suppression by "Fatty" and his assistant, Buster Keaton, valiant revenue officers, brave and resourceful, but with a weakness for handsome women.

"Fatty" and Keaton are sent to the mountains to put a stop to the illegal moonshining activities of Al St. John and his dad, Charles Dudley, who lay claim to being the champion moonshiners and feudists of the Blue Ridge country.

The most amusing and exciting incidents in the picture are the scenes where "Fatty" outwits the cunning mountaineers and not only accomplishes the purpose which brought him to the mountains, but also wins the heart and hand of the fair Alice.

In the production of "Moonshine" Arbuckle has followed the broadest of burlesque lines with exaggerated melodrama. The picture was filmed in the San Gabriel canyon of California and picturesque backgrounds and light effects add to its attractiveness.

Captivating Role for Irene Castle.

Irene Castle has the captivating role of a girl with a will of her own in the new Pathe Play "The Mysterious Client," which is set for release May 19. The picture is important since it has the trio made famous in "Patria"—Irene Castle, Warner Oland and Milton Sills—and is a swift-moving mystery story with thrills and many twists.

Various amusing situations are included in the play, in some scenes of which Cesare Gravina, the Italian comedian, appears for the first time in this country in a comedy role.

Ebony Looking for Stories.

Bob Horner, scenario editor of the Ebony Film Corporation, Chicago, who has written the continuity of a long list of subjects for the screen and who is endeavoring to secure the very best stories from experienced writers, has purchased, since joining the Ebony script department, the following stories, all of which he prepared for the screen. They are "He Ran for Mayor," by Charles N. David; "The Bully," by Ralph R. Weddell; "Dat Minstrel Man," Blanche Walker; "One at a Time, Please," Dell Howard; "Mercy! the Mummy Mumbled," by Clarence A. Frambers. Mr. Horner is now preparing an original comedy entitled "A Reckless Rover," which one of the directors will begin "shooting" the first of the week.

"To those writers who have original ideas of scenarios," said Mr. Horner, "let them try us with a few submissions and see if we don't back up our word with a real honest-to-goodness check. Any author who has really funny stuff will find a real market with us. But we must have a combination of comedy idea and comedy action."

"Social Briars" Released May 13.

"Social Briars," Mary Miles Minter's latest American production, originally scheduled for release May 6, will be released May 13. The role which Miss Minter has in this romantic drama, that of an unsophisticated beauty who seeks fame as a singer in the big city, and after many heart-breaking experiences returns to find love and contentment in her native village, is one of the most fascinating characterizations this player has created.

The play was written and directed by Edward Sloman. Alan Forrest, who has supported Miss Minter in "A Bit of Jade," "Powers That Prey," and "Beauty and the Rogue"; George Periolat, the noted character actor; Anne Schaefer, Edmund Cobb, and Frank Whitson complete an exceptional cast.

Goldwyn Exhibitors Frame Interest Checks

SURPRISED at receipt of monthly checks as interest on their deposits many new Goldwyn contract customers throughout the country have failed to cash some of them, and instead are using the checks as framed mementoes on the walls of their offices.

Goldwyn Pictures and service have on many occasions prompted praise from exhibitors, and now it is Goldwyn's policy of paying interest on exhibitor deposits that is making every Goldwyn exhibitor a Goldwyn friend.

The fact that hundreds of Goldwyn exhibitors were using at least one of the interest checks for office decoration was brought to light when the home office comptroller discovered that scores of them had not passed through the bank. He notified the managers of the various Goldwyn branches throughout the country, and upon investigation they found that many exhibitors preferred to frame the checks as curios and as fitting mark of respect to one of the few large film distributing companies that pays interest on deposits.

Animated Shows Veteran Soldiers.

Fresh from the "Frontier of Freedom," fifty of Pershing's veterans are shown in the Universal Animated Weekly No. 22. The boys were selected from various sections of the American front in France to return to the United States to boom the Liberty Loan. They are depicted arriving in New York wearing their steel trench helmets and fully equipped. Cheering throngs greeted them and escorted them to the city hall, where Mayor Hylan presented them with the freedom of the city.

In addition to the fifty Yankee veterans, Animated Weekly No. 22 shows pictures of a company of French Alpine Chasseurs, known as the "Blue Devils." These men are the hard fighting mountain troops of the French Republic. They have been in scores of battles. Every one of them has been wounded at least once, some of them as many as eight times. All wear the Cross of War, several have three or four Crosses of War, while others have both the Croix de Guerre and the Military Medal. They were sent to the United States to aid the Liberty Loan.

Triangle Announces Title Changes.

Triangle announces the following changes in the release dates of the Keystone comedies:

"Mr. Miller's Bundles," scheduled for release May 19, will be released May 12 under the title of "Mr. Miller's Muddles Through." "Newspaper Clippings," scheduled for May 12, will be released May 19.

The title of "The Honor of Taro San," Triangle feature announced for May 19, has been changed to "Who Is to Blame?"

National Advertising Campaign for "The Yellow Ticket"

THE Yellow Ticket," the smashing big photoplay starring Fannie Ward, to be released June 2 by Pathe, as already announced, will be nationally advertised and the copy in the Saturday Evening Post of May 25, it is stated, will contain a coupon which will make the advertising of real box office value wherever this big publication is circulated.

Advance views of the production of A. H. Woods' sensational success indicate that "The Yellow Ticket" will be an important drawing card. Having its first showing in New York at the Rialto, the week of June 2, it is the type of production to which many big houses will turn for a maintenance of business on the legitimate theater scale.

The coupon referred to is to be clipped and signed by readers. Those sending in this coupon will receive an illustrated book telling the story of "The Yellow Ticket" and giving details of the film production. Each of these inquiries will, quite naturally, become a valuable prospect for the exhibitors. The names will be sent to the branches for the appropriate territory and these will be turned over to the interested exhibitor showing the picture. It is reasonable to estimate that from 50,000 to 100,000 inquiries will thus be brought into Pathe exchange offices.

Another interesting idea used by Pathe is this: The Motion Picture Magazine for July, which will appear June 1, will carry an important article on "The Yellow Ticket." This story is called "Scenarioriz-ing a Great Play," and in presenting extracts from the scenario of the drama it tells the reader to compare this form of dramatic construction with the play, if he saw it, or the book if he read it, and then note in the picture the way in which the play is put over on the screen. The readers of this article will want to see "The Yellow Ticket."

Everybody Busy For Pathe on West Coast

EVERYBODY is busy these days at the West Coast studios making pictures for Pathe. Astra has gone in strong for horses and is buying some fine blooded steeds for use in "Hands Up," the serial. The Phantom Rider is the mystery character in it, and one of the best known actor-riders in California has been engaged for the part.

Frank Keenan is finding a lot of real enjoyment in making his picture "The Sierra Sixties" at the Paralta studio.

"All Wrong" is the title of a comedy now being made under Pathe auspices by Bryant Washburn. Mildred Davis has an important role and reports from Los Angeles have it that the newcomer will prove a big surprise. Raymond West is directing the comedian and has made a hit with his snappy work so far.

They are using snow stuff in Bessie Love's new Pathe feature "Carolyn of the Corners," in spite of the heat of the California sun. An extra force of technical experts are supplying the beautiful white.

Lytell Putting On Vance Story.

"No Man's Land" is the title of Bert Lytell's next picture, his second as a star under the Metro banner. It is to be a picturization of the novel of the same name by Louis Joseph Vance, and was adapted for the screen by Mr. Lytell and Albert Le Vino, head of the scenario department at Metro's west coast studios.

"No Man's Land" is a swift-moving story of love and adventure, with a thread of subtle intrigue. Notwithstanding its title, the story is not of the war, "no man's land" being the description of an island of mystery instead of the stretch of shell-ruined terrain that lies between contending armies.

Mr. Lytell is already at work. In the production he is directed by Will S. Davis, with Anna Q. Nilsson as leading woman.

Miss Storey to Play in Baker Story.

As Edith Storey's next starring vehicle on the Metro program following "The Demon," George D. Baker, manager of productions at Metro's west coast studios, has selected a screen adaptation of "As the Sun Went Down," a drama written by Mr. Baker, and with which the theatergoing public has been familiar for some fifteen years. Miss Storey will be supported by a strong cast. Lew Cody, who played opposite the star in "Treasure of the Sea" and ""The Demon," again will be her leading man.

Glaum Company Goes to Del Mar.

A company of twenty-five persons, including the star and other members of the cast of "Shackled," Louise Glaum's latest production at the Paralta studios, was taken to the town of Del Mar, near San Diego, Cal., to film scenes of that picture on a seaside location. The scenic combination of high, rugged cliffs with the ocean, was found to be ideal for the production. Wallace Worsley is directing Miss Glaum. W. Lawson Butt, the noted England actor, also has an important part.

Metro Builds Mountain Town for "Cyclone Higgins, D.D"

A TENNESSEE mountain village went up suddenly in Rockland County, New York, for the staging of exteriors in "Cyclone Higgins, D.D.," a Metro All-Star Series picture starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, which will be released on May 13. William Christy Cabanne wrote and directed the picture.

In this settlement, which typifies a Tennessee mountain village, are many houses, a country school and a court house. For several weeks a score of carpenters worked on the construction of the hamlet, the buildings of which are of the log cabin type. Every cabin that was used in "Cyclone Higgins, D.D." was made from wood cut on the location, with the exception of the pine boards for the flooring. The heavy trees were felled by the brawn of man, but to cut them into long strips it was necessary to resort to a gasoline engine. Technical Director Will H. Stevens, under whose supervision the village was built, arranged for the erection of such an engine and the work was soon done.

The house that represents the home of "Cyclone" Higgins, who is played by Francis X. Bushman, is one of the best on the location. It is about twenty-five feet in length, ten feet in height and about fifteen feet in width. The front of the hut is made from rough side of the trees cut into heavy strips, so as to make the house seem weather beaten. Mr. Stevens had a combination of paints mixed with mortar which was thrown against the front of the place.

The principal street of the village sweeps down a mountain side and it is a reproduction of a photograph made by Director Cabanne, while touring the Rocky Mountain district. On the north the winds are kept away from the village by tall mountain peaks, while on the east there are several hills and a brook.

Good Goldwyn Cast in "The Fair Pretender"

TOM MOORE will again be seen as leading man in Madge Kennedy's fifth Goldwyn production, "The Fair Pretender," by Florence C. Bolles. Prominent in the support of the prepossessing Goldwyn star are a number of other screen players of repute. Moore's performances since becoming a Goldwyn fixture have been a feature of several productions, particularly "The Danger Game," the previous Madge Kennedy picture.

Robert Walker, well known for his juvenile characterizations, has an important role in "The Fair Pretender." Walker was prominently identified with a number of successful Broadway musical comedies before taking up motion picture work. Paul Doucet, who was capital in support of Miss Kennedy in "The Danger Game," is intrusted with another important role.

Florence Billings, long a motion picture favorite, is making her first appearance in Goldwyn Pictures. She made her debut on the screen four years ago after a successful stage career. Grace Stevens, also endowed with screen talent, has a charming role. Before her advent on the screen Miss Stevens played important parts in several high-class productions on the road.

Other screen players well known to film devotees in support of Miss Kennedy are Wilmer Walter, Emmett King, and John Terry.

Battleground in "Britain's Bulwarks."

The capture of Messines and the surrounding territory which has since been wrested from the British by the Germans is shown in the second episode of the great "Britain's Bulwarks" series, released by Pathe and giving graphic official scenes from all phases of the World War.

The picture shows the Irish and Australian troops enjoying all kinds of sports behind the lines on the day before Haig's great drive was made in June, 1917.

Then the artillery is seen in action.

Camera Started on "The One Woman," First Mastercraft

TUESDAY morning, April 30, saw the wheels begin to grind on the manufacture of the production which marks the active entrance of a new organization in the motion picture industry. At the Paralta studios in Los Angeles, one entire stage, divided into various settings, is now under the focus of a battery of cameras engaged in the production of Thomas Dixon's novel, "The One Woman," with which feature the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation will make its advent into the motion picture theaters of the world. F. Eugene Farnsworth, president of the Mastercraft company, is supervising the production, which is being staged under the direction of Reginald Barker. Miss Adda Gleason and Miss Clara Williams, both prominent in the worlds of stage and screen respectively, appear in leading roles.

The screen version of "The One Woman" was written by Mr. Dixon himself in collaboration with Harry Chandlee. The scenario was prepared by Mr. Chandlee and E. Richard Schayer.

Mr. Farnsworth estimates that the negative of this picture will be completed in about five weeks.

Mastercraft plans the production of four large features a year.

High-Class Theaters Show "My Four Years in Germany"

MANY important contracts in connection with the showing of "My Four Years In Germany" in the leading cities of the United States have been signed by Warner Brothers and the members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit during the past week.

Efforts to secure the largest high-class houses in each city have proved successful in practically every instance, and an imposing list of Klaw & Erlanger and B. F. Keith theaters are now booked to show Ambassador Gerard's screen revelations of his diplomatic work during the month of May at top prices averaging slightly more than $1.

On April 29 the picture opened at the Nixon theater, Pittsburgh, for an indefinite run, and also got off to a prosperous start at the two Metropolitan theaters in St. Paul and Minneapolis, respectively. In Denver an auspicious opening was also reported at the Broadway, one of the best known legitimate houses in the West, on May 5.

The people of Omaha will be given the opportunity of witnessing a local premiere at the Brandeis theater on May 12. Elaborate preparations are being made for the Philadelphia opening at the Forrest theater on the same date, as well as at the Davidson theater in Milwaukee. Baltimore will see the film at the Academy of Music on the day following. May 19 is the date decided upon for the opening of the Cleveland run at the Opera House, and the extensive advance work that has already been done in that city is expected to result in big business from the first day. Arrangements have also been made to show the picture at the Park theater in Youngstown and the Hartman theater in Columbus one week earlier.

In both Toledo and Dayton the Gerard production will open at the B. F. Keith houses on May 20, and will play Keith's Colonial at Akron beginning May 26.

Bookings are also announced for the Keith theaters in Portland, Me.; Lowell, Mass., and Manchester, N. H.

Throughout Indiana the picture will be shown at the leading legitimate houses in Terre Haute, Green Castle, Franklin, Linton, Muncie, Elwood and Washington for runs averaging one week each during the month of May.

Dixon Returns to New York.

Thomas Dixon, Jr., author of "The Clansman," from which was adapted "The Birth of a Nation," and other novels, returned to New York last week from Los Angeles, where he has been for the past few months attending to the details of production connected with the staging of his book, "The One Woman," which is now in the course of filming at the Paralta studios by the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation.

Mr. Dixon spent a number of weeks at the Coast conferring with the executives there in reference to the writing of the screen version of the story and the many details necessary before starting the actual filming of the story. In speaking of "The One Woman" as a film production, Mr. Dixon stated that he expects a most excellent production which will be ready for release within a reasonably short time.

The picture will be produced with an all-star cast.

Mabel Normand Makes Food Film.

With her daily work at the Goldwyn studios, Mabel Normand somehow finds time to give herself to war work with all the zest that marks her screen efforts. Close on her theater appeals for Liberty Bonds she appeared in a special food conservation film at the request of the United States Food Administration. In her characteristic manner Miss Normand depicts the trials of the housewife who has to combat the stubbornness of a Swedish cook who insists on ignoring orders and uses wheat instead of rice flour.

The film will be shown throughout the country as part of a news weekly.

Three Big Artcrafts for Release in May

THREE big Artcraft offerings are on the May schedule of releases announced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, two presenting Mary Pickford and William S. Hart and the third another of the series of super-pictures produced by Cecil B. De Mille.

The first in order of release is Miss Pickford in "M'Liss," in which she will be seen in a typical Pickfordian role as the heroine of the famous Bret Harte novel. The picture was adapted by Frances Marion. That the direction was in the capable hands of Marshall Neilan should be sufficient assurance of the artistry of the production and the subtle touches which have placed this wizard of the screen in the front rank of motion picture producers. Chief in the cast are Theodore Roberts, Thomas Meighan, Charles Ogle, Tully Marshall, Helen Kelly and Winifred Greenwood. The date of release is May 13.

Another adaptation from a famous novel is the Cecil B. De Mille production of "Old Wives and New," released on May 20. The author of the book is the late David Graham Phillips. The story won popularity because of its fidelity to life and its pitiless exposition of the frailties of mankind as well as the follies of modern society. The excellent picturization is the work of Jeanie Macpherson. A fine array of players portray the various roles, including Elliott Dexter, Sylvia Ashton, Wanda Hawley, Florence Vidor, Theodore Roberts, Helen Jerome Eddy, Marcia Manon, Julia Faye, J. Parks-Jones, Edna May Cooper, Gustav Seyffertitz, Tully Marshall, Lillian Leighton and Maym Kelso. Alvin Wyckoff was in charge of the camera.

A new character is created by William S. Hart in the Thomas H. Ince production released May 20, entitled "Selfish Yates." The role is that of an egotistical and brutal divekeeper in an Arizona mining camp. Debased by his sordid surroundings, he exhibits no manly qualities until the germ of love, planted in his soul by a woman, blossoms. The regeneration of Yates is a subtle psychological study which carries the message that selfishness is a hideous trait. The story was written by C. Gardner Sullivan.

The picture was directed by Hart himself. The leading woman is Jane Novak. Among the others are Harry Dunkinson, B. Sprotte, Ernest Butterworth and Thelma Salter.

Vitagraph Announces New Serial.

"A Fight for Millions" is announced as the title for the next Vitagraph serial, in which William Duncan, star of "The Fighting Trail" and "Vengeance, and the Woman," is to be featured. Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, in making public the name of the forthcoming chapter play, also stated that it would be released on July 15 next.

W. W. Hodkinson to Distribute Douglass Color Pictures

THE Douglass natural color pictures are to be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and are now ready for booking throughout the United States. Leon F. Douglass, the inventor, is also one of the patentees of the Victor talking machine. His perfecting of a process of photographing color is in line with his phonograph inventions in that, in both cases, he was striving to recreate.

W. W. Hodkinson, who prolonged his stay in Los Angeles to witness the first public showing of these Douglass films at the Kinema theater, that city, is elated over the hearty reception accorded them by the public and press.

In commenting upon his latest acquisition Mr. Hodkinson states: "It must be borne in mind that the Douglass natural color pictures are something entirely different from any other films heretofore on the market, and must not be confused with them. Ours are not hand-colored prints, nor is a colored rotary shutter used in projection. The Douglass secret process is in the actual photographing and printing of the film.

"Not only are scenes of nature recreated in all their radiant colors, but flesh tints are also delicately defined. In addition, the pictures possess a marked stereoscopic effect.

"I expect, and hope, that very shortly we will have a series of productions in natural color, short in length, and at a fair price, that will present an attraction of equal value from the box office standpoint to the average features on the market at the present time."

Scene from "The Street of Seven Stars" (De Luxe).

Doris Kenyon Will Start Work on Second De Luxe

DORIS KENYON, her director, John B. O"Brien, and several members of her company returned on April 27 from Virginia, where the last of the exteriors of "The Street of Seven Stars" were taken. These were the concluding scenes of the Mary Roberts Rinhart story which Miss Kenyon is presenting at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc. The assembling and cutting of the picture will be finished within a few days, and the feature, which is in six reels, will be ready for a private view within a week.

Theodore C. Deitrich, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., is busy on plans for Miss Kenyon's second feature. John B. O'Brien will again be Miss Kenyon's director, and the company will continue its occupancy of the Plimpton studio at Mount Vernon.

"Peg of the Pirates" Has Bold Buccaneers

IN THE current William Fox release, "Peg of the Pirates," Miss Peggy Hyland, in spite of her diminutive size, proves that "Britannia Rules the Waves," and some very "high rollers" and "rough breakers" of the piratical persuasion, to boot. Penzance in its palmiest days never turned out a rougher, tougher crew than the bold buccaneers who kidnap the daughter of Wyndham Martyn and carry her off in their "long, low, black, rakish craft" to hold for ransom in their island lair.

The specially selected cast supporting Miss Hyland includes Carleton Macy as Sir Wyndham, Sidney Mason as Terry, Frank Evans as Captain Bones, with Ajax Carrol, James Davis and L. Walheim as villainous members of the pirate crew. Eric Mayne plays the Governor of South Carolina, where the principal scenes of the story are laid and where "Peg of the Pirates" was actually filmed. Sections of old Charleston and picturesque craft of the period of the story make this one of the most atmospheric as well as active pictures turned out by any of the Fox women stars recently.

First Apfel-World Coming June 3.

World Pictures will release "The Interloper," a Kitty Gordon photoplay, on June 3. This is the first completed product of Oscar Apfel direction under the World Pictures trade mark. It also signalizes the advent of Irving Cummings as a leading man for Miss Gordon. The supporting cast includes Frank Mayo, George MacQuarrie, Isabelle Berwin, June Blackman, Anthony Byrd, and I. Quong.

"The Interloper" is the story of life on a Southern plantation at the present day. Miss Gordon, in the role of Jane Cameron, portrays the emancipated modern girl of the South. She relegates the old prejudices to the rubbish heap, and starts to develop her old homestead into a paying proposition.

"True Blue" a Strong American Photodrama

ESPECIALLY timely and calculated to give fresh impetus to the real American propaganda intended to revive the spirit of patriots is William Farnum's latest Fox Standard release, entitled "True Blue." While quite modern in period and free from any war coloring, nevertheless Mr. Farnum pictures the typical "true blue" American under circumstances which apply the acid test to one of the weak spots in our armor—the adulation of titles and inherited estates.

William Farnum is seen at his best and is supported by a select cast, including the clever child actor, Francis Carpenter. Charles Clary does an excellent "twenty years after" double, while William Scott plays a half-brother in a style that retains sympathy in spite of the "wild oats" he sows all over the plantation. Katherine Adams comes to the fore as a pretty school ma'am, while Adda Gleason, Genevieve Blinn and Carrie Ward Clarke complete an excellent feminine contingent. There are some characteristic cowboy types and realistic rough-riding in this picture, which is furthermore marked by a fine sense of true American humor.

"He Comes Up Smiling" Sounds Fairbanksian

AFTER many months of negotiations with A. H. Woods, John Fairbanks, business manager for Douglas Fairbanks, announces the acquisition of the motion picture rights of "He Comes Up Smiling," the play in which the famous comedian scored the biggest success of his stage career, which will be a starring vehicle for Fairbanks in a forthcoming Arteraft picture. The amount paid is reported to be $10,000.

"Paying $10,000 for 'He Comes Up Smiling' proves that we are in the market for big stories," says John Fairbanks, "and willing to pay any price to secure vehicles for Douglas, who believes that results at any cost is the cheapest in the long run.

"It has not been decided how soon production will be started. It is quite possible we may have him do a western subject for the next picture.

"It will be recalled that the stage play was dramatized from the book of that title expressly for Douglas, which makes it an exceptionally desirous subject for him as a picture play."

"The Hushed Hour" Progressing.

Harry I. Garson reports work is progressing very rapidly on his Blanche Sweet production, "The Hushed Hour," which is being filmed at D. W. Griffith's Fine Arts studio in Hollywood, and which will be completed within the next few days. Mr. Garson's next production will be the filming of Marah Ellis Ryan's well known novel, "Told in the Hills," in which House Peters and Blanche Sweet will be co-starred. It is thought that both these pictures will be state-righted.

Jewel's "A Soul For Sale" Opens at Broadway May 19

SCHEDULED by Jewel Productions, Inc., as its next big special attraction is "A Soul for Sale." Dorothy Phillips plays the leading role. She is supported by a well balanced cast. Albert Roscoe, remembered as opposite to Theda Bara in "Camille" and "Cleopatra," takes the leading male part. William Buress, who acted as "The Spy" in "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," also is in the cast, of which other members are Katherine Kirkwood, Harry Dunkinson, and Joe Girard.

The forthcoming Jewel is in six reels, and will be released throughout the country the first week of June. It will have a pre-release showing at the Broadway theater, New York, beginning Sunday, May 19.

The picture is an adaptation from the widely read magazine entitled "Barter," by Evelyn Campbell, scenarioized by Elliott J. Clawson, and directed by Allen Holubar, who has led Miss Phillips through several of her most recent successes.

The photoplay is largely the story of home life epitomizing the methods of a dishonest, society loving mother and a sacrificing daughter willing and anxious to be accused of the misdeeds of the mother in order that she may shield the older woman.

Constance Talmadge Back on Job.

With more than a month's holiday behind her Constance Talmadge, Select star, is once more facing the camera. At the Hollywood studio, where Miss Talmadge's Select pictures are now being filmed, daily routine of picture making is in full swing.

Despite the halt in her work Miss Talmadge is still well ahead of her schedule. Two productions have been finished. One of them is "The Lesson," which has just been announced for release during May.

For the new production Harrison Ford has been engaged as leading man and Walter Edwards as director.

United States War Medals Shown in Gaumont News

Decoration Authorized for Acts of Valor in the Field of Action Pictured—Also Other War Activities Shown.

THE medals of honor which the United States, for the first time in history, decided to award "for superior acts of valor in the field of action" are shown in Gaumont News No. 6. These new medals, made from designs prepared by famous artists, comprise the Honor Medal of the United States Navy, the Medal of Honor awarded by Congress, and the Distinguished Service Cross.

To aid the Third Liberty Loan campaign, General Pershing has sent from France 60 picked soldiers who have been fighting in the first-line trenches. All of these men won the French Croix de Guerre for exceptional bravery in action. Striking photographs of them are shown, including a close-up of the "red-headed corporal," O. W. de Varilla, who had the distinction of firing the first shot for the United States in France.

Other subjects cover current happenings. In the national capitol, President Wilson, his hand in a sling because of the accidental burn received during his ride in a British war tank, reviews the patriotic parade celebrating "Liberty Day." In Baltimore, Captain Resnati, Italian aviator, bombards spectators with Liberty Loan pamphlets hurled from his giant Caproni biplane.

In New York City, 20,000 mothers, wives, and sweethearts of soldiers are applauded in a spectacular parade for the Third Liberty Loan. In Lexington a new record is set by "Bradley's Choice" in the first Blue Grass track meet of the season. In California the bathing season opens with record crowds.

The recent agricultural exposition in Buenos Aires gives an idea of how the Argentine Republic is helping to feed the Allies, and California state farm shows what the United States is accomplishing toward the same end.

There are also scenes showing the destruction wrought by the recent earthquake in Southern California.

"Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21"

At Trade Showing of Film the Producer Gives History of This German Dirigible.

JOHN A. LIBSTON, of the Interstate Film Company, producer of "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21," gave a talk to a number of film buyers who attended a trade showing of this film. Mr. Libston briefly reviewed the Zeppelin L-21 as follows:

"The Zeppelin L-21 was built by Count Zeppelin at Dusseldorf in 1915. Five hundred and eighteen feet long and sixty-five feet wide of solid steel construction and framework, it weighed nine thousand two hundred pounds, and with a total cargo capacity and full crew it could travel seventy miles an hour.

"In February, 1915, manned by 20 men, Captain Frederick Raoul commanding and Charles Gerch as ammunition chief, and loaded with about 5,000 pounds of explosives and incendiary bombs, the L-21 left Dusseldorf and started on its voyage of death and destruction. Passing over Belgium, it raided the vicinity of Harwich and Colchester and continued its flight towards London, but was driven off and forced to return to its base. The damage caused by the fire from the English anti-aircraft guns necessitated repairs lasting three months.

"On August 2 the L-21 again started out, and traveled until it reached the Straits of Dover, where English vessels with sea-planes aboard effectively intercepted the voyage and again the L-21 returned with nothing accomplished other than the destruction of buildings in some of the small villages in Northern France.

"On Christmas Eve the Zeppelin L-21 succeeded in penetrating to the heart of London. The only warning of her approach came with the news from Croyden that a house in which a baby had been born early that day had been demolished and the mother and new-born killed.

"The searchlights over London succeeded in spotting and holding the Zeppelin for two hours. After three English planes had been beaten off by the fire from machine guns mounted on the Zeppelin, Lieut. W. L. Robinson, an English "Ace," ascended and how well he succeeded in his conflict with the Zeppelin has been written on history's pages."

"Mickey" Song Now on Graphophones.

Daniels & Wilson, in collaboration with the Western Import Company, have consummated a deal with the Columbia Graphophone Company to make a record of the musical number "Mickey," based on the Mabel Normand photoplay.

This record will be made by the Earle Fuller Jazz Band, which is appearing at Rector's Cabaret in New York.

It is said that the Columbia Graphophone Company will conduct a special advertising campaign for this record. Consequently in addition to the copies of the song that are being widely circulated throughout the country, there will be this added advertising and publicity campaign for the photoplay.

Petrova to Make Trip for War Stamp Sale

Will Leave During Current Month for Tour of Principal First National Theaters.

MADAME OLGA PETROVA will at the completion of "Patience Sparhawk," the fifth Petrova picture, temporarily cease her producing activity because of trouble with her eyes. Her physician advised an absolute rest, but she has decided to start out during the present month on an extensive tour of the principal cities of the United States in the interest of War Saving Stamps.

Negotiations are under way whereby she will appear in the more important theaters controlled by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which is distributing the Petrova pictures, and in addition to delivering a short war talk she will give a brief program of her own original songs, poems, monologues, and stories.

It is announced that this is the first opportunity afforded moving picture patrons of the country to see her in person, and that the tour will be handled in the same manner as a theatrical enterprise, with extensive advertising campaigns, and that simultaneous with her appearance Petrova pictures will be shown by the different theaters.

A suggestion made by Madame Petrova which has met with the approval of First National Exhibitors and other theater men who have been approached is that instead of raising prices of admission at the houses where she appears and the double program of her pictures together with her war talk and own unique little entertainment is given, that each purchaser of an orchestra seat be required to buy one twenty-five-cent war saving stamp, and the same rule apply to every pair of balcony seats.

Madame Petrova's services will, of course, be entirely without remuneration, and arrangement for the trip will be made the latter part of this week, when it is expected that "Patience Sparhawk" will be completed.

Baker and Wood Shown On the Battle Front

Clemenceau and Foch Also Pictured in Gaumont Graphic No. 5, Together with Other Interesting News.

THE first pictures of Secretary of War Baker and Major General Leonard S. Wood on the actual battle front in France appear in Gaumont Graphic No. 5. There are also shown among the war subjects in this issue of the popular Independent news reel pictures of French General Foch, now in supreme command of the Allied forces, and French Premier Clemenceau, who recently visited the front in connection with the decorating of American soldiers with the French medal of honor, the "Croix de Guerre." For years there has been a law which prevented one working for Uncle Sam accepting an award or decoration from a foreign government. But the world war has wrought many changes, the United States has repealed the law, and, although they have been fighting only a few months, hundreds of American soldiers are the proud possessors of the French War Cross, won by their distinctive bravery. And Uncle Sam is preparing an honor medal of his own!

Not only are they doing wonderful work in connection with the Third Liberty Loan campaign, but there is no let-up in the other wartime activities of the American women. In this number of the Gaumont Graphic is also shown the opening of the third encampment of a war service school in Washington, where many women are taking a six weeks' course in preparedness. Another subject demonstrates that the gasoline tractor has solved the farm problem, so far as woman is concerned, for any woman who can run a Ford (and who cannot?) can run a tractor. This year tractors will enable the women of the United States to relieve thousands of male farm hands who are anxious to use rifles against the Huns. American girls feel that they can become, like their sisters in England, soldiers of the soil.

In Washington the President and the Cabinet attend the military funeral ceremonies held for Don Santiago Aldunate, late Ambassador from Chile. The parcel post is carrying live chickens, and the usual scenes of war activities all over the United States are shown.

"Two Twins" a Katzenjammer Comedy.

The second release of the Educational Films Corporation of America, combining an International Black and White comedy and a Ditmar Animal Picture, shows the Katzenjammer Kids in a comedy entitled "Two Twins." The story deals with a lady of few charms, but much money, a rivalry for her favor existing between the captain and the professor engendered by her pocketbook, and the purloining of a tame bear from a wandering Italian by the kids and its external metamorphosis into a lady for the edification of the captain. It is only after the bear becomes rough in response to his affectionate advances that the captain returns to the house to find the real lady in the arms of the professor.

The Ditmar picture on the same reel is entitled "Animal Traits," and in it the savagery of the wild horse is depicted by his attacks on a dummy figure. The expressions on the animal's face are almost human, and his actions keep the audience roaring.

"Bright and Early" Next King-Bee.

The new King-Bee comedy, "Bright and Early," will be released on May 15, with Billy West portraying a bell boy. This is said to be the first time since King-Bee has had him under contract that he appears in costume.

In "Bright and Early" will be seen the full strength of the King-Bee Company, including Babe Hardy, Leo White, Budd Ross, Rosemary Theby, Ethel Gibson, and twenty others.

Convicted Hindu Plotters Shown in "Eagle's Eye"

Franz Bopp, German Consul General at San Francisco, Also Depicted in Episode of Flynn Serial.

PLOTS against America, for which Franz Bopp, the former German Consul General at San Francisco, Ram Chandra and 27 others were convicted in the Federal Court, are shown in two episodes of "The Eagle's Eye." Under the title of "The Reign of Terror," the thirteenth episode, shows activities of the former German Consul General after the deportation of Captain Franz von Papen and Captain Karl Boy-Ed. Boy-Ed and von Papen had amassed considerable data in regard to munitions plants, but they had not had time to consummate the outrages planned before being recalled. Bopp was put in charge of the plot in the western part of the country. Some of the factories were to be fired and others to be bombed. The plot was discovered through the Secret Service and stopped before a tenth of the outrages had been accomplished.

The eighteenth episode to be released under the title of 'The Great Hindu Conspiracy," gives the plot for which Bopp and Ram Chandra were convicted. The German government worked with Hindus for the purpose of fomenting an uprising in India, with the hope of inciting a rebellion and seriously weakening the efforts of England and France to cope with the East Indians.

Again the plot was discovered by the Secret Service early in its inception, but permitted to proceed while its ramifications were being traced. When the storage places for rifles, machine guns and ammunition had been found, raids were made, and the attempted East Indian uprising was a thing of the past.

Jester Has Excellent Censorship Record

WHAT may be considered an achievement in these days of strict censorship is the fact that with the exception of one elimination in Chicago of a scene wherein a dancer wears a decolette gown, Jester comedies are said to have passed every censor board in the country without a single cut.

When the first subject was finished, William Steiner, founder of the Jester company, had the picture shown to a selected group of experienced film judges, with the request that they report on anything that might be in any way offensive to the public. These gentlemen reported the picture absolutely free from anything that might be considered suggestive in any form whatever. Not satisfied with this, Mr. Steiner viewed the picture several times before placing his O. K. on it, and then submitted it to the National Board of Review, which is said to have approved it without eliminations.

With each succeeding subject the same course was pursued, and it is stated that this method will be adhered to on future productions, it being the policy of the Jester Comedy Company to endeavor to make all of its pictures censor proof.

Mr. Steiner, in speaking of the censorship question, states it is just as easy to make clean pictures and get the full value of the term, "comedy," as it is to resort to methods that are offensive. "Why some producers permit vulgar material to go into their pictures is beyond me," says Mr. Steiner, "and if I have to resort to that kind of stuff, well, then, I think it will be time to close up."

"Tempered Steel" Has Novel Effects.

Announcement is made by Petrova Picture Co. that "Tempered Steel" will be released within the near future. It is now undergoing cutting, editing and subtitling; and several novel effects in the matter of animated titles and decorative backgrounds have been introduced. It is also said that an effect entirely new has been used whereby the usual abrupt change from subtitle to scene has been eliminated, the mind of the spectator being carried smoothly from wording to action without breaking the continuity.

An original main title has also been devised for the purpose of eliminating the usual subtitles necessary to characterize the introduction of the principal actors in the play.

"Tempered Steel" was prepared as a screen offering by George Middleton from his story, "The Great Star," and is the first Petrova picture directed by Ralph Ince.

The admirers of the Polish actress will find her in a different role from any of her former characterizations. Depicting the part of a young, high-spirited Southern girl thrown into the vortex of theatrical life in Manhattan, Madame Petrova is said to do some of the best emotional work of her career. The story was adapted by Mrs. L. Case Russell, photographed by Harry Harris, and the following players enact the principal characters in support of Madame Petrova: J. Herbert Frank, Thomas Holding, E. J. Ratcliffe, Matilda Brundage, E. T. Carlton and Mrs. H. Walton.

"Tempered Steel" will be released during the early part of May through the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

"Eagle's Eye" Aids Bond Sale

Showing of Flynn Serial Stimulates Subscriptions at Plaza Theater, New York.

ON April 23, following a run of the first and second episodes of "The Eagles Eye" at the Plaza theater, 59th street and Madison avenue, New York, a fifteen hundred seat house, $42,-100 worth of bonds were sold to persons in the audience. The serial opened at the Plaza on April 22. During the evening run on that date $10,000 worth of bonds were sold.

"It is the first serial I have ever run in the Plaza," said Manager Gosdoffer, "and I am so well pleased with it that I have booked it for the Odeon and the Orpheum. My patronage is drawn from an exclusive residential section, and never have I seen the enthusiasm displayed by any audience in the Plaza as was shown the two evenings I have run episodes of "The Eagle's Eye." Among my patrons are some Germans. Two people complained that the picture was offensive to them. I told them bluntly that I did not care for their patronage. Monday night I noticed a slight increase in the average patronage. Tuesday night the house was jammed, and it is not a matter of conjecture what brought them there. The applause was a revelation to me who had been used to seeing the class of clientele which the Plaza serves take their entertainment passively."

Co-operative Booking Pleases Rapf.

Harry Rapf is very much elated with the success his two productions, Florence Reed in "The Struggle Everlasting," and Robert Warwick and Elaine Hammerstein in "The Accidental Honeymoon" has met, through co-operative plan of booking, which is being handled by the Exhibitors' Booking Syndicate of New York, which is composed of a number of New York exhibitors, headed by Sydney Cohen of the New York League.

Al. Harsten, general manager, has written Mr. Rapf a personal letter in which he states that all the exhibitors booking these two productions are highly pleased with the plan and that the two productions have been pronounced real box office attractions in all the houses where booked.

Harry Rapf leaves on Sunday to close with several organizations in the West.

State Right Distributors, Inc., Will Meet on May 16

Organization of Which Sol Lesser Is President to Hold Convention in New York—Many Other Territorial Buyers Expected to Be Present.

ON May 16 the board of directors of State Right Distributors, Incorporated, will hold a meeting in New York, when a number of matters will be considered, including the mapping out of a further campaign for progress and enlargement of the organization.

On this trip the directors will also view several pictures with the idea of securing one as a successor to "Carmen of the Klondike," which they are now successfully handling.

The following members of the organization are expected to be present: Sol Lesser, of the All Star Feature Film Company, San Francisco, president; Nathan Hirsh, and Louis Hass of Pioneer Film Corporation, New York, treasurers; L. D. Netter, of Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, secretary; Dan Varderwalker, Doll-Van, Chicago; H. Dollman, of Doll-Van Co., Indianapolis; Harry Grelle, of Supreme Photoplay Productions, Pittsburgh; J. J. Allen, of Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., Toronto; B. S. Cohen, of Foursquare Pictures, Denver; Mike Rosenberg, De Luxe Feature Film, Seattle, Wash.

In addition this meeting will be attended by a number of other prominent state right buyers who will be voted on to join this organization, and it is expected that at the close of the meeting a one hundred per cent. membership will be announced.

U. S. Gardens in Elizabeth, N. J., have booked first-run King-Bee comedies starting with "The Orderly."

George Cohen, operating theaters in Newburgh, Poughkeepsie, and Beacon, N. Y., has booked the three W. S. Hart features handled by W. H. Productions Co.; also the Barriscale feature, "Satan's Pawn." These pictures have also been booked by the Proctor Theaters in Albany and Troy.

During a recent showing of Graphic's "Moral Suicide" the crowd in the lobby of Burlands' theater, Bronx, New York City, is said to have assumed such proportions that it was necessary to close the box office and put out the lobby lights. As a consequence this picture was booked for a return engagement.

"Tarzan of the Apes" Reports Big Business

ONE of the most unusual engagements ever played in the history of Indianapolis was that of "Tarzan of the Apes," which opened a week's run at the Circle theater in that city, April 28. In a message to J. D. Williams, of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Mr. Leiber, of the Circle theater, said, "Tarzan broke the record on its opening day here, exceeding even the business of "My Four Years in Germany."

This feat of attracting unusual patronage in the largest cities in the country by National Film Corporation's first production makes it an assured fact that "Tarzan of the Apes" is just as great and potent a pulling power as the intensive trades advertising compaign has boasted it to be.

At Philadelphia against other big features it broke the record of the Victoria theater during its two weeks' run. At the Isis theater, Denver, it played to the greatest business in the history of that house. At Swanson's American theater, Salt Lake City, it called forth crowds unequaled in the history of that city, and at New Orleans it shattered the record of the Globe theater by playing to more people and greater profit than that house has known. Many other theaters are sending in similar reports.

The First National officials state that over five thousand days have been booked on this production, and that from present indications it will play 85 per cent. of the theaters in the country during its first year, and that it is now being booked for repeats by 70 per cent. of those who already have played it.

Funny Fatty Filbert Is Star in Josh Binney Comedies

H. J. BINNEY, the president and director general of the Florida Film Corporation, known to a host of friends as "Josh" Binney and the producer of a series of popular comedies under that name and trademark, says that there is an impression prevailing to an alarming extent that he is also the bright particular star of the aggregation of screen artists assembled under his banner.

The mistake is plausible, inasmuch as the stellar role is impersonated by Funny Fatty Filbert, the counterpart of Mr. Binney in generous physical proportion, but "Josh" does not intend that his star shall be robbed of any of the fame to which he is rightly entitled and he takes this method of declaring that to Funny Fatty Filbert's unquestionable capabilities as a comedian and his hearty co-operation in the several productions may be attributed a large measure of the success attained.

Mr. Binney is a pioneer in the production of comedy features and his unbroken line of successful releases is largely due to the fact that in temperament he is a bubbling fountain of good nature and a firm believer in the theory that there is a laugh ever near at hand if one is disposed to look for it, and this pleasing and appealing personality is a characteristic he aims to inject in every comedy produced under his direction.

Ernest Shipman, sales manager for Mr. Binney, reports there is a big and healthy demand for these comedies and that all territorial rights are rapidly being disposed of.

Players Engaged for "When Man Betrays"

AMONG the players who have been engaged by Director General Ivan Abramson for "When Man Betrays," the forthcoming production which he is making for Graphic Film Corporation, are Jack McLean and Sally Crute.

Mr. McLean has earned a reputation both on the stage and screen as an actor of ability, and in the latest Graphic feature, "Moral Suicide," which was also directed by Ivan Abramson, he portrayed the role of Waverly Covington, a young fellow slightly unbalanced from over study, and is said never to have lost for an instant the vacant expression as if a question were in his mind that he was unable to answer, and to have imparted so much realism to the character as to produce a feeling of mental unrest whenever he appeared on the scene. Also, in the end, when conditions bring him back to his normal state, he is said to have infused into the character in contrast to the earlier scenes the natural buoyancy and optimism of youth. Because of his work in this production he has been cast in one of the best roles in "When Man Betrays."

Sally Crute, also well known for her work on the screen in a number of feature productions, and who appeared in some of Mr. Abramson's earlier pictures, has been cast for an important role which, it is stated, requires not only a beautiful girl whose manner is so fascinating and appealing that men become her willing slaves, but also an actress who is able to subtly convey the impression to the audience that all of her love affairs are governed by her head and never by her heart. In accepting Director General Abramson's offer to appear in this part, Miss Crute is said to have turned down tempting contracts for appearance in other productions.

McClure Announces More Sales.

McClure Pictures announce that it has sold to Turner & Dahnken, of San Fraacisco, the territorial rights to the McClure film, "Mother," for northern California and Nevada, and that the McClure advertising and publicity departments will co-operate with Turner & Dahnken in the exploitation of "Mother" in this territory.

Mr. Dick, general sales manager of McClures, also announces that a deal has been closed through the Piedmont Picture Corporation, whereby "Seven Deadly Sins" will be shown throughout the Dutch West Indies, and arrangements are being made through the same organization for a sale of the Cuban rights to "Seven Deadly Sins."

"The Warrior," starring Maciste, well known for his work in "Cabiria," and "Mother," starring Elizabeth Risdon, have been distributed by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., on state rights basis, and, with the exception of the above-mentioned territories, Sawyer and Lubin have placed these two productions in practically every section of the United States.

Smallest Theaters Book "Eagle's Eye."

Two of the smallest motion picture theaters in the United States have booked "The Eagle's Eye." These houses have a combined seating capacity of but 475 and the combined population of the two towns in which they are situated is but 700. The Opera House at Andes, N. Y., has a seating capacity of 175, and the population of Andes is 450. Shaifferstown has but 250 population, while the Opera House there seats 300. Mr. Whittaker, who is manager of both houses, believes that the serial will increase his patronage by attracting the inhabitants of the rural districts around each of the towns.

The employees of the two theaters double in various capacities. The operator and cashier in Andes is the principal of the school there, while the cashier at Shaifferstown is employed in a bank.

W. H. Production Reports Sales on Chaplin Reissues

Announce Sales Covering Two-thirds of States for One and Two Reel Subjects—Also Territory on Other Re-Issues.

W. H. PRODUCTIONS COMPANY states that within the past two weeks they have disposed of more than two-thirds of the territory in the United States on the twenty-six one and two-reel Charlie Chaplin subjects they are about to re-issue.

In addition to sales already reported, the following are announced: To the United Photoplay Co., of Chicago, for the States of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin; to the Standard Film Exchange, Pittsburgh, for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; to the Peerless Film Service, San Francisco, for California, Arizona and Nevada; to W. High, Baltimore, for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia; to Foursquare Pictures Corporation, Denver, for Colorado, Wyoming Utah and New Mexico; to the Greater Features Company, Seattle, for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana; to Phil Goldstone, Detroit, for Iowa, Nebraska and Michigan; to Magnet Film Exchange, New York, for New York; to Globe Feature Film Company, Boston, for New England States.

In addition the following sales on the other productions are announced: The series of 28 two-reel Mack Sennett Keystone comedies for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, to Frank Zambreno, president of United Photoplay Co., Chicago; to Franklin Backer, 729 Seventh ave., New York, for Northern New Jersey; "Satan's Pawn," a Barriscale reissue, to Frank Zambreno, president of United Photoplay Co., Chicago, for Illinois and Indiana; the series of two-reel Shorty Hamiltons to the Standard Film Exchange, Pittsburgh, for West Virginia and western Pennsylvania.

The Chaplin subjects are being retitled, re-edited and reconstructed. The first four will be two reelers, the first two being "The Jazz Waiter" and "His Dare Devil Queen." In both of these subjects Chaplin is supported by a complete cast, including Mabel Normand.

The advertising matter will consist of one, three and six-sheet posters on each of the two reelers, and one and three sheets on the single reelers, with a lobby display of 8x10's on all subjects. They will be released at the rate of one a week.

School of Expression Started by Petrova

For Her Own Company, in New York Studio—Each Player's Work Screened and Discussed on Following Day.

MADAME PETROVA in her studio on West Thirty-eighth street has had one of the offices turned into a projection room for the purpose of inaugurating a school of screen acting for the members of her company. A De Vry portable commercial projection machine has been installed, and when the day's work is done the players assemble, and the scenes taken the previous day are run off. Each individual's acting is discussed with a view to constructive criticism.

As an actor's gestures or expressions are singled out the machine is stopped and turned back until the desired flash is repeated. In this way the players analyze their own work. If Madame Petrova feels that the scene does not measure up to the standard she endeavors to convince the actor or actress wherein he or she might have improved the scene by a slightly different interpretation, a more forceful bit of acting, or a more suppressed or subtle rendition of the role.

"If two or three out of ten or twelve players get a deeper understanding or are spurred on to more ambitious endeavor through this little school of film expression," says Madame Petrova, "then I will feel amply repaid for any extra time I may have devoted to my already long day's work at the studio."

Madame Petrova is said to be as severe a taskmaster where her own work is concerned as when criticising the results of the efforts of her company, and she has installed an identical machine in her own home at Great Neck, L. I., with a view to further study of herself and her stories on the screen.

Whartons Move to Brokaw Building.

Officer of "The Eagle's Eye," the twenty-episode serial story of the Imperial German Government's spies and plots in America, by William J. Flynn, the recently-retired Chief of the United States Secret Service, were moved this week from Rooms 313, 314 and 315, on the third floor of the Longacre Building, at No. 1470 Broadway, to Suite 811, on the eighth floor of the Brokaw Building, at No. 1457 Broadway.

The move does not take "The Eagle's Eye" offices off the corner of Forty-second street and Broadway. They are now on the southwest corner instead of on the northeast. It is said that a desire to get the stenographic force farther away from the distractions of Broadway (in this case five stories higher remove the street from sight) prompted the move.

Claire Whitney in Emotional Role.

Claire Whitney, who was chosen to create the role of Lucy Daniels in "Moral Suicide," the Graphic Film Corporation feature, produced by Ivan Abramson, was on the stage for five years, and her greatest success in that field was achieved with Joe Kaufman and Louis Galloway in "Little Mother," by Edgar Allan Wolf.

On the screen she has starred in "The Dream Woman," "Beneath the Czar," "Shadows of the Moulin Rouge," "The Ruling Passion," "Life's Shop Window," and co-starred in "The Burglar and the Lady" with James Corbett; "The Walls of Jericho," with Edmund Breese; "The Idler," with Charles Richman; "The Girl I Left Behind Me," with Robert Edeson, and in "The Nigger" and "The Plunderer," with William Farnum.

That Lucy Daniels in "Moral Suicide" is one of the best parts she has ever essayed is the contention of Miss Whitney, and she is said to have made of it a remarkably effective portrayal, full of both pathos and comedy, which she has delicately handled.

Titles of Two Shorty Hamiltons Announced.

W. H. Productions Co. has now in preparation for release the first two of the series of sixteen two-reel Shorty Hamilton western comedy dramas. These two subjects will be entitled "A Camouflage Baron" and "Shorty Inherits Forty Wives."

Elmer McGovern, the production editor, claims that in their new dress they will be more entertaining than in their original form. More than half the territory has been disposed of for this series.

"The Eagle's Eye" Cast Sell Liberty Bonds.

King Baggot and Marguerite Snow, who portray the leading characters in "The Eagle's Eye," have been aiding in the drive for the Third Liberty Loan in the northern part of New York State. They have made numerous speeches and taken part in rallies for the sale of bonds held in the vicinity of Ithaca, where the studios of the Whartons are located.

On Liberty Loan Day they occupied a booth in Ithaca, and it is said that the totals turned in by the two materially swelled the sale of bonds in Ithaca.

Lynch Selling Rights on "Carmen of the Klondike"

Announces Open Territory for Sale to State Right Buyers.

IN accordance with an arrangement entered into with the State Right Distributors, Incorporated, who are handling "Carmen of the Klondike," the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Incorporated, have secured rights to this production for the following territory, and are offering them for sale to state right buyers: New England, covering Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut; central territory, including Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Eastern Pennsylvania and District of Columbia; also the States of Michigan, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

"Carmen of the Klondike" is a seven-reel production, starring Clara Williams, written by Monte M. Katterjohn and directed by Reginald Barker. This picture played to excellent business for a week at the Strand Theater, New York, and the press reports are said to have been very favorable, mention being made of the vivid and realistic qualities of the production.

This feature is similar to "The Spoilers" and "The Flame of the Yukon." The plot deals with a girl who deserts vaudeville to go to Alaska and marry the man she loves. She meets with thrilling adventures and goes through the entire picture, believing that the man to whom she is betrothed is a traiter to her love.

The entire production is said to be tense with suspense and replete with thrilling action throughout and at the climax there occurs one of the most ferocious, raging, hand-to-hand battle which has ever been produced on the screen.

Paper, slides and other publicity material will be furnished to assist the exhibitor in the special promotion of this picture.

In addition to the territory mentioned, the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Incorporated, have also secured rights to this feature for the Southern States, which they will retain themselves.

Evans Tells of Making "Mickey" Lobby Displays

Prominent Los Angeles Photographer Now in Government Service, Talks of Making Panels for Western Import Feature.

NELSON EVANS, formerly an exchange man, now president of Evans Studio, a large photographic studio in Los Angeles, and an authority on photographic values, has entered the Government service for the duration of the war.

What is probably his last work before leaving the film industry, is the construction of a distinctive lobby display for "Mickey," soon to be released by the Western Import Company. In speaking of his work in this connection, Mr. Evans says:

"In making my selection of panels for 'Mickey,' I first studied the story and determined to cater to the demand for continuity, to perfect my lobby display, so that the story would be presented to the public pictorially and in chronological order, and further to combine with this phase the wonderful story which 'Mickey' possesses. This process of selection is applied so that an exhibitor can readily see that the lobby display will of itself be the greatest revenue getter for the box office that has ever been shown. It tells the story. It accentuates the values and renders the public in an expectant mood for what is to be shown. Curiosity and an ever-present desire to be entertained, coupled with this preliminary idea of the story, immediately arouse their desire to see 'Mickey.'

"In the same category, a campaign book on 'Mickey' has been constructed. It contains descriptive matter, in word and picture, pertaining to every phase of this photoplay. The various pages contain a synopsis of the story, statements and illustrations of the various elements, such as pathos, humor, love and adventure, facsimiles of posters, and all other advertising matter, means and methods by which the picture should be put before the public—and it will prove of wonderful value to the exhibitor in presenting 'Mickey.'"

"Reclaimed" Nearing Completion.

The seven-reel feature, "Reclaimed," representing the struggle of a soul between love and hate, is nearing completion. This picture is being produced by Director Harry McRae Webster for the Harry McRae Webster Productions, Incorporated, and Mr. Webster has been busy for the past week assembling the film. He states that within the next ten days an announcement will be made by the company as to when a private showing will be given.

At the present time, Director Webster is also busily engaged in making plans for the next production.

Mabel Julienne Scott, who appears in the leading feminine role in "Reclaimed," has left for New York for a few days' rest in Massachusetts.

Buzzes from the Bee-Hive.

Milton L. Cohen, general manager of the Bee-Hive exchange, has just closed a contract with the University theater on Fordham Road for Billy West comedies starting Monday, May 11, with "The Scholar."

Second Keeney Film Nearing Completion

"Marriage," Guy Bolton's First Screen Production, Ready, Except for Addition of Titles—Deals with Cheating at Cards.

BY cheating at cards, Eileen Spencer and Dolly Page succeed in living in luxury, at the same time enjoying the respect of society, but suddenly are threatened with exposure. Such is the dramatic situation which Guy Bolton, a successful American playwright, has presented in "Marriage," his maiden effort for the screen, which is the second picture of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, and is now complete except for the titles.

The women are members of a gay, bridge-playing coterie which gathers at the country place of Jack Spencer, a Wall street broker, husband of Eileen. The husband neglects his wife for business, and suddenly realizes that overwork has brought him almost to a state of blindness. Just at this time he fails in business.

Meantime the neglected wife has consented to elope with Carter Ballantyne, a novelist. Her husband returns unexpectedly. When she learns of his double misfortune remorse seizes her, and she dismisses Ballantyne.

Only an operation can save Spencer's eyesight. Dolly Page has lost funds intrusted to her husband. She asks Eileen for a loan. Eileen tells her that she is penniless. Dolly proposes that they go into partnership and get money by cheating at cards.

Six months later Eileen is installed in a luxurious home in New York. It was the thought of her husband that caused her to resort to practices which under ordinary circumstances she would have rejected with horror. Eileen has provided her husband with money to have a successful operation performed in Paris.

Ballantyne detects the cheating at cards, and threatens Eileen with exposure unless she yields to his entreaties. She determines to resist him, but Dolly pleads with her to prevent exposure for the sake of Dolly's unborn child. Eileen gives Ballantyne the key to her apartment, with the purpose of pleading with him. Her husband returns unexpectedly from Europe, and Ballantyne, entering the apartment, finds him there alone. The husband jumps at conclusions, and bows himself out as an intruder in his own home.

Eileen is to give a birthday party at nine o'clock that evening. Ballantyne threatens that unless she accedes to his proposal before that time he will expose her. She anticipates him, and as the guests assemble for the dinner accuses herself of being a card cheat. Her husband appears with a revolver to kill Ballantyne, and hears her confession. In a dramatic denouement a reconciliation is effected.

Zambreno of Unity Visits New York Ctty

Well-Known Chicago Exchange Man Purchases Rights on Ivan, W. H., and Triumph Productions.

FRANK ZAMBRENO, of Chicago, president of the Unity Photoplays Company, of that city, has returned home after a two weeks' visit to New York. His main object in making the trip was to procure special feature productions and arrange plans for a big spring campaign which is to be initiated under the able management of Mr. Minz, general manager of the Unity Photoplay interests.

Mr. Zambreno, who has been the owner of Unity Photoplays Company since its inception several years ago, is a well-known Chicago business man and a member of the firm of Zambreno Brothers, which enjoys an enviable reputation, and the Unity Photoplays Company is one of the foremost independent exchanges in the middle west.

This company has successfully handled the Ivan productions, "Her Surrender," "Two Men and a Woman" and "Babbling Tongues," which Mr. Zambreno states are in a great way responsible for the success of his company. He has also purchased on this trip distribution rights to the following additional Ivan features: "Sins of Ambition," "Married in Name Only" and "Life or Honor," for Illinois and Southern Wisconsin.

Among the other purchases made by Mr. Zambreno are "The Guilty Wife," a Triumph production, and the following reissues of the W. H. Productions Company: Five Bessie Barriscale features, 26 two-reel Keystone Comedies and 26 one and two-reel Charlie Chaplin films.

Mr. Zambreno, in addition to the other productions, is handling Jester Comedies in his territory and reports he is well satisfied with them, having booked the series in a number of houses in the loop district of Chicago as well as in other theaters.

Want to Show "Hearts of World" Sundays

New England Film Men Ask Authorities for Permission to Show Patriotic Film on Sabbath Nights—Some Interesting Discussion.

By R. N. Howe, 80 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—Morris Gest, of the theatrical firm of Elliott, Comstock & Gest, which is showing David Griffith's "Hearts of the World" at the Majestic theater for an indefinite run, has appealed to the Massachusetts State Police and to Secretary of War Baker for permission to show his picture on Sunday nights. Practically every moving picture house in the state is open on Sunday night for a so-called Sunday night concert. The concert program includes films carefully censored, and a musical program.

The state police have so far withheld permision to feature films to run on Sunday nights.

Mr. Gest in his appeal to Secretary of War Baker offered to turn over the entire first Sunday performance to the purchase of Liberty Bonds. Some objection was made to the showing of the film owing to the scenes showing the brutality of German officers and soldiers toward French women.

Mr. Gest explained that these scenes were authenticated by official reports, and that the actual reports of brutality far exceeded any scenes shown in "Hearts of the World."

Chief John H. Plunkett, of the Massachusetts State Police, who has authority in the matter of granting Sunday licenses, called Mr. Gest to a conference with local censors at the state house. The matter of showing the picture on Sundays was very thoroughly discussed.

Chief Plunkett said that he had no personal animus against the film, but that the law seemed to prohibit the exhibition of pictures depicting brutality, even though German brutality. Whether or not the scenes come within the meaning of the law he said he would determine by reviewing the picture.

S. W. Hand Back as Pathe Manager.

Stanley W. Hand, formerly New England manager of the World Pictures exchange, has returned to Boston as manager of the Pathe exchange. Mr. Hand is very well known in the New England territory, and has many friends in Boston. He succeeds Charles W. Perry.

Providence, R. I.—William Fox has just completed arrangements for the first showing of the film, "Les Miserables," which will open for its original run at the Shubert-Majestic theater. The deal was put over by M. C. Eberstein, a salesman of the Boston force under Harry Campbell.

Stoneham, Mass.—George A. Guilds, owner of the Stoneham theater, of this city, has taken over the Gorman theater in Framingham, Mass., and the Gardner theater at Gardner, Mass.

Thomas D. Soriero, general manager of the Park theater in Boston and the Strand theater in Lowell, gave a dinner to his forty employees of the Park theater at the Hotel Westminster this week. The affair took place in the large banquet hall of the hotel, and a very elaborate spread was arranged.

The guests included Mrs. Thomas D. Soriero and the prominent stockholders of the Park theater, as well as a number of theatrical and newspaper men.

Boston Business Notes.

The Gerard film, "My Four Years in Germany," is going big in Boston. The picture is now showing at the Tremont temple under the direction of R. L. Gorman, the New England manager of the film.

Twelve companies are now on the road showing at the following places: Manchester, N. H., week of April 29; Springfield, Mass., week of April 29; Waterbury, Mass., week of April 29; New London, Conn., week of April 29. The picture is not booked at the regular First National office, but has opened a special office at No. 216 Pleasant street, Boston.

Manager Joseph L. Roth, of the Boston Mutual, announces that their new efficiency man, O. R. Tanson, is soon to arrive from Chicago to install a new system of booking that will be of great benefit to the company.

Manager Roth also announces that the first William Russell picture, "Hearts or Diamonds," is now ready for release, and from the advance bookings received the picture is expected to go over big.

Capacity records were scored at most of the large moving picture houses that carried the film. In some cases the houses scored their top notch records for attendance in a single week.

Maritime Trade Letter

Famous Players Exchange Threatens to Move.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—I. Sosskins, general manager of the Famous Players, was in St. John on his way back to Toronto after a tour of the Maritime Provinces. Mr. Sosskins told your correspondent that it was very likely the St. John office would be moved to Halifax, as he felt the new tax pressed heavily upon the exchanges. It is hoped to have "The Blue Bird" here next month.

Notes and Personals.

Friends of W. H. Golding are delighted to welcome him back to the Imperial theater and to see him looking better for his rest.

A crowd outside the Unique theater showed that there was an attraction there, and upon questioning it was found that Charlie Chaplin in "Carmen" still continues to be popular. This is the third or fourth time it has filled the Unique.

Exhibitor David M. Richards Dies.

Fredericton, N. B.—After an illness lasting some months, David M. Richards died here on April 23. He was for many years manager of the Gem theater at Fredericton, and was a great favorite with all who knew him.

E. Bizar Goes Back to the States.

E. Bizar, of the Metro, has resigned his position at the St. John local office to return to the United States. He carries with him the good will of all the Maritime exhibitors who have had dealings with him. The Metro office has been a busy exchange during his regime. Mr. Bizar, I understand, is going back to exhibiting, has purchased the Colonial theater in Paterson, N. J., and is negotiating for another Main street house in that city.

A. J. Mack Improves Hill Theater.

A. Johnny Mack, the manager of the Hill theater, 100 Springfield avenue, Newark, has made so many improvements to his theater that one would hardly recognize the place as the former Odeon. Mr. Mack has had the entire lobby remodeled. Beautiful paintings and murals now adorn the walls, and the box office is really an artistic triumph. One of the latest improvements made by Mr. Mack is a huge electric sign. Mr. Mack is aiming to secure none but the best productions in his house, which has a capacity of 1,800. He ran "The Woman of the Law" May 3, and the Metro production, "My Own United States," May 6 and 7. By using progressive exhibitor methods, Mr. Mack is establishing a steady clientele.

Among New Jersey Theaters.

Elizabeth, N. J.—The Hippodrome, which is under lease to F. F. Proctor until October 6 of this year, has been sold to the Lincoln Investment Company, acting for the owners of a new theatrical circuit forming in New York. The deal was made through the office of Louis Kamm, Inc., of Newark, N. J. The theater, which contains 1,800 seats and twelve large boxes, in the auditorium and balcony, was erected in 1913.

Miss Madge Evans, World juvenile star, appeared personally May 2 at the Carlton theater, 138 Market street, Newark. Louis P. De Wolfe, the manager, was instrumental in obtaining her services.

Bayonne, N. J.—A special dispatch to the Newark Evening News conveys the information that 200 reels of finished film were stolen April 29, when thieves broke into the store house of the Universal Film at Avenue F and Forty-third street.

West Hoboken, N. J.—For the purpose of conducting amusement parks, the Dare Devil Amusement Company has been chartered here with an authorized capital of $50,000. Adolph Klingenstein is listed as statutory agent, with registered offices at 278 Palisade avenue. The incorporators are Maurice H. Cormack, A. S. Meixell and Mr. Klingenstein.

World Pictures in Bright New Offices

Philadelphia Branch Now in Its Own Building at 1315 Vine Street and Gives House Warming on May 2 With Brilliant Gathering.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The dedication of the new two-story World Pictures building, 1315-17 Vine street, into which the general staff of the local World Pictures exchange moved on Thursday, May 2, was a most auspicious occasion, and one which will be long remembered in filmdom. A lavish display of flowers, palms and ferns were found in every available place in the new offices and presented a most inviting sight. Officials and stars of World Pictures were there to greet and welcome the hundreds of visiting exhibitors who arrived from almost every part of the state.

Besides the flowery display, music supplied by an orchestra and plenty of cigars helped to make the affair thoroughly enjoyable for all.

Ricord Gradwell, president; Felix Feist, general manager; A. Van Horn, advertising manager; A. W. Witney, architect; Carlyne Blackwell and Montagu Love was the distinguished party who arrived from the home office in honor of the occasion and received a cordial reception from the exhibitors. Manager William R. Priest was time and again congratulated upon the well-planned and up-to-date exchange. Among those present were: Hon. H. Vare, State Senator; Frank H. Shattuck, Dr. E. Paxon Oberholzer and Mrs. E. C. Niver, of state board of censors; Lawrence W. Beggs, vice-president, and Frank W. Buhler, general manager of the Central Market Street Company; Commodore C. C. Guest, George Meeker, A. L. Einstein and H. Herkenrider, of the Stanley Company; Elliott J. Goldman, E. J. O'Keefe, of Atlantic City; J. Lubin, of Vinland; W. Hunt, of Wildwood; J. Cook, of Cerr and Shad, at Reading; L. Stuckert, of Allentown; C. Stamper and Fred G. Nixon Nirdlinger; Ben Shindler, Sam Blatt, C. Butler, M. Steifel, J. Hill, all of Reading, and representing Philadelphia were Mr. and Mrs. Corduff, George Naudasher, Jack Rosenthal, C. Morningstar, Mrs. J. Solomon, John Clark, Alvin Plough, C. Hexter, Charles Goodwin, Sam Blatt, Milton C. Work, Albert Brown, Charles Segall, O. M. Shore, Eugene Perry, Fred Whitney, Judge J. O'Donnell, J. McCready and F. V. Armato.

The new building occupies 36,000 square feet of space, while the complete equipment of the film exchange will cost $9,000 alone. Offices, projection room and shipping department are on the first floor and inspection rooms, advertising and the large vaults, having a capacity of 300,000 reels, are situated on the second. The city selling force comprises Jay Emanuel, Charles S. Goodwin, S. Schwartz, Miss Levenson, booker; Raymond Armstrong, William L. Wagner and B. Silverman.

Nixon-Nirdlinger Buys Theater.

Frederick G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, president of the Nixon-Nirdlinger Booking Agency, controling numerous theaters throughout Philadelphia, has purchased from Albert M. Greenfield, agents for the owners, the two-story theater property known as the West Allegheny Avenue Moving Picture theater, at the Southwest corner of 25th street and Allegheny avenue, for a price close to $50,000. The building stands on a lot 71 by 108 feet, is assessed at $25,000, and subject to a mortgage of $25,000.

"Metro Notes" to Come Bi-Weekly.

The Metro Picture Corporation has arranged to issue bi-weekly, a four-page leaflet entitled "Metro Notes," in order to help the exhibitors with their advertising. Advance news and the story of the latest releases, with advertising suggestions for same, will be the chief contents of this leaflet. Mats and cuts of all the stars and scenes appearing with the notes are free of charge, and will be available to the exhibitors upon request. Maurice L. Meyers, recently appointed publicity manager for the local Metro exchange, will edit these notes, and will take charge of all other publicity. "Revelation," with Alla Nazimova, proved a masterful production, and succeeded in drawing a record breaking attendance at the Victoria theater, where it was shown during the week of April 22.

Maurice Rose Wins Three Chevrons.

Maurice Rose, former poster clerk at the local Mutual exchange, who enlisted in Uncle Sam's Army last July, has been recently promoted from private to sergeant.

Personal Notes of Interest.

Charles Kellner, of the Brunswick theater, Franklin and Norris streets, will present "For the Freedom of the World" during the week of April 29, and announces that the Leo Feist Quartette, which has also been engaged during the same week, will render appropriate songs.

The Family theater, one of Alexander R. Boyd's pretty houses, under the able management of Joseph Murphy, has been recently equipped with an 8-foot typhoon fan, which has improved the ventilation in this house 100 per cent.

Jack Rosenthal, of the Model theater; Ben Shindler, of the Ridge Avenue; L. Miller, Amusement Parlor, and J. Wolf, of the Empress, have turned in excellent reports during the past week to the Motion Picture Liberty Loan Committee for the sale of bonds.

Film Exchanges Move Quarters.

BALTIMORE, MD.—The Baltimore Film Exchange, which is managed by P. Oletzky, and the Variety Pictures Corporation, have moved. The old headquarters of the Mutual Film exchange, on the second floor of 412 East Baltimore street, has now been taken over by the Baltimore Film exchange, which handles the Universal subjects, formerly on the third floor of the same building. Extensive improvements have been made in the second floor and the grand opening was held during the week of May 6. The former location of the Baltimore Film exchange on the third floor will be occupied by the Variety Pictures Corporation after May 6, of which the local heads are J. Louis Rome, president, and Milton Caplon, general manager. Mr. Rome has returned from a trip to New York in the interests of the Variety, and it is understood that he has booked several big state rights features to be released through this company in Maryland. They will also handle the Jester comedies. J. L. Whittle, a well known figure in Baltimore film circles, has joined the Variety, to act as their representative to travel and has just gone on a trip through southern Maryland.

The Aladdin to Be Reopened.

On Saturday, May 4, the Aladdin theater, 930-2 West Baltimore street, was reopened to the public under the management of C. E. Nulte, who also pilots the affairs of the Belnord and Linwood theaters. All three theaters are now under the control of the Greater Baltimore Theater Co. The Aladdin has been completely renovated and improved, and it is understood that they have booked some Paralta features.

Pittsburgh's Olympic Again Brightens

Exhibitor Antanopolous Reopens Much Improved Theater—Now Has Seats for 1,400 and a Splendid Lobby.

By E. J. McGurty, 455 Union Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The Olympic theater on Fifth avenue, downtown, Pittsburgh, opened Monday, April 22, after having been closed for enlarging and remodeling over two months. It is practically a new theater. It now seats about 1,400 on the main floor, and has entrances on Diamond street, as well as Fifth avenue, the theater proper extending an entire block in length. The lobby has been entirely transformed, giving that spacious, spendid effect which makes it the equal of any theater in the district.

The opening was most auspicious. Crowds entered continuously all day Monday to view William Farnum in "Ever Ready," which was the attraction for the entire week. The policy of the house will be uniformly 20 cents, with war tax additional, and all pictures to play at least a week.

Mr. Antanopolous, who owns the theater, has been working day and night for some weeks to see that every detail should be right for the first day.

Downtown Pittsburgh, which for years has lagged behind the other large cities in the country in picture theaters, today boasts of two theaters devoted entirely to pictures, the new Grand and the Olympic, which are the equal of any in America.

Many Big Features in Pittsburgh.

Pictures "were king" in Pittsburgh the week of April 22. The legitimate theaters were invaded by two immensely popular attractions. The Nixon theater had Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" at popular prices, and the Lyceum has been taken over by "The Kaiser," which is turning people away at 25 and 50 cents. Both these pictures from all appearances are good for extended runs, and the Vitagraph's star attraction, "Over the Top," takes possession of the Pitt theater on May 7. When the Government picture, "The Remaking of the Nation," played the Pitt a short time ago it was estimated that over 100,000 people had witnessed the performances in the three weeks' run. The evidence from all of the larger towns in the district points to the supremacy of "big" picture attractions. The Hippodrome, of McKeesport, owned by the John P. Harris circuit, which has been devoted to vaudeville for some time, has discontinued its policy, and is running pictures for week runs exclusively. This house seats approximately 1,500 people. "The Kaiser" and "My Four Years in Germany" have been extensively booked in the towns surrounding Pittsburgh.

New Exchange Building.

A new exchange building is rapidly nearing completion on Ferry street, which was the former home of practically all exchanges in the city. This will be undoubtedly the finest exchange building so far attempted in the Smoky City. It is known as the Baird building, and will house the bulk of the exchanges in the city. Mr. Lande, of the Quality Film exchange, has taken over the entire building, and has arranged to lease space as required by the other exchanges. The building is modern in construction, and will comply in every detail with the strict provisions of the building code as devised by the council. Space has been arranged for by the Kleine System, Weiland (Standard), Premier pictures, formerly of the Lyceum building, etc. Mr. Lande will occupy three floors of the building.

Many Films Reported Lost.

An epidemic of "lost films" has hit Pittsburgh, and for some time single reels have been finding their way out of legitimate channels in a peculiar manner. The latest loss of this kind is a print of the "Crisis," which disappeared from the messenger service at 938 Penn avenue. The matter was reported immediately to police headquarters. No remedy has yet been found for this process of losing films, which is costing exchanges a great deal of money.

An Exhibitor in Trouble.

An unfortunate incident is reported in the press locally that an exhibitor in the Mt. Washington district has been arrested in connection with a fire which destroyed his theater on Sunday morning a week ago. It is also said that he is charged with not paying his war tax on receipts. An exhibitor in Monaca is alleged to have made unpatriotic remarks, and was mobbed and forced to kiss the flag.

Patch Exchange Sells Out.

The First National exchange has taken over the big subjects which the Fort Pitt (Patch) exchange have exploited in the territory, and the exchange end of Mr. Patch's business thus comes to a close. This adds such subjects as "Civilization," "Italian Battlefront," "Garden of Allah," etc., to the splendid features of the First National office here.

U. P. T. of A. Opens Pittsburgh Office.

The United Pictures Theaters of America have opened a local office in the Renshaw building, with Mr. Erickson, formerly of the local Pathe, in charge.

Manager Tarbell Promoted.

The Vitagraph exchange here has undergone some changes in its personnel. Mr. Chatburn, the manager, has been transferred to Chicago, and Mr. Tarbell, who has been connected with the local office for some time, is the new manager. Mr. Krugh, formerly of the Kleine System, is a new addition to the sales force.

Exhibitor Kadonner Dies.

Mr. Kadonner, of the Liberty theater in Wheeling, the newest house in the Stogy City, died recently of pneumonia. The theater was closed for two days in honor of his death.

Exhibitor Joins Kleine Road Force.

Mr. Griffith, who formerly managed the beautiful Arcadia theater on East Ohio street in Pittsburgh, owing to the fact that the house was sold by the owners, has joined the Kleine road force. Mr. Griffith is an able man, and has had years of experience in the selling field, and is chock-full of original and novel ideas. Much is to be expected of him in his new position.

Mutual Film Moves.

The Mutual Film has moved from Penn avenue in the lower district to the Sauer building, at 804 Penn avenue. They occupy the first two floors, and the exchange quarters have been appointed in the best of style. The upper floor is devoted entirely to posters, and the lower contains the offices, projection rooms, etc. Mr. Rippard, the manager, reports that no difficulty was had in the removal.

With Pennsylvania Exhibitors.

Pittsburgh. — The Columbia theater, downtown, Pittsburgh, is now managed by Charles Flarity, brother of Fred Flarity, of General Film and Jewel fame. This is one of the smaller theaters in the downtown section which, because of its location and attractions shown, is getting business. The house was managed by Mr. Marion.

Pittsburgh.—Mr. Demas, of the Minerva theater in the downtown section, is following the lead set by the Grand and Olympic, and has commenced enlarging and remodeling operations on an extensive scale. Mr. Demas may be closed for a short time, but will continue his pictures as long as possible. He is one of the oldest exhibitors on Fifth avenue.

New Castle.—The First National Bank, of New Castle, has purchased the Regent and Star theaters in New Castle, Pa., from Marks and Freeman. Mr. Marks was connected with the theaters in New Castle for 13 years, and had been a prominent factor in the town.

Ridgeway.—The Opera House in Ridgeway, Pa., which has been under the management of Mr. Long, who owned this theater and a house at Johnsonburg, has been purchased by Messrs. McCartney and Johnson, of Punxsutawney. They now own the Majestic theater of the latter city, and Mr. Johnson, in addition to his theater interests, is in the confectionery business at Punxsutawney. The house is undergoing complete renovation and remodeling, as well as the installation of entirely new mechanical equipment.

Oakland.—The Oakland theater in Oakland, a subdivision of Pittsburgh, is being opened by Mr. Pyros, a restaurant man in town. This house has been closed for some time, having formerly been managed by the Rowland-Clark group of theaters. The house seats about 400, and will be remodeled and the name changed.

New Kensington.—The Strand theater at New Kensington is now under the management of B. Dattola, a prosperous exhibitor of Belle Vernon, where, in addition to his picture interests, he has a large fruit and confectionery business.

Wilkinsburg.—The Colonial theater at Wilkinsburg has been remodeled and repainted throughout. This is one of the chain of Rowland theaters.

Weirton, W. Va.—The Rex theater at Weirton, W. Va., has changed hands, and is now under the management of Mr. Rabinowitz.

Pittsburgh.—There is a growing tendency on the part of fraternal organizations throughout the western end of Pennsylvania to build picture theaters. The P. O. S. of A. is the pioneer in this field in this section, having theaters at Huntington, Altoona, Roaring Springs, and several other towns. The newest venture is the Odd Fellows at Philipsburg. They are building a splendid structure, which will be rented out, it is said. Philipsburg already has a theater which cost over a quarter of a million built by Congressman Rowland, of that district.

Cleveland Trade Letter

By M. A. Malaney, 607 Belmont Bldg., Cleveland, O.

Pettijohn in Cleveland for New Plan.

CLEVELAND, O.—Charles C. Pettijohn, who is now engaged in organizing a new booking circuit, the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, was in Cleveland, Tuesday, April 30, outlining his plan to the Exhibitors' League of that city.

Mr. Pettijohn said he had the financial backing of a big concern, and had outlined a plan that ought to interest any exhibitor. He wanted 125 days of booking for Ohio, and wanted the exhibitors to organize a corporation to handle at least one picture every two weeks. The capital is to be $10,000, and shares would sell at $10 each. This money would be divided, part to be used in operating expenses of the Ohio corporation, and the balance to be placed in a bank to guarantee the 125 days on each picture.

No money is to be paid for the pictures until the exhibitors use them, and each exhibitor pays when the film is delivered for his use. His check would be sent to New York to apply on account of the picture. After the 125 days would be played and paid for the excess received on additional rentals is the profit of the corporation and the booking circuit.

Most of the exhibitors liked the idea and President Henry Lustig called a special meeting for May 3 to take further action.

Many State Right Films in Cleveland.

State rights pictures had their inning in Cleveland the week ending May 4.

The two newest pictures owned by Leon D. Netter and Sol Lesser, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, which were "The Gain of Dust" and "Carmen of the Klondike," had first showings, playing to big business, and "Raffles," owned in Ohio by the Ivan company, Belmont building, also had its opening.

The Mall and Alhambra played "The Gain of Dust"; the Standard played "Carmen of the Klondike," and "Raffles" was at the Stillman. The opening day's business was just fair, owing to the rainy weather, but as the week went on business was fine.

The first Louise Glaum picture on the Paralta plan was shown for the week at the Metropolitan. It was "An Alien Enemy," and proved a great success.

The big D. W. Griffith picture, "Intolerance," had its first showing in the city at the Opera House, and from the business done it was expected to stay a second week—perhaps longer.

Other pictures which had successful openings in Cleveland that week were Constance Talmadge in "The Shuttle"; William Farnum in "Rough and Ready," and Charles Richman in "Over There."

More Theater Changes in Ohio.

With the coming of spring there have been many changes of management of theaters in northern Ohio, as well as some combinations.

In Cleveland, Sam Barck, of the Market Square theater, has bought the Center theater on West 25th street.

Joseph Leavy, who came to Cleveland recently from Cincinnati and bought the Moonlight theater, has purchased the Daisy theater on Central avenue from Ed. Cohn. It is a peculiar coincidence that Leavy and Barck are competitors, and both bought their second theaters the same week.

Pavlides & Co. have bought the Dreamland theater, Massillon, O., and Sam Linn has purchased the interests of Mr. Quimby in the Imperial theater, Zanesville, O.

The Liberty theater, Canton, a handsome new house, will be opened about the 10th of May.

More Records Broken by "Kaiser"

"The Kaiser" is certainly shattering records in northern Ohio. Recently it played three days at the Columbia theater, East Liverpool, and broke every record in this house, which has been opened for 14 years. The first day the attendance was 4,100.

At the Warren opera house, Warren, O., "The Kaiser" also broke every record held for that house for patriotic pictures.

Lost Chaplin Films Discovered.

The mystery of the disappearance of several Chaplin and other features from the General Film Company exchange, Cleveland, has apparently been cleared up. At least the exchange officials found most of their films in a house in the east end of the city, where an employee of another film exchange had resided.

Manager Conant, of the General, said that he would not be surprised if there would be one or two arrests as a result of the disclosure.

Manager Stafford's Mother Dies.

The Stafford theater, Niles, O., was closed three days recently owing to the death of Manager Jack Stafford's mother. She was a prominent resident of Niles, and will be missed by many people.

"Eagle's Eye" in Omaha.

"Bob" Shirley, manager of Muse theater, Omaha, reports that "The Eagle's Eye" is the greatest creator of new patrons for a theater that he has ever encountered, and that at showing of first episodes he filled his house at matinees and turned many away at night.

Fox Film Opens Exchange in Buffalo

Western New York Office Moved From Syracuse to 209 Franklin Street, Buffalo—Thomas A. Brady Will Be in Charge.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 N. Elmwood Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Another feature of Buffalo's development as an important film centre was the recent opening of the brand new exchange of the Fox Film Corporation at 209-211 Franklin street. The company's Syracuse headquarters have been closed and transferred to Buffalo.

George Jermain, Syracuse manager and in charge of the Buffalo branch for the past few days, went to Washington, D. C., as Fox manager, May 8. The manager of the Fox exchange, Buffalo, is Thomas A. Brady, formerly in charge of the company's Atlanta, Ga., branch and later in charge of the requisition department of the home office. All details of the opening of the Buffalo exchange have been in charge of Clayton P. Sheehan, special representative of the company. It is expected that Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation and Allied Industries, will be in Buffalo to attend the formal opening of this exchange later in May. This is "Winnie's" home town, where he began as a newspaper reporter. Buffalonians take pride in his knack of putting over live publicity, which they say has assumed an international scope. "Winnie" is a member of the Buffalo Press Club.

The Fox exchange occupies an entire building. Facing the street is the manager's office and the general office. Back of the manager's sanctum is a projection room, 40 x 20 feet, with two Power's 6-B machines. New rugs, new furniture and large, stained glass windows add to the attractive appearance of the offices. Eighteen oil painting of Fox stars give a rich, artistic tone to the exchange. Each painting is 5 x 10 feet. At the front of the exchange is a large extension sign of striking appearance. Another feature is a complete telephone system. The poster and shipping departments occupy 2,500 square feet. The fireproof vault is of solid concrete, eighteen inches thick, and is supported by solid concrete columns. To facilitate shipping there is a rear entrance to the exchange. The Buffalo staff includes William Schmidt and E. H. Arnold, road representatives, and George Hallett, booker. Jay Gove, general manager of advertising and publicity for the Fox Corporation, was a Buffalo visitor Sunday.

Daniel J. Savage with First National.

Daniel J. Savage, a pioneer film man, who would need a counting machine to keep track of the numbers of his friends among the exhibitors and exchange men in the Buffalo territory, has been appointed manager of the First National Film Exchange, Inc., 145 Franklin street, Buffalo. His staff includes Howard Brink, road man; Miss F. M. Luehman, secretary, and Al Barnett, inside representative.

The First National is one of the latest acquisitions to Buffalo's many exchanges. The location is on the ground floor and is central, well-lighted and spacious. There is a large show window bedecked with palms and artistic advertising. New rugs and furnishings give the place a spic and span appearance.

C. Lang Cobb Visits Buffalo.

C. Lang Cobb, special representative of the distribution department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is a visitor at the company's Buffalo headquarters.

"I'm here to standardize the exchange and install a new manager," said Mr. Cobb.

Current for Signs Open Again.

Buffalo film men have been notified by local Fuel Director Elliott C. McDougal of the suspension of the lightless Thursday and Sunday order of the Federal Fuel Administrator. This places these two nights in a class with all others, and electric current may now be used for advertising signs and other display purposes outside the theaters every night from half an hour after sunset until 11 o'clock. The telegram received by Mr. McDougal, April 29, was the first official confirmation of a Washington dispatch of last week, telling of the suspension of the order.

MORE BALTIMORE ITEMS.

F. C. Weber Aids Orphan Home.

Frederick Clement Weber, manager of the Gertrude McCoy theater, Fulton avenue and Baker street, is always ready and willing to help a worthy cause, and on Sunday night, April 28, he arranged an excellent program of motion pictures as a benefit performance to help raise $100,000 to keep St. Elizabeth Home for Orphans in operation. "The Little Patriot" was the feature for the occasion.

New Tax Rates in Maryland.

Cumberland, Md.—The tax rate for Garrett County has been fixed by the Commissioners at the rate of $1.25 per $100 for 1918.

Towson, Md.—The County Commissioners for Baltimore County have fixed the tax rate for this county for 1918 at 92 cents on $100 assessments, which is 14 cents lower than last year.

Out-of-Town Items of Interest.

Grafton, W. Va.—J. W. Bush, the popular manager of the Grand theater, will soon put on the O. D. (Olive Drab) and become a member of the fighting forces of Uncle Sam. It is understood that he is expecting a summons almost any day.

Frostbury, Md.—Word now comes down the line that Lawrence Hitchens, who has managed the affairs of the Opera House for some time, has accepted a position with the Government under Dr. Garfield of the Food Administration. According to the latest advices Mr. Hitchens will be located in Cumberland as fuel regulator in that city.

Clarksburg, W. Va.—According to the plans now being made by Jack Marks, who will manage the new Opera House, now nearing completion, this beautiful playhouse will be thrown open to the public on Decoration Day. Mr. Marks is making plans for a brilliant opening.

Personal Items in Baltimore.

Hernon Edmonds, assistant manager of the General Film exchange in Baltimore, who is very popular with the film men in this territory, has been discharged from military service owing to his eyes, but he has been accepted for clerical duties, and he expects very shortly to receive a summons calling him to new duties.

Julius Rabinowitz, manager of the Comedy theater, 412 East Baltimore street, has not been seen at his old stand for some weeks, owing to pneumonia. It is understood that he is now recuperating and will shortly make his appearance again in Film Row.

Douglas Fairbands, in "Mr. Fix-It," at the Parkway, and Constance Talmadge, in "The Shuttle," at the New theater, proved big drawing cards during the week of April 22.

Magnet Buys More Prints.

Magnet Film Exchange reports that on account of demand for bookings on the Hart reissues "The Two Gun Man," in "The Bargain" and "The Bandit and the Preacher" they have been obliged to order additional prints and that in many cases theaters have made application for repeat bookings. Also that the Keystone reissues are being booked solid.

Allens Getting a Long Chain of Theaters

Canadian Picture Men Have Bought a Theater a Week for the Past Six Weeks—Ben Cronk Has Been Chosen Supervising Director.

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—The Allens of Toronto, controlling the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., a chain of large theaters in Western Canada and other interests, have been buying moving picture theaters in Eastern Canada at the rate of one per week for the past six weeks or two months.

They bought the Beaver theater, Toronto, as a second-run house to their Allen theater, then followed the Temple theater, Hamilton; Majestic theater, London, and the Grand theater, Kitchener. They also secured an option on a well known theater in Montreal, while the Regent theater, Ottawa, is another theater in the East which has been acquired definitely.

The policy has been to permit the management of the various houses to remain in charge of the theaters after their purchase, but a number of the theaters are being remodeled at considerable expense. In the case of the Temple, Hamilton, Majestic, London, and Grand, at Kitchener, no changes will probably be made for several months, or until such time as the value of the theater under Allen control has been determined. W. Eckerdt has been engaged to redecorate the Beaver, Toronto, and Regent, Ottawa.

The Grand theater, Kitchener, is the latest Allen purchase. It is a theater of 1,000 seats and was owned by H. Jennings, formerly an exhibitor and hotel-keeper of Toronto.

With the acquisition of this string of theaters, the Allens have appointed Ben Cronk as supervising director of the houses. Cronk has been in charge of the Allen theater, Toronto, and was formerly manager of the Allen theater, Calgary. Al. J. Miville, formerly of Milwaukee and Chicago, has succeeded Mr. Cronk as manager of the Toronto Allen. Miville has a good film record. He has been manager of the Triangle branch at Milwaukee and was with the Famous Players and Triangle in Chicago and with the Mutual and General in Detroit. He came to Toronto a few months ago as a recruit for the Canadian army, but was discharged from the service. He resided in Toronto some years ago.

William Allen Takes New Birth.

William Allen, formerly attached to the Toronto Kleine office, has joined the staff of Superfeatures, Ltd., Toronto, Canadian distributors of many state rights features, Foursquare releases and several serials including "The Eagle's Eye."

Crowd Could Sample Film from Street.

Manager Piton of the Globe theater, Toronto, gave local film devotees a new treat on April 26 when he showed portions of the current attraction on a small transparent screen on the front of his theater. In other words, a crowd saw a small portion of the show from the sidewalk and, after tasting the sample, many of the outsiders became insiders. A miniature screen of transparent material was placed in a display window of the theater front and interesting parts of the feature, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," were projected from a small machine to this screen from time to time. The small projection machine was placed in the manager's office and the film was reversed so that it could be read from the opposite side of the screen.

A great crowd soon gathered and the police reserves were called out to assist the traffic. An iteresting detail in connection with this public exhibition is that the Canadian Power Controller has so restricted the use of exterior lights that the streets are almost black at nights. On this account, the projection of the picture on the street screen was very clear and could be seen from a considerable distance.

The feature was also being shown at the Rialto theater, but Manager Piton found time to give the free show before sending the reels to the other downtown house.

Allen Theater Entertains Orphans.

The children of some dozen orphan institutions in Toronto were the guests of the Allen theater at a special matinee on Wednesday morning, April 25, for a presentation of the current attraction, "The Blue Bird." About 1,300 children were brought to the theater in automobiles and private street cars for the show. The arrangements were made through Mrs. L. A. Hamilton of Toronto, who has interested herself in this charitable work. This lady is with the Local Council of Women. This was the third special children's matinee at the Allen theater for this feature within a week.

Legatees of Kreitner Get Theater Stock.

The will of the late John Kreitner of Buffalo shows that the deceased held considerable stock in Shea's theater, Toronto, and the Hippodrome, Toronto. The late Mr. Kreitner held 767 shares of the capital stock of Shea's theater, valued at $38,350; 150 preferred shares in the capital stock of the Hippodrome, amounting to $15,000, and 500 shares of common stock in the latter theater, valued at $15,000. Several sons and daughters residing in Buffalo receive bequests of the stock by the will which has just been probated in Toronto.

Little Rita Also Makes a Hit.

Little Rita Halarth, of Toronto, nine-year-old daughter of Mr. Halgarth of the Regent theater, has made a name for herself as an artiste because of her ability in reciting Kipling's "Lest We Forget" at local theaters where the Metro feature of the same title has been presented. Rita Halgarth followed Rita Jolivet at the Regent theater during the first run of the picture in that house and she also appeared at the Madison theater for its second run during the week of April 29.

Notes of the Trade.

Jack Dunlop, of the Canadian Universal, Toronto, has acquired the Peter Pan theater, 1969 Queen Street East, Toronto. Universal pictures are being used exclusively by Manager Dunlop.

Charles A. Dentelbeck, president of Toronto Local 173, Moving Picture Operators, is once more in charge of the projection room of the Strand theater, Toronto. Sam Wells, vice-president of the Toronto local, has succeeded President Dentelbeck at the Allen theater. Wells was formerly at the Crown theater, Gerrard and Broadview avenue.

Color was added to the presentation of "The Suspect," starring Anita Stewart, at the Regent theater, Toronto, during the week of April 29 by Manager W. G. Mitchell through the giving of a Russian dancing act by a company of Russian dancers. A programme of Russian selections was also presented by the big Regent orchestra under the direction of John Arthur. Another interesting local detail was a news reel showing a recent Sons of the Soil Parade in Toronto and gardening views.

The Midway theater, Montreal, far famed because of its lobby displays, has been further enhanced by the installation of a complete set of brass poster frames and fixtures.

No Big Rush at the Louisville Theaters

Camp Taylor Boys Are Not Filling Every Show as Some Expected Last Year and Several of the Projected Houses Have Been Dropped.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—While buiness with the Louisville moving picture theaters is normal and as good if not slightly better than ever before at this period of the year, the theaters are not getting the big rush of military business from Camp Taylor that was the case a few weeks or months ago. There have been several reasons for this, one being that thousands of men have been transferred or sent abroad, while the later drafts have not filled the camp up, with the result that there is a considerably smaller number of men stationed at the camp than was the case. Again the military authorities in an effort to train men more rapidly and take advantage of better weather have cut down the amount of time that the men are allowed off duty and only twenty-five per cent. of the men are now allowed off at one time, this resulting in much smaller business for the theaters. The changed conditions have reduced business and, as a result, have killed several projects for new theaters in Louisville. It is claimed that the city could hardly support a larger number of theaters under present conditions, while, on the other hand, additional theaters would make it much harder for everyone to secure film service.

Old Union Makes Trouble for Theatre.

Stagehands, musicians and operators belonging to the former Alliance of Stagehands and Operators, Louisville, have been giving Joe Steurle some little annoyance at the Walnut theater during the past few days, as a result of ticketing the crowds passing the theater with cards claiming that the house is unfair to organized labor. Many months ago the operators withdrew from the old union, which included the stagehands, and formed a new union, which the exhibitors have been getting along with nicely. However, the Alliance of Stagehands held a few of the operators, who have been aiding in a steady war against houses which will not accept the demands of the stagehands.

Must Make Admission Price Clear.

T. L. McNutt, collector of internal revenue, has received instructions which he has passed on to the moving picture theater operators, to the effect that cards diplayed stating admission and war tax as being ten, fifteen or twenty cents, are not permissible, and that the exhibitor must show his price clearly, and also the war tax. Several theaters in western Kentucky have been displaying cards reading "Admission 15 cents—including war tax."

Business Notes from Kentucky.

The Alamo theater, Louisville, is getting ready for hot weather and has recently placed contracts for two motors of fifteen horsepower each to operate exhaust fans. Last summer the house got slightly warm upon a few occasions, but with the additional fans the company expects to be able to keep down the temperature.

Covington, Ky.—The Lakewood Amusement Co., of Covington, capital $25,000, has been incorporated by Fred W. Strautmann, William Strautmann and Frank W. Burgoyne.

Winchester, Ky.—Another suit has been filed in connection with the Pastime theater disaster, this suit being for $30,000, by Bruce Henry in connection with the death of his son.

Central City, Ky.—D. B. Lam, Jr., secretary of the Gish Theater Co., has announced that the theater company has dissolved as a corporation and has sold or disposed of all of its property and assets under direction of the board of directors.

Dayton Trade Letter

By P. J. G., Dayton Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

L. C. Pollack No Longer with Metro Co.

DAYTON, OHIO.—Many local exhibitors are expressing regret that the popular (I vouch for it) L. C. Pollack has departed from the local film world for the time being at least. Mr. Pollack announced that he had resigned from the Metro company at Cincinnati, with whom he had worked as road salesman covering the Dayton territory. Mr. Pollack is a man that you can't help liking. Mr. Pollack made quite a bid for fame with Dayton managers when he installed at the rooms of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League a complete set of Metro features, numbering about eight shows, for the use of exhibitors who were disappointed in the non-arrival of films from Cincinnati, which, sorry to say, happens frequently here. The Metro films were used often by local theaters and went a long way toward establishing Metro and L. C. Pollack as recognized factors in the local film world.

Higher Admissions Looked For in Dayton and Suburbs.

Many of the Dayton suburban managers have informed the writer time and again that it would be necessary for them to raise on their admission prices if they wanted to stay in business. The writer chanced into a suburban theater on a recent Saturday evening. It was crowded, and people were waiting in line outside. To the average laymen it would seem as though prosperity had come in full measure to this theater. The manager in question, however, told me that this was the only night in the week that business was good, with the exception of Sunday, which is a guaranteed winner. This manager said that packing the crowd in on one night a week did no good, but that if this could be done at fifteen or twenty cents it would amount to a neat profit.

"If all the downtown houses would go over ten cents neighborhood exhibitors could raise. Several months ago Al Kinzeler at the Elite raised prices on a very popular picture that had played at a downtown house for ten cents. Many of his customers noticed the difference in price and wasted no time in telling Al about it. If the downtown house that played the film had charged fifteen or twenty-five cents for the picture (which they can easily get) it would have been much better for Kinzeler. The Apollo here gets fifteen cents frequently for program pictures, and this is quite a help to neighborhood exhibitors. Many exhibitors here in the suburbs were pleased at the announcement that the new Dayton theater would play to a top price of twenty-five and possibly thirty-five cents."

Dayton Pick-ups of Interest.

Bert Fiala is redecorating some parts of his Alhambra theater, which is truly Dayton's representative suburban theater. Bert Fiala claims he has a patron who thinks that Bill Hart is kept under lock and key when not working. Sounds like East End stuff.

P. S.—Bert is to give lectures on Thursday evenings hereafter on the lives of some of our prominent actors.

Julius Leopold was seen enjoying the wonders of the new Dayton theater on an inspection tour—so to speak—Mark Gates saw him—the writer escorted "The King" through the theater.

The writer is to help Mark Gates put over the new Dayton theater. One of the Dayton papers remarks that "'Mr. Gray' is to be connected with the new Dayton theater." Thanks for that.

Walter Davis, formerly of the "Civilization" road company, also later with "The Italian Battle Front" pictures and who just returned from New York City, has signed as advertising agent of the new Dayton theater.

Cincinnati Operators Demand an Increase

Ask $4 More for Working on Sundays and Exhibitors Are Considering a Favorable Answer as Living Costs Are Higher.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—A demand has been made by members of the local branch of the Moving Picture Operators' Union for an increase of $4 for working on Sunday, and the demand is being considered, with prospects favoring the granting of the demand, by members of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of the Chamber of Commerce, as the exhibitors are aware of the increased cost of living, and are inclined to recognize the needs of their employees. At the same time it is pointed out that the operators are now working under a contract which does not expire until 1919, under which they are averaging from $17.50 to $22.50 a week. President F. L. Emmert, of the Exhibitors' League, appointed the following committee to take the matter up with labor officers for adjustment: A. J. Hettesheimer, chairman; I. Libson, John Weinig, N. S. Hastings, I. W. McMahan, Henry Hoefle, Charles Weigel, John Meis, and George Wilson.

Burglars Blow Family Theater Safe.

An astonishingly bold robbery, one of the first from which a picture theater has suffered in Cincinnati for a long time, was perpetrated on the evening of April 28 at the Family theater on Vine street by three men who entered the office at about midnight and blew the safe open. According to Manager Libson the loss might run anywhere from $2,000 to $2,500, as the safe contained the receipts for Saturday afternoon and evening and all of Sunday's business. The men entered the theater on the pretext of searching for a purse which they said had been lost by a woman containing $150. The porter attempted to resist them, but he was bound and placed in the basement, and two maids cleaning the theater were locked in an anteroom after being frightened into silence at the point of a revolver.

"Pershing's Crusaders" in Cincinnati.

Cincinnati, after "going over the top" with Liberty Loan subscriptions of about $25,000,000, 25 per cent. in excess of the amount allotted, in less than two weeks, had the advantage of two splendid patriotic pictures in the last week of the drive to assist in the desired object of making the total subscriptions not less than $30,000,000. At the Grand opera house the official United States Army war pictures, "Pershing's Crusaders," with seven reels of actual war views, showing the American Army abroad and in the training camps, opened a week's engagement on April 29. The initial performance was graced by the presence of the mayor and other city and Federal officials who spoke on behalf of the loan and of other activities in aid of the Government. The picture is being sent out by the Committee of Public Information, and is much the best of any collection of the sort which has yet been seen in Cincinnati. The photography itself is the work of members of the Army Signal Corps and of Navy photographers, assisted by official Government cameramen accompanying the forces in the field.

At the same time a week's engagement of "The Unbeliever," the official recruiting picture of the United States Marine Corps, was begun at the Walnut theater, with all of the incidents of the week in charge of the Cincinnati recruiting staff of the Marines, headed by Capt. L. W. Putnam. Manager Libson turned the house over to the Marines, with indications of permission to go as far as they liked. Patriotic decorations prevailed during the week, while the military flavor of the picture was powerfully aided by the presence of a strong detail of Marines in full uniform and equipment, and of details from the Cincinnati Home Guard regiment. A trench scene was placed on the ample stage of the Walnut in front of the screen, with Marines manning the positions precisely as they do at the front, and each day was designated by some name with a special appeal in order to stimulate interest in the recruiting drive, in the bond sales, and in other patriotic movements.

W. S. Wessling Made District Manager.

W. S. Wessling, who has for some months been manager of the Cincinnati Pathe office, has been promoted to the more responsible position of district manager, with a wide territory under his charge, including a considerable section of the Middle West and the Southwest. He has been succeeded in charge of the Cincinnati territory by S. B. Chase. Mr. Wessling is now endeavoring to secure the permission of the powers that be to make his general headquarters in Cincinnati instead of in Chicago, as he is thoroughly at home in the Queen City, and dislikes to move, besides feeling that he can cover the territory quite as well from Cincinnati as from Chicago.

"The Re-Making" at the Olympic.

The first showing in Cincinnati of the official pictures showing the training of National Army troops in the cantonments which were made at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, O., will be had at the Olympic theater immediately following the close of the regular season there. The Olympic, a popular burlesque house, has never shown pictures save as minor incidents of its program, and the announcement by Manager Harry H. Hedges of an engagement of two weeks for the training film, "The Remaking of a Nation," therefore has more than ordinary interest, as it may presage a regular season of pictures there. The Red Cross will benefit by the engagement.

W. J. Corcoran Dies in Los Angeles.

Many Cincinnatians, especially in moving picture circles, learned with regret a few days ago of the sudden death in Los Angeles of Wm. J. Corcoran, a wealthy Cincinnati manufacturer, with a half interest in the handsome new Casino theater, at Clark and Linn streets. Mr. Corcoran was the victim of a heart attack. He was worth in the neighborhood of a million dollars, made principally in his business of manufacturing automobile lamps.

Will Watch Operating Booths Closely.

As a result of a thorough inspection of moving picture theaters in Cincinnati by a representative of the building commissioner's office, Building Commissioner Rendigs has announced that a permanent inspector of picture houses will be placed on his staff, one of his deputies being assigned to that duty. It appears from the report made that many of the local and insurance regulations regarding the operation of projecting machines have been disregarded, the inspector declaring that in some cases he found small boys or ushers operating the machines during the temporary absence of operators, and that in other cases film guards were missing, constituting a serious fire menace. Exhibitors who were warned of the existence of such conditions promised, however, to exercise more care in future to see that their operators complied strictly with the regulations, the inspector said.

File Suit Against Pastime Theater.

Winchester, Ky.—The first of the suits expected to result from the recent tragedy when a wall collapsed and fell through the roof of the Pastime theater has been filed by the father of a boy who was badly injured. Damages of $25,000 are asked.

Kansas City Film Trade Doings of Week

Saphire Theater Gives Place to a New House to Be Built by the Standard Film Corporation—Many Called to Colors—Other Notes.

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Phil Ryan, general manager of the Standard Film Corporation; F. J. Warren, treasurer of the same company, and A. E. Elliot, a local exhibitor, will soon begin the construction of a splendid new moving picture theater at 105-107 East Twelfth street, Kansas City, at which place is now located the Saphire theater. Work will be well under way by June 5. This new theater will make the fourth addition to Kansas City's modern motion picture theaters within the last few months, as there are three others scheduled to open about the time of the starting of work upon this house. The new theater will cost about $300,000. It will have a seating capacity of 700. The foundation will be so built that 19 additional stories can be added later. In the basement of the new theater building will be a restaurant.

Standard Film to Move.

The Standard Film has moved into new quarters on the fourth floor of the Boley building. This company was formerly located at Thirteenth and Walnut streets. By making this move the Standard will be in the "select circle" of Greater Vitagraph, Goldwyn, Foursquare, and the U. S. Booking Corporation, which companies are located in the same building and the adjoining building to the north. This location was formerly that of the now extinct Federal Film Corporation and the Bluebird and Jewel offices.

Draft Calls for Many Film Men.

Recent calls of the selective draft service have made serious inroads upon the film selling men of Kansas City exchanges. In these calls a booker and a camera man have also been named. The booker to leave was W. P. Pittenger, who left April 26 for Camp Funston, Kansas. He was the booker at the Kansas City General Film Co. office, and had been with that exchange office since September, 1917. He has also worked with the General at Oklahoma City, and with the Kansas City Mutual office. He is succeeded by P. H. Fairchild, who has worked as booker, city salesman and Oklahoma salesman for the local General office.

George H. Ware, Greater Vitagraph salesman, was scheduled to report to the same place a day later. He had been with the Vitagraph office for several months and was one of the oldest salesmen working out of that office.

William Parsons, Mutual salesman, is awaiting a call which he expects to come in the very near future. He has been with the Mutual office for about two months, and previous to this work was a salesman for the Kansas City Bluebird office.

V. E. Simes, Mutual cameraman, was ordered to report at Rochester, N. Y., where he will begin study for some special camera work in the signal corps department of the army. He was formerly an owner in the Enterprise Motion Picture Co. of this city.

Ted Morse Signs with United.

Ted Morse has signed up with the Kansas City office of the United Picture Theaters Corporation and will work a territory in Missouri and Nebraska.

D. M. Majors with Vitagraph.

D. M. Majors is working the Missouri territory for the Kansas City Vitagraph office. He was formerly with the Mutual here.

Fred Pickrell Will Do a Bit.

Fred Pickrell, Pathe salesman, will put on a Red Cross benefit in Wichita, Kansas, at the Forum, during the second week in May. He will use Baby Marie Osborne's "Baby Does Her Bit." The show will receive publicity from the Wichita Eagle and will be preceded by a big parade. The showing will be carried out pretty much the same as the annual Kansas City star parties in Kansas City.

Standard Buys "Birth of Democracy."

The Standard Film Corporation announces that "The Birth of Democracy" has been bought by that company for distribution in Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska.

New Salesmen for Standard.

J. W. Spratley and C. O. Spessor have been added to the sales force of the Standard Film Corporation, the former working in Missouri and the latter in Kansas and Nebraska.

A. A. Bourg is now a member of the traveling sales force of the Standard Film Corporation. He was formerly with the Kansas City Vitagraph office. His new territory is in Kansas.

W. C. Ansell Gets Foursquare Job.

W. C. Ansell, formerly a Goldwyn salesman out of the Kansas City office, is now working out of the Kansas City Hoffman Foursquare office covering a territory in northern Missouri and southern Iowa. He was also a salesman for the Standard Film Corporation before going with Goldwyn. He began his new work April 21.

Kansas Theater Notes.

Oswego, Kan.—Manager Daniels, of the Midway Airdome, is having a roof constructed over the airdome and installing other improvements.

Junction City, Kan.—The Junction City Amusement Co. is planning on building a modern airdome in the near future.

Palco, Kan.—Earl Hinkhouse has bought the moving picture theater in this town from F. K. Hoff.

Tipton, Kan.—The opera house is now complete and open for business.

Sylvia, Kan.—W. H. Markle, of Hutchinson, who has owned the picture theater here for several years, has sold it to W. M. Struble, of Pratt.

Pittsburg, Kan.—The airdome here is being torn down by W. W. Bell and will be removed to Baxter Springs.

Horton, Kan.—Yaple & Hall are offering the Gem theater for sale.

With Oklahoma Exhibitors.

Blackwell, Okla.—The new Liberty theater has been opened to the public. The seating capacity is 1,000.

Claremore, Okla.—The Electric theater, which has been closed for some time, will open soon under the management of Fred Harvey.

Sulphur, Okla.—The Wigwam theater was recently destroyed by fire.

Perry, Okla.—Manager Tate has recently opened a moving picture theater in the Mid-Co camp in the Hoover oil field.

Drumright, Okla.—H. Levan, manager of the Folly theater, is doing some remodeling.

Frederick, Okla.—C. B. Greever has sold the Queen theater to J. R. Thrush and his son, of David, Okla.

Theater Items from Nebraska.

Hartington, Neb.—B. Greeg has bought the picture show of E. Greenwood.

Blue Hill, Neb.—C. G. Binderup, of Minden, has purchased the Sterling theater from S. P. Duncan of Bladen.

Nogales, Ariz.—Frank Dianos, of the Nogales theater, will erect a new fireproof theater building which will have a seating capacity of 2,000.

Des Moines, Ia.—R. B. McGregor will erect a new theater building at Seventh and Grand avenue.

Birmingham, Ala.—City Commission has given a license to Jas. L. Carey to erect an open air theater with a seating capacity of 7,000. The cost will be $2,750.

Fort Collins, Colo.—Carl Ray of Los Angeles is planning the erection of a moving picture theater at Ft. Collins.

Unionville, Mo.—Ray Simpson and P. O. Jones of the Theater Royal have purchased the Harmon theater at Milan. It will be under the management of Mr. Jones.

Business Jottings from Kansas City.

The Kansas City Universal office reports that eight prints of the big picture, "The Beast of Berlin," are now being used at the Kansas City office and that there are more requests to use the picture than the office can supply.

Milton Feld, Kansas City Universal manager, has arranged with the Ferry Handley Advertising Co. to handle the publicity for the Kansas City Universal office. This work was formerly handled by L. B. Douglas, who is now spending his entire time assisting Mr. Feld.

Tennessee Trade Letter

By J. L. Ray, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Through the cooperation of Tony Sudekum, president of the Crescent Amusement Company, a screen has been installed and projecting machines placed at Hadley's Bend, the Government powder plant in the suburbs of Nashville. Pictures have been shown in the interest of the Third Liberty Loan, and have been the means of attracting many workers to the speakers' booth on Liberty Loan lecture nights.

The village inside the powder plant reservation is to have its own moving picture house in a short time, it is understood, for the benefit of the forces working on the powder plant construction.

Big Feature for Nashville.

Nazimova in "Revelation," a big Metro production, has been booked by Manager Carson Bradford, of the Strand, for an entire week beginning May 27. Prices will be increased to 25 cents for the occasion, and a big advertising campaign is planned for the city. Twenty-five-cent productions have been making good in Nashville for the past several runs, and it is thought that "Revelation" will fully justify the increase.

"Intolerance" Runs, Despite Protests.

When it was advertised that "Intolerance," Griffith's mighty spectacle, would be run at the Vendome theater in Nashville for three days and nights there entered a storm of protest headed by a delegation of women representing the W. C. T. U. The delegation met with the Nashville Censor Board, and entered a formal protest, which was based on the action of a recent convention of the W. C. T. U. condemning the picture. None of the women on the committee had seen the picture prior to the protest.

The censor board assured the committee that it would witness the first performance, and if they found anything in it objectionable or opposed to morality they would take the proper action. The picture had, of course, been passed by the National Board of Review, which in turn notifies the local boards when a picture is condemned, but no notice of this kind was received in Nashville. Consequently, after viewing the production, the board, headed by Chairman Hamilton Love, permitted it to run as usual. The picture brought big crowds during its run at regular stage prices, and a return engagement has been assured by the Vendome management at an early date.

To Build New Alabama House.

Birmingham, Ala.—Following tentative plans of the Birmingham City Commission to erect an open air theater or airdome at Capitol place architects have been requested to submit plans outlining the general construction and seating facilities of the new project.

According to the proposal now before the commission the building will seat from 5,000 to 7,000 people, with standing room and chair space for many more if necessary. A screen having unusually large dimensions will have pictures projected by a long range machine, and the curtain will be visible from all angles. The summer season is now on, but it is thought the new airdome could be finished in time to care for the patronage during the hot weather of August and September.

Minneapolis Trade Letter

By J. L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

George Law with First National.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—George Law has resigned as chief executive at the Hoffman Foursquare exchange and has joined the salesforce of the Universal-First National exchange. Mr. Law's successor has not been named as yet. Mr. Law opened the Foursquare exchange early last fall, and brought the exchange up into the front rank among local film distributing offices.

"Kaiser" Film Stirs St. Paul.

"The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," at the New Princess might well be termed the leading photoplay attraction in St. Paul the week beginning April 28. Manager Bert Goldman, of the New Princess, has advertised the film as he has never boosted any attraction before, and as a result the picture is being talked about considerable in advance. Due to St. Paul's large German-American population the "Kaiser's" reception in St. Paul has been awaited with interest. All of St. Paul's theaters, with the exception of the Metropolitan, offered program releases the first half of the week beginning April 28.

Personal Notes from the Exchanges.

M. L. Livingston, representative of the United Theater Equipment Co., with headquarters in New York, has been spending several days in Minneapolis visiting with George A. Rogers, manager of the local U. T. E. branch.

Ralph O. Proctor, district manager for Pathe, spent a few days in Minneapolis attending a sales conference of the local exchange and assisting Manager Roberts in instructing the sales force in the Pathe methods of salesmanship.

Edward J. Mooney has resigned as auditor at the Universal exchange, and has returned to New York. Miss Beulah Armant, formerly with the George Kleine exchange at Dallas, Texas, succeeds Mr. Mooney.

Manager Jack Corbett, of the Triangle exchange, has reported the loss of a comedy entitled "Dollars and Cents." Exhibitors having knowledge of the whereabouts of the film are urged to notify Mr. Corbett immediately.

Ambassador James W. Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" began a two weeks' run at the Metropolitan opera house, Minneapolis, Sunday, April 28, to a good business. The big First National attraction is being presented by Manager R. B. Scott in the same way it was shown at the Knickerbocker theater, New York, recently, the same musical score and effects being used, and the same admission prices being charged. The photoplay will play an eight days' run at the St. Paul Metropolitan beginning May 5 following the close of a week's showing of "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

C. E. Van Duzee in Minneapolis.

C. E. Van Duzee, who opened one of the first film exchanges in the West, and who has been prominent in the Minneapolis film field for a decade, has returned after about eight months spent in California. Mr. Van Duzee will remain in Minneapolis a few weeks, and then hie himself Pacificward again.

New Fire Code in Indianapolis Protested

Film Men Claim That Measure Is Drastic—Committee Draws Up Amendments to Be Presented to the City Council.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Objectors to provisions of the proposed fire prevention ordinance now in the hands of the finance committee of the city council were heard at a special meeting of this committee at the city hall, Monday afternoon, April 22. Those objecting to the measure contend that it is entirely too stringent.

The ordinance, which was introduced in the council recently at the request of Mayor Jewett, provides for the establishment of a fire prevention bureau for Indianapolis to work out a city-wide system of fire prevention. Standardized methods applicable to every store, residence, business, and industry are to be introduced, according to the provision of the ordinance. It appears, however, that the motion picture industry will be the hardest hit by the ordinance.

A delegation of local motion picture men headed by Edward G. Sourbier, county treasurer, who is the owner of the Keystone and Palms theaters in North Illinois street, comprised the principal objectors at the meeting. They protested against the provision of the proposed ordinance which provides that no film exchange may maintain headquarters in a building wherein the public congregates. Mr. Sourbier has leased the upstairs quarters of his building to the Mutual Film Corporation, and the passing of the ordinance containing the present provisions would entail a heavy loss.

Mr. Sourbier explained to the committee that he built the theater building expressly so that the second story could be used for film purposes. He said he complied with all building regulations at that time, which was in 1913, and that he would be willing to meet all other regulations designed to make the handling of films safer, but that he could not feel that the council should compel him to break his lease. By breaking the lease with the film company it would cost him approximately $10,000 in rent which he would not receive, he said.

Jacob H. Hilkene, former building inspector, and now a member of the board of safety, who had a part in drafting the proposed measure, told members of the finance committee that employees of the Mutual Film Company often had as many as ninety films out at one time in the quarters above the Keystone theater. He said the only danger lay in the fact that if the films ever caught fire a serious panic might result in the theater below.

Following the meeting at the city hall the members of the committee, together with the motion picture men who objected to the provisions of the ordinance, made a survey of several of the downtown exchanges. Although the committee did not make known the nature of the conditions it found, it is reported that in some instances the conditions were such as to warrant immediate improvement.

The motion picture men held a conference at the city hall on Saturday, April 20, and drew up several amendments which will be introduced in the council. Although no definite agreement has yet been reached between the opposing factions, it is thought the word, "hereafter," will be inserted in the motion picture clause in order to harmonize with present conditions.

The members of the finance committee of the council which has the matter in charge is composed of Jacob P. Brown, chairman; W. B. Peake, Jesse Miller, Russell Wilson, and Dr. S. A. Furniss. In addition to members of the committee the following men accompanied the committee on the tour of inspection: L. W. Carnefix, president of the council; John C. Loucks, chief of the fire department, and Jacob Hilkene, member of the board of safety.

Exhibitor and Employee Indicted.

Harry C. Nagel, proprietor of the Dream theater, a motion picture house in Brightwood, one of the outlying residence districts of Indianapolis, and George Emory, an employee of the theater, who were arrested by the Indianapolis police recently charged with the theft of some automobile tires, were held to the grand jury under $1,000 bonds following a hearing in city court, Tuesday, April 23.

According to the testimony of the arresting policemen the two men drove to the Union station to deliver some motion picture films to the Adams Express Company on the night of April 12, and that while there Emory took four new auto tires from one of the express company's trucks. The tires, the police testified, were placed in Nagel's machine and taken to his picture show, where they were concealed under the stage.

Emory, the police say, admitted taking the tires, and said he did it according to a previous agreement that he had with Nagel. Mr. Nagel denied knowing anything about the tires. He says he left the machine a few minutes when in the vicinity of the express company's office, and that it would have been an easy matter for Emory to place the tires in the car without his knowledge.

Atlanta News Letter

By Linton K. Starr, Atlanta Journal, Atlanta, Ga.

William Oldknow Undergoes Operation.

ATLANTA, GA.—William Oldknow, president of the Consolidated Film and Supply Co., lessee of the Tudor theater and one of the South's best known motion picture men, is convalescent here from a serious operation last week. Physicians expect him to be out within a few weeks.

Mr. Oldknow has not let a little thing like an operation stop him, however, and has been directing his business from his bed. Among other things he has booked a return showing of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," for the Rialto. At the Rialto several weeks ago this picture smashed attendance records for the theater.

"Spirit of the Red Cross."

Atlanta exhibitors have co-operated with the local branch of the American Red Cross in exhibiting the Red Cross picture, "The Spirit of the Red Cross." John Evins, of the Strand, and George Smith, of the Alamo Number Two, added this picture to their programs this week.

"The Unbeliever" Praised.

Fine praise for "The Unbeliever," shown the week of April 29 at the Rialto theater, came from Lieut. H. Colvocoressces, the officer in charge of the local United States Marine Corps' recruiting station.

"'The Unbeliever,'" said Lieutenant Colvocoressces in a newspaper interview, "is fine, inspiring, full of true patriotism—a picture play every young American should see.

"I witnessed the special review of "The Unbeliever" with great pleasure and feel better for having seen it.

"The play is full of action, generous emotion and thrills, and the scenes in the trenches and of fighting in Belgium are especially fine.

"I would strongly urge all young Americans who are still in any doubt as to their duty to see 'The Unbeliever.'"

Dan Lederman Becomes Brandt's Assistant

General Manager of the Des Moines Branch of the Universal Goes to New York to Fill Important Position in Home Office.

By J. L. Shipley, 615 Locust St., Des Moines, Iowa.

DES MOINES, IA.—Several changes in the local staff of the Laemmle offices are of interest to all branches of the industry. Dan Ledermann, general manager of the office for several years, goes to New York as assistant to Joe Brandt, general sales manager of the Universal interests. Mr. Ledermann has made the local Laemmle office one of the most productive in the country. It serves a larger list of Iowa exhibitors than any office in the state, and Mr. Ledermann has brought the Jewel and Bluebird departments up to a high point of service and income. He leaves a host of friends who have been attracted by his genial personality and straightforward business methods. It is thought that the change will take place on or about May 1. Mr. Ledermann will be succeeded as local manager by a Mr. Friedman, of New York. Nicholas Amos will continue as Jewel manager. E. L. Myers, formerly assistant manager of the Mutual office here, has been added to the booking department.

Burned Valley Junction Theater to Be Rebuilt.

Fire which destroyed the third floor of the Lyric Theater building in Valley Junction a few days ago also damaged the theater considerably and burned up several reels of film which were showing in the house at the time of the blaze. Manager Witmer says the theater will be rebuilt and open for business in a few days.

The Berchel Begins Summer Season.

Following the season of burlesque and legitimate attractions the Berchel, Des Moines, opens its summer picture policy with a twelve days' showing of the William Fox Super, "Cleopatra," with Theda Bara. "My Four Years in Germany" follows, and Manager Harold Cavanaugh states that a few more pictures may be played before closing for redecoration. With show business booming in Des Moines on account of its steady growth and the presence of the transients attracted by Camp Dodge, located ten miles from here, the Orpheum will remain open until August 1. Picture houses are doing capacity.

Frankle Gets Engineer Commission.

Harry Frankle, formerly associated with his father, Abe Frankle, in the management of the latter's picture houses and other amusement interests, has been made a second lieutenant in the Engineering Corps, and is at home on a short furlough prior to reporting for duty at Laurel, Maryland.

Planning Road Shows for Gerard Film.

Eddie Bonns has been engaged as advance representative of "My Four Years in Germany," which the First National is handling in Iowa territory as a road show. A. H. Blank, First National member for Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas, announces that two companies have been routed for months of May and June, and that three prints of the picture will be used in Iowa alone. The No. 1 show opens at the Grand, Sioux City, Ia., for a week's run May 5, while the No. 2 show will open at the Majestic, Waterloo, Ia., the week of May 12, with the other large towns in Iowa to follow. The Berchel at Des Moines will play it the week of May 19. Mr. Bonns is former representative for the Allen Film Corporation, Chicago, and has been ahead and back with a number of Broadway attractions. William Hennings will be second man with the advance, which, for the present, will act in that capacity for both companies. "My Four Years" is being billed like a circus.

Mr. Blank expects to have a half dozen shows going by the first of July. Prices will be 25 cents to $1.00. The picture is playing only the biggest legitimate and vaudeville houses which have closed their regular season's policies and look upon this big picture as a boon during the off-months. J. L. Shipley is handling the publicity and directing the road shows from the Des Moines office.

Richard Robertson Busy in Des Moines.

Richard Robertson, Kansas City manager for Goldwyn, was a Des Moines visitor recently, and signed contracts for the big special, "Heart of the Sunset," from the story by Rex Beach. Mr. Robertson also jumped out to several adjoining towns and signed contracts. He states that the new Billy Parsons Capitol comedies which are being distributed through Goldwyn are meeting with much approval, and that many contracts are coming in.

Pertinent Personal Jottings.

After a conference in the A. H. Blank Des Moines office, Sam Goldflam has returned to Kansas in the interests of the First National and other Blank pictures.

F. R. Martin, now general representative of the Omaha branch of the United Theaters, is in Des Moines launching a campaign for Iowa on behalf of the new organization.

R. S. Ballantyne, manager of the Omaha Mutual branch, and formerly in that capacity in Des Moines before the consolidation of the two branches, was a Des Moines visitor.

Manager Skirboll, of Metro, announces first run in Des Moines of the first Nazimova Screen Classic, "Revelation," at the Palace this month.

Lee Horn, well known to Iowa exhibitors through his efforts on behalf of the Supreme Feature Film Company in Minneapolis, has sold his interests in that company, and is resting for a few weeks at his former home, Ida Grove.

V. N. Detweiler, who has been acting as auditor at the local Paramount office, has returned to Kansas City to assume the management of the Central Film Co. office at that point.

Visitors at Des Moines exchanges during the week of April 22 were Edward Awe, of the Strand, Fort Dodge; J. M. Heffner, of the Bijou, Mason City; J. A. Ruskin, of the Opera House, Adel; J. C. Price, of the Empress, Indianola; Jno. Peterson, of the Windsor, Hampton; John Koch, of the Orpheum, Oskaloosa.

S. R. O. All the Week for Chaplin.

The Garden theater here broke all house records Sunday on the initial showing of the first new Chaplin, "A Dog's Life." More than seven thousand paid admissions resulted, and during the five days' run of the picture there were a constant lockout. Manager Blank ran a two-reel feature in connection with the Chaplin, which is in three reels.

Exhibitors Annoyed by Slipshod Officials

In Texas, Faulty Bookkeeping of Revenue Collectors Demands Fines for Some Theaters That Already Had a Receipt for Tax.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, TEX.—Texas exhibitors are feeling better, and buying Liberty Bonds. They're looking about for new stuff, and taking on a thrift stamp or so every now and then. They're watching the farmer fellows as they smile over the coming of the rains, which have rejuvenated everybody, and then they plan opening a new theater and take on another Liberty Bond.

But a lot of 'em are a bit worried. They're wondering whether, or rather, what kind of a mix-up has occurred in the state revenue collector's department. A whole lot of Texas exhibitors have been notified that they've been fined—in one case as much as 200 per cent. of receipts for the period—because of failure to make returns on receipt taxes. And in this instance the fellow had the receipt from the office right smack, dab in his safe. A lot of them have been worried, but it is believed that the matter will be straightened out.

New Chaplin a Clean-up.

If what it did in Dallas is a fair sample the new Chaplin, "A Dog's Life," will make good at almost any price. It "cleaned up" at the Old Mill here. The little fellow has put some new stuff into it. The three-reel idea seems to have been the proper thing.

Sympathetic Waco Strike Ends.

Waco theaters were affected for a couple of days by a sympathetic strike which developed there. Trolley car men in the employ of the Texas Railways Companies went on strike in March. A sympathetic strike of all unions was called April 24, and several trades joined, including moving picture machine operators. It was called off at the solicitation of a Federal mediator, who put the proposition up to the unions from a patriotic basis.

J. B. Dugger Isn't Sick at All.

J. B. Dugger, of the Vitagraph Dallas branch, is all swelled up. He's been selling "Over the Top" to beat the band. Ray Stinnett, of the Jefferson theater, Dallas, and the Club theater, Joplin, Mo., has secured the picture for those two cities. The Dallas price was $2,000, a price paid only once before for a picture in this city. Dugger reports the picture sold in every one of the larger Texas cities and a number of the smaller ones despite the rather high figure put upon it due to heavy expense in the making. And it is having remarkable runs. One cited is at Roxton, Tex., a town of 700, where first run rights were bought. It went for a three days' run to capacity houses.

No New F. N. E. A. Manager.

There isn't much new doing. E. H. Hulsey is back from New York, but he hasn't appointed a state manager for the F. N. E. A.

Picked Up Along Film Row.

Ed. Rowley, of Robb and Rowley, San Angelo, Big Spring, Abilene and elsewhere, reported in Dallas during a recent week. He presaged his coming by a letter announcing that there would be no social sessions—it was all business. And since he left some rude fellow has been asking questions which relate to the Elks Club. I don't know anything about it, myself. Rowley says things in the West are looking up a bit.

"Bill" Lytle, of San Antonio, accompanied by Dr. Box, of the Petticlaire theater, also San Antonio, hobnobbed around Film Row recently, and said they were perfectly at peace with the world.

L. C. House, of the Wigwam, Coal Gate, Okla., has been around recently, and says everything is all right up in his country.

If Joe Daugherty doesn't have to go with the next draft he'll very likely make mighty good as a Vitagraph salesman. Young Mr. Daugherty started as a doorman for Hulsey's Queen theater here. His cordial good nature made him many friends. He made good in the shipping department at Vitagraph, and now Manager Dugger has promoted him to the road.

J. L. Butterfield, of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, was in Dallas during the last week in April opening the Y. M. C. A. "movie" house at Camp Dick flying field.

Jottings About Texas Picture Houses.

Waco, Tex.—The Waco Arcade and Amusement Co. chartered with a capital stock of $50,000 by L. A. Goldstein, L. Migel and M. E. Lawrence.

San Angelo, Tex.—S. Nastos is remodeling his theater at a cost of $1,000.

Grange, Tex.—H. Thomas will erect a theater of steel and concrete, 45 x 145 feet, seating capacity 1,200.

Houston, Tex.—A cooling system has been installed in the Liberty theater. Fresh air is forced into the theater at the rate of 50,000 cubic feet a minute.

Waxahachie, Tex.—Dr. C. W. Simpson is having plans drawn for remodeling the Dixie theater building. He expects to spend about $8,000 on these new improvements.

Tulia, Tex.—J. W. Kelierhor has bought the Olympic theater of H. H. Townsend and has assumed active management.

El Paso, Tex.—J. M. Lewis and V. B. Andreas are planning to build a new moving picture theater. This will be fireproof, of steel and concrete.

Austin, Tex.—The Hancock theater has been reopened after repairing the damage done by the recent fire.

TRADE BREVITIES FROM SPOKANE.

By S. Clark Patchin.

Exchange and Theater Personals.

SPOKANE, WASH.—"The Blue Bird," adapted to the screen from Maeterlinck's famous fantasy, closed a successful four days' run at the Clemmer theater, where it played to capacity houses since April 20. Thousands of Spokane school children, aside from thousands of adults, witnessed the production, and many who were unable to get there have been asking if it will return.

Violet Palmer, a former Spokane girl, drew good crowds, including many former friends, to the Casino, where she appeared with William Farnum in "Rough and Ready."

Word has just reached Spokane that Roy Madden, manager of the Mutual exchange before it closed in Spokane about a year ago, has died at his home in Salt Lake City, Utah, where he went for the Mutual. His wife, Madame Othick, sang in the Clemmer theater here for some months.

IN CALIFORNIA.

Brief San Francisco Notes.

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Hoffman Foursquare Pictures, recently visited the local office.

The Rialto theater of Eureka has been incorporated here with a capital stock of $75,000 by Nat Holt, Myrtiel T. Blum and E. Salomon.

Herman Wobber visited the Los Angeles branch of the Progressive Motion Picture Co. late in April.

Guy Gunderson, who recently joined the local staff of the Select Pictures Corporation, has been transferred to the Los Angeles branch.

Walter Preddey has sold a Mazda lamp outfit to J. B. Houston, of Klamath Falls, Ore., and has also furnished machines and a similar outfit to Gerevas & Huck, who have remodeled and open a theater at Fairfield, Cal.

Edgar Bayliss has been engaged as organist at the Berkeley T. & D. theater.

Recent visitors have included Ed. Stark, of the Opal theater, Hollister, Cal.; J. L. Davis, Ukiah, Cal.; Nick Turner, Grass Valley, Cal.; J. Van Sant, Jr., Eureka, Cal., and C. G. Douglas, Merced, Cal.

Poster House Incorporates.

The Western Poster Co., which supplies posters, slides, heralds and theater supplies to exhibitors in the San Francisco territory, with a store on Golden Gate avenue, has filed articles of incorporation in the sum of $25,000. The incorporators are I. H. Lichtenstein, Leo Kaufmann, H. L. Schmalz and P. H. Livingston.

San Francisco's Portola Being Improved

Theater Under the Management of Van B. Clement Closed for Two Weeks—Will Have a New Front and Many Other Changes.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Calif.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Extensive alterations are under way at the Portola theater, and this house will be closed for a period of two weeks to complete the improvements started some time ago. The entire front will be altered and renovated, a new tile floor laid in the lobby, the brass poster frames will be removed and supplanted by wall frames of an improved and artistic design, and a beautiful new box office will be installed. The ladies' restrooms off the foyer will be enlarged and the offices will be moved nearer the entrance, while the entire foyer will be redecorated. All of the chairs will be removed and uphostered, the walls redecorated and repairs made to the stage. The operating room will also receive attention and will be rewired throughout. Plans have been made for the installation of an organ, but it has not been decided when the instrument will be added, and the house will be reopened in May with the regular Portola orchestra.

This theater has made moving picture history and its success led to the building of the California theater a few doors away by the same interests that control it. The opening of the big house has not interfered with the business of the Portola theater, but has rather improved it by making this section of Market street an amusement center. The older house is conducted under the management of Van B. Clement along the lines that has long made it popular.

Community Singing at Theaters.

Community singing, which has proved such a popular feature of gatherings at the Exposition Auditorium, San Francisco, has been introduced into moving picture houses in suburban cities as an aid to the Liberty Loan drive. The management of the T. & D. theater and the Berkeley theater, Berkeley, Cal., recently consented to give time each evening to community singing planned by the local unit of the State Council of Defense and Mobilized Women's organizations, and the innovation proved so popular that the idea was at once taken up by the Strand and Lorin theaters. Prominent local singers led the song fests and found theatergoers quick to respond.

Free Theater Tickets for Enlisted Men.

Eighteen of the prominent theaters of San Francisco have agreed to place five thousand free tickets a week at the disposal of the War Camp Community Service for the use of enlisted men. The tickets are given out to all men in uniform up to the five thousand limit on application at the office of the service or at the Enlisted Men's Club. The theaters included in the list are the Cort, Columbia, Alcazar, Casino, Hippodrome, Orpheum, Wigwam, Pantages, Rialto, California, New Fillmore, New Mission, Alhambra, Progress, Strand, Portola, Tivoli and Imperial.

Government War Films Booking Fast.

Sol L. Lesser, chairman of the war films division of the California Council of Defense, states that bookings for the series of twenty-six Government war films are rolling in without personal solicitation from the larger communities as well as the country districts, indicating a genuine desire on the part of exhibitors to serve their country by giving these pictures a wide distribution. Most of the subjects show Government activities never before featured in moving pictures, and these are proving of popular interest. The five-reel feature subject, "The Remaking of a Nation," was recently shown as the screen attraction at the Casino theater and the local military officials furnished a band for the engagement. The series of pictures has been booked by such fine district houses as the New Fillmore, the New Mission and the Royal.

William S. Hart Helps Loan Drive.

William S. Hart arrived in San Francisco in time to help this city over the top in the Liberty Loan drive, speaking before several audiences on Liberty Day and bringing to a close his tour of the Far West. He appeared before a huge audience at the Exposition Auditorium and also addressed the members of the Commonwealth Club on Liberty Day on "What the Movies Are Doing for the War." During his stay here he also delighted audiences at the Imperial theater by appearing on the stage in cowboy attire, following screen showings of "The Tiger Man."

Buys Interest in Empire Theater.

Martin Kurtzig, a pioneer exhibitor of this city, who has been away for some time, has returned and secured an interest in the Empire theater on Market street. He is one of the old school of exhibitors who believe in elaborate lobby displays, and an extensive use of wax figures and electrical effects is being made.

Changes at Rialto Theater.

Nat Holt, for the past fourteen months manager of the Rialto theater, has left to accept a similar position with the Kinema theater at Fresno. He was to have gone to Eureka to manage the new Rialto theater to be opened shortly by Sheehan & Lurie, but changed his mind when the position in the "Raisin City" was offered. Several years ago he was associated with the Kehrlein interests, which operate the Kinema theaters of Fresno, Oakland and Los Angeles.

Myrt T. Blum, who has been connected with the Rialto theater since its opening as advertising and publicity manager, has also severed his connection, having joined the naval reserve.

Harry David Back from New York.

Harry David, house manager of the California theater, has returned from a short trip to New York and other large cities of the country to look over leading theaters and observe the manner in which moving pictures are presented elsewhere. While away he visited houses in Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo, New York, Philadelphia, Kansas City and Los Angeles. He declares that the Pacific Coast theaters are fully as large and as complete as those to be found elsewhere. Everywhere music is receiving added attention, with New York leading in the size and excellence of orchestras. Prices in the eastern metropolis are about double those of San Francisco for entertainments of the same class. In Detroit he called on Edward Benedict, of the Broadway Strand theater, who is coming to this city early in May to fill a long engagement at the California theater as organist.

Film Man at Camp Fremont.

Al. Rosenberg, of the De Luxe Feature Film Company of Seattle, Wash., is in the hospital unit of the army at Camp Fremont, near San Francisco, and comes to this city every Saturday to make the rounds on Film Row and to keep in touch with the business.

Educator Lauds "Kaiser" Film.

Alfred Roncovieri, superintendent of schools, has written a letter of commendation to Leo Weinberger, manager of the Strand theater, in which he lauds the spirit that led to the making of the picture, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," declaring that it has a missionary power that cannot be overestimated. The production was shown to almost one thousand school teachers at a special presentation.

Michigan Began Prohibition on May First

Exhibitor Now Has Better Chance Than Formerly to Play to Full Houses and the Wise Ones Will Make Special Efforts to Attract.

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The whole State of Michigan went bone dry on May 1 and toward the end hundreds of bars and cafes were either out of all kinds of rum or else closed their doors voluntarily in order "to get out from under" before the fatal last day. Regardless of how exhibitors may feel individually on the liquor situation they all anticipate improved business as a result of it, judging from the reports by salesmen who have been in other dry sections of the country. If this be true, then it will be splendid news for exhibitors because after the hard, uphill fight that Michigan exhibitors put up during the months of January, February, and March, owing to fuel shortage and the zero weather, they need some additional spring stimulant and tonic—and maybe, after all, prohibition will be that tonic. However, there is another phase to the situation that most exhibitors are probably overlooking and which should be called to their attention. Hundreds of men who used to be frequent patrons of saloons, spending many of their evenings in such places are now prospects for motion picture theaters and their wives, who will now have more money for their homes and themselves, are splendid prospects for motion pictures, so it behooves exhibitors to put on a little more steam during the next ninety days by increased advertising, better music and closer attention to appropriate music—cozier theaters—in fact, exhibitors can do a lot of things that will show the people of their communities that they are live wires and that their theaters are comfortable, restful and palaces of genuine amusement. A great many of these people who have been heretofore affected by liquor have never been in moving picture theaters, so that exhibitors should make the right sort of appeal to them.

There is no better time in Michigan than RIGHT NOW for exhibitors to spruce up and put their very best effort and brain into showmanship methods.

A. J. Gilligham Moves to Book Bldg.

A. J. Gilligham has moved his general offices from 191 Woodward to the new Book building on Washington boulevard. In addition to owning the Empire theater, Mr. Gilligham is the Michigan manager for the United Picture Theaters, Inc.

Dawn Masterplay Moves Upstairs.

The Dawn Masterplay Co., Detroit, have moved from the fifth to the seventh floor of the Owen building, where they have three times as much floor space, vaults, inspection room, etc.

Chaplin's Latest Counted His Best.

The unanimous verdict of the people of Detroit is that Charlie Chaplin's newest comedy, "A Dog's Life," is his very best. And they are backing up this verdict by turning out by the thousands afternoons and evenings at the Madison theater, where it opened a two-weeks' engagement on Sunday, April 28.

Business Notes from Detroit.

The State Film Co., of Detroit, has purchased the Michigan distributing rights to a new series of five-reel features with Shorty Hamilton.

The Standard Film Service, Detroit, has taken on the state rights to a weekly series of song hits in photoplay.

"Over the Top" will start a long engagement at the Majestic theater, Detroit, on May 19, according to present plans. At the same time another print will open a week's engagement at the Majestic Gardens in Grand Rapids.

Art S. Hyman, of the Dawn Masterplay Co., is back from a long trip through the western and northern sections of the state. He reports a very successful list of bookings, doing some business in every town visited.

MIDWESTERN THEATER ITEMS.

By Joe Esler, Traveling Correspondent.

Organized Club—Didn't Make Good.

ROCK ISLAND, ILL.—M. A. Westlo, who organized the O'Loma Photoplay Club here a few months ago, is now an object of investigation on the part of Chief of Police Herbert, of Toledo, O. Westlo secured a large number of members of the club in this city, and opened up club rooms in the People's National Bank building; but the studio plan has failed to materialize, and the Rock Island police have notified the Toledo chief that Westlo secured money under false pretenses, as he failed to carry out his announced plans to the men and women whom he secured as club members in the Tri-Cities.

Theater in Canton Has Fire.

Canton, Ill.—The Gem theater was badly damaged by fire recently when some film caught during the afternoon performance. The fire department succeeded in extinguishing the flames before the building was badly damaged, but the picture machine and the operator's booth were completely wrecked. Operator Brassfield escaped with a few burns. The audience filed out of the building without panic, and no one was injured.

MORE DAYTON ITEMS.

"Kaiser, Beast of Berlin" Makes Hit.

One of the biggest hits for some time in Dayton at any picture theater is the Jewel picture mentioned above. This picture was advertised before the opening by Theodore Chifos, manager of the Apollo theater, where it was played and, without a word of exaggeration it can truthfully be said that it has been the biggest individual hit in many weeks at the Apollo.

Dayton Pick-Ups.

Urlin G. Perrill, of the Dayton Journal, is to do publicity work for the new Dayton theater.

The Victoria theater, Dayton, it has been announced officially, will be rebuilt. It is to be a straight legitimate house—if a lessee can be found to pay the rent.

John Seifert spent several days last week visiting Chicago. The Ideal is prospering during his absence.

James Hamilton, whom I thought a landmark with Pathe, has quit that concern. No new connections announced as yet.

George Jacobs, with the Masterpiece Film, was in Dayton recently, and while here he screened "Carmen of the Klondike."

John Lyons and Robert Hirtsch—the Gold Dust twins.

"THE LITTLE RUNAWAY."

Delightful Little Comedy by Vitagraph and Paul West and a Good Company.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE amusingly pleasant atmosphere of "The Little Runaway," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon comedy, rather than the story is the quality that will appeal to the average spectator. I think it will be generally popular, for the players are likable in their parts, and the ways they travel are in the sunlight rather than through dark waters, though there is enough shadow in the background to bring out the coloring of the adventures of the little Irish girl played by Gladys Leslie. Once the atmosphere, half like a fairy story, has been created the plot may take and does take liberties with probability that do not much hinder one's interest in the outcome.

It is a cotter's story that opens in the Emerald Isle and closes in New York with a good luck ending. The heroine is a village girl, the hero is the young lord of the manor, and the villains are the rent collector and his son. The latter has annoyed the girl with his attentions. One day he takes the rent, leaves no receipt, and decamps. The girl starts out to find him and get back the hard-earned money. The spirit of adventure is on her, and she lands in New York. The lord of the manor, passing through the village, had once rescued her from a boat, and would recognize her again. An Irish policeman finds the homeless girl, hears her story, and takes her home to his wife. The lord is in New York trying to make love to the daughter of a millionaire, and is not getting on very well. The policeman sees his name in the paper, and calls upon him to get him to help the girl. She doesn't know that she has ever seen the lord. He comes to see about helping her, and she thinks him merely her old friend. He takes her to his fiancee, who treats her badly, and in the end the lord and the little runaway go off to be married.

The script is by Paul West. W. P. S. Earle directed it. Gladys Leslie, Jessie Stevens, Mary Maurice, and Betty Blythe, with Edward Earle, William Dunn, and William Calhoun, have good parts.

"AN HONEST MAN"

William Desmond Featured in Triangle Story That Has but Little Punch.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A SURPRISE finish is the nearest approach to "punch" in "An Honest Man," a five-part Triangle picture, directed by Frank Borzage and featuring William Desmond. Henry P. Dowst, is the author of the story and George E. Jenks furnished the continuity, of which there is altogether too much. The plot flows along as calmly and as unbrokenly as a tale by the author of "Mark, the Match Boy," and many of the incidents are as trite and amateurish as the happenings in Horatio Alger's book. The story has human interest, but is not built up with sufficient skill to give it the wide appeal necessary to a photoplay under present conditions. The screen, as yet, has not classified its product after the manner of the printed page, and "An Honest Man" will not prove much of a treat to the fully developed mind.

Benny Boggs, a tramp who has so little regard for the rules of the profession that he is willing to work for a meal when he is hungry, is the hero. Stopping one day at the Cushing Farm for his dinner, the farmer is so impressed with the energy Benny shows in weeding his cabbage patch that he offers him a steady job. Benny accepts. Shortly after this, Farmer Cushing has a stroke while at work. The tramp carries him into the house and then telephones for the doctor. Cushing thinks his last hour has come, so he tells Benny where to find a package of money and makes him promise to deliver it to his daughter Ruby, who ran away from home and has never sent her address.

Boggs does not wait for the doctor to arrive, but leaves the old man unconscious and goes to the city. He soon discovers that he is carrying a fortune of fifty thousand dollars in his coat pocket. Refusing to touch a penny of it, he manages to keep the money hidden from the police when he is arrested for knocking down a masher. Beatrice Burnett, the girl he defends, turns out to be Ruby's best friend. The girl is ill and the fortune is doubly welcome. Ruby recovers and takes Benny and Beatrice to her old home on the farm. When the party reach there old man Cushing is sitting on the front porch. The doctor saved his life and he had been spending his time regreting that he took Benny for an honest man. While Ruby explains matters to her father, Benny takes a walk with Beatrice and asks her to wait for him until he has returned from serving the cause of the Allies.

William Desmond is easy, good humored and likable as Benny Boggs, Mary Warren as Beatrice, Ann Kroman as Ruby and Graham Pette as Farmer Cushing are natural and effective.

"MILE-A-MINUTE KENDALL."

Jack Pickford in Paramount Production of Stage Play by Owen Davis.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

INTEREST in the young man of wealth who makes a record as a spender until his father cuts off the money supply has probably extended in an unbroken line from the time of "The Prodigal Son" down to the present. "Mile-a-Minute Kendall" belongs to the same class of story. Written by Owen Davis as a stage play, the author has been content to work after the accepted model, and events develop in regular juvenile fiction style. C. Gardener Hunting was the scenarioist and William D. Taylor directed the production. Both labored intelligently. Jack Pickford has the title role. He has little difficulty in indicating the youth and engaging personality of Kendall.

The Great White Way of Georgie Cohan's little old New York is strewn with the wrecked careers of youthful spenders of the Kendall type. The hero runs true to form. He wastes bushels of bills on a soiled dove named Rosalynde d'Aubre, and when his father objects, decides to marry the girl. They elope, head for a little town where Kendall used to live, have an auto smash-up in front of the hotel, and the young chap's brain is injured. Kendall Senior arrives in time to buy off Rosalynde and Junior is nursed back to health by the niece of the hotel keeper. As soon as young Kendall recovers and learns that his father has disowned him, the boy starts to perfect a scheme for using crude oil instead of gasoline in auto engines. He also begins to make love to the landlord's niece. When his mother forces the elder Kendall to take her to the young inventor his engine is running with great regularity and his heart is in the keeping of the little country girl..

"Mile-a-Minute Kendall" has none of the keen observation of life that made Booth Tarkington's "Seventeen" so satisfactory. Its fun is innocent, however, and the soiled dove lady is not at all dreadful. The production is never slighted. Louise Huff as Joan Evans and Lottie Pickford as Rosalynde could hardly be improved. Two of the parts are not well played. Jane Wolff is too tearful and depressed as Mrs. Kendall, and Jack McDonald burlesques the character of the country landlord to a painful degree.

"JOAN OF PLATTSBURG."

Timely Goldwyn Photoplay Presents Mabel Normand in Emotional Role.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ONE of the statements made by Porter Emerson Browne about "Joan of Plattsburg" gives an excellent idea of its purpose. It is meant to typify the American woman's desire to do her share in the great war. The author has been very successful in working out his intent, and the Goldwyn production, directed by George Loane Tucker and William Humphrey, places the story on the screen in such a manner that it will meet a hearty response from patriotic moving picture patrons all over the country.

"Joan of Plattsburg" is not a flawless example of screen art. The frame is too big for the picture, and the star, Mabel Normand, finds herself in deep emotional waters more than once during the action of the story; but her earnestness of purpose keeps her from going under, and the spirit, freshness and timeliness of the photoplay are powerful enough to overcome its defects. The finest quality of the heroine is her spirituality, and to expect an actress who has scored her biggest success in broad farce to illuminate the face of a modern Joan with the divine fire of the Maid of Orleans is to look for a miracle. Mabel Normand is to be commended for the sincerity of her effort at indicating this phase of the character. The lighter moods of Joan are easily within her grasp.

Porter Emerson Browne's stage and screen success, "A Fool There Was," is far removed in spirit from his latest scenario. Joan is a young girl, the drudge at an orphan asylum near Plattsburg. She sees the soldiers drilling and longs to do something for her country. An officer gives her a copy of the life of "Joan of Arc" and it adds fuel to the flame within. She even hears the "voices," as she supposes, that spoke to the Maid of Orleans. Her message turns out to be of human origin and, although she fails to save her country, she does save the life of the friendly officer and many of his comrades. The story is continued to the end of the war and Joan marries the officer.

The main incidents permit the plot to move along briskly, and the picture, which is in six parts, has been cut with skill in most places. Well-acted roles are contributed by Robert Elliott, William Fredericks, Joseph Smiley, Edward Elkas, John W. Dillion and Isabel Vernon. Photographed by Oliver T. Marsh.

"JOURNEY'S END."

Ethel Clayton, John Bowers and Muriel Ostriche in Average World Feature.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

MODERN society of the too much money and leisure class supplies the characters in "Journey's End," a five-part World picture, featuring Ethel Clayton, John Bowers and Muriel Ostriche. Travers Vale directed the production. The story never goes very far below the surface, and some of the complications are more ingenious than plausible. The big situation, where the adventuress tries to compromise the heroine and falls into her own trap, is built up none too skillfully, but the play has its entertaining moments, for which it is largely indebted to the members of the cast and the attractiveness of the Florida scenes.

The Marsdens, young, wealthy and newly married, find themselves drifting apart. The male member of the family has become too friendly with a stage lady, Bernice De Armond, by name, and his wife determines to find out just where she stands. Mrs. Marsden has a sister, Jess, and an uncle, Pop Moore. The three force Phil, the husband, to sign an agreement giving absolute freedom to both parties of the marriage contract for three months.

The trio then betake themselves to Florida and leave Phil to call up his actress lady as often as he pleases. All is plain sailing after that. Mrs. Marsden does not publish the fact that she is married when she arrives at Palm Beach, and Wayne Annis, a good looking young chap, is attracted by her at once. The flirtation is nicely under way by the time the detached husband ends a quarrel with Bernice by taking the next train to Florida. His reception is quite chilly and matters do not warm up when Miss De Armond and her remarkable bathing suit and her French maid follow him south. When the returns are all in husband and wife are reconciled, young Mr. Annis has discovered that sister Jess is the only real woman on earth for him and the actress lady is forced to make a quick exit, covered with defeat.

The other members of the capable cast are Jack Drumier, Louise Vale, Frank Mayo, Victor Kennard and Jean Loew. Cameraman, Max Schneider.

"BRAVE AND BOLD."

George Walsh's Remarkable Stunts Make Fox Picture a Thriller.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE could hardly be a better hero for a melodrama of the sensational kind than George Walsh, for his ability to escape from impossible traps by his sheer athletic prowess is unsurpassed. He outdoes former stunts in this way in "Brave and Bold," a Fox six-reel Standard picture. The most exciting episode of the picture is when he is chased up two or three flights of stairs in a ramshakle tenement by a gang of thugs. At the top, under the skylight, there seems to be no escape, but he springs upward, catches the sill, throws his legs up through the glass and frame, and with not much effort turns out on the roof. You wouldn't believe it possible, but it is done, and in that place it is truly effective.

The plot, like other exciting melodramas, is crammed with episodes, and gets the hero in such tight predicaments that it seems the game is up any number of times, but each time a cool head and a marvelous agility aid in starting the action afresh with a good chance of the hero's winning the prize only to have some new difficulty turn up to hamper his progress which in turn he surmounts. He leaves New York for Pittsburgh to meet a girl and marry her and to get a contract for a billion's worth of war munitions from the Allies. Other financial interests plan to stop him, and he is knocked on the head, carted to a den of roughs, arrested, and put in a cell. He learns that the girl has been kidnapped, and has to go to her rescue with the police hot on his trail; gets her, takes her away, with the police still following, reaches the hotel just in time to save the foreign diplomat from destruction by a bomb, and gets the contract.

Liberal use of wit and humor adds much to the enjoyment of the spectator. It is an excellent speedy and exciting melodrama, and is sure to be welcomed. It is directed by Carl Harbaugh from the story, "Four-Forty at Fort Penn," by Perley Poore Sheehan.

"TRUE BLUE."

William Farnum Plays Typical Hundred Per Cent. American in Fox Picture.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

A LIKABLE picture of the Western country, with plenty of cowboys and mettled horses, is "True Blue," a five-reel Fox picture, and it furnishes William Farnum with an excellent character. He is a rugged son of the plains, owns a ranch, and loves the pretty school teacher. Though the son of a remittance man who has inherited a title and abandoned his mother he cares nothing for the lures of aristocracy.

As a contrast to these scenes of free and human open-air life we get glimpses of the earl, his second wife (married after the first had died of a broken heart), and the younger son, weak and dissipated. The rancher learns that his father has come to America, and in Chicago seeks him out for the pleasure of telling him what he thinks of him. The earl is astonished at the rough aspect of his older son, and next day when his younger son who still thinks he is the heir of the title is brought in drunk as a lord the old man tells him to earn a living or starve. The younger man wanders out to the West, and is rescued from a bunch of roughs by the older brother, who learns his name. He buys the boy's I O U for $150, and to get even with the family makes him work as a stableman for thirty per and chuck. It makes a man of the boy, and at length the older brother recognizes his worthy qualities, and treats him as a brother in spite of the fact that he suspects the school teacher is not in love with him, but with the younger man. He learns after his sacrifice that the personable young woman is really in love with no one but himself.

It is a pleasant picture to watch, has much that is excellent, and will make a good impression. It is not highly artistic, and has no special dramatic punch, but runs along with good continuity and is always interesting. Story and direction are by Frank Lloyd.

"THE DAGGER WOMAN."

Pathe Releases New Russian Art Film, Featuring Mozukin and Zovska.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel subject, while slight and familiar in plot, is done with the usual feeling for artistic effect that has been apparent in these Russian numbers. There are but two principal roles in this story by L. Andrieff, that of Savonsky, the artist, and Olga Kartoff, the society girl. Ivan Mozukin plays the former role with his usual skill, demonstrating again his peculiar power over the fair sex, this time for bad purposes. Olga Kartoff is attractive as the girl, her general appearance being quite in keeping with the requirements of her part.

The plot itself will be no particular novelty to American audiences, as the artist and model situation has been done repeatedly in home products for the screen. It is interesting to watch the methods of the Russian players in dealing with this plot material, however. The artist plays his cards slowly and carefully, drawing his victim further and further into his clutches. There is no straining theatricalism in the various scenes, and the climax, when it comes, is not the familiar repentance and happy ending, but a tragedy in which both lives go out.

There is but little of plot complication. Savonsky, the artist, is seeking a perfect model for his masterpiece, "The Dagger Woman." He meets Olga at a social affair in which she takes part in a tableau. He sees her beauty of form, and, in spite of her first refusal, finally induces her to pose for him. She falls desperately in love with him, but his own ardor cools as the masterpiece approaches completion. When it is publicly exhibited the girl finds herself a victim of scandalous talk, and goes to Savonsky's studio to claim her revenge.

"SINKING OF THE LUSITANIA."

McCay's Vivid Illustration of German Atrocity Presents Cartoon Tragedy of Uncommon Merits.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN this latest animated cartoon which was exhibited at the Strand theater, New York City, during the week of April 28, Windsor McCay has surpassed in tragic realism anything of the kind that has yet been attempted. In fact we believe that "The Sinking of the Lusitania" is the first tragic subject that has been presented by means of animated drawing. Its sole purpose, apart from artistic effort, is evidently to instill patriotism in the hearts of spectators and further hatred, if possible, for the German perpetrators of frightfulness. It is tremendously realistic, even the fantastic coils of smoke writhing about the doomed vessel reflecting the terror and agitation of the moment. It tells its story clearly, recalling effectively those first bitter moments of America's sorrow and resentment toward the common enemy.

The cartoon represents 25,000 drawings on separate sheets of celluloid, which it is said to have taken McCay two years to complete. It took eight days to photograph the drawings one at a time. Each detail from the sighting of the Lusitania by the German submarine to the actual sinking of the ship is shown. The lowering of the life boats, the tilting of the vessel bow first, the leaping into the sea of the terrified victims, and all the other pitiable sights that the situation presented are vividly shown in the picture.

"RESURRECTION"

Screen Version of Tolstoy's Powerful Story Has Pauline Frederick As Heroine.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE moral purpose of Toystoy's story, "Resurrection," is beyond question. In novel and in stage form it has been received as an honest handling of a vital subject. The screen version produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation does not attempt to dodge the issue so masterfully treated by the Russian author. Tolstoy shows in "Resurrection" how a woman pays when she transgresses the moral law and how the partner of her sin goes free. It is not a pleasant story and paints vice in anything but alluring colors.

Katusha, a Russian peasant girl, who is the servant and companion of the two old maid aunts of Prince Nekludov, is betrayed by that nobleman and left to face the consequences alone. Turned away by the two maiden aunts, Katusha takes refuge in the barn of a peasant, where her child is born. After its death the mother becomes a woman of the streets and is given a "Yellow Ticket," according to the Russian custom. Katusha sinks lower and lower until she is entangled in a murder case. Although innocent, she is convicted and sentenced to Siberia.

One of the jurors is Prince Nekludov. He recognizes the girl. When her lawyer says: "If we ask who is responsible for her being here, we must go back to the day when she was ruined by a man who still remains unpunished." Nekludov is overcome by remorse. He follows Katusha to the prison and promises to obtain her freedom and make her his wife. By the time he secures the pardon from the Czar the girl has gone many weary miles on her journey across Siberia. In the meantime, she has met Simonson, a fellow prisoner, who has taught her the way to her moral resurrection. This man defends her against one of the officers of their escort. Knowing that he truly loves her, Katusha refuses the pardon and the protection of Nekludov's name and goes into exile with Simonson, a man who is willing to make any sacrifice for the cause of humanity.

Pauline Frederick is the Katusha of the screen production. She suits the part physically and mentally and acts with admirable dramatic force. Robert Eliott as Prince Nekludov, John Sainpolis as Siminson and Jere Austin as Shenbok are excellent in their several roles. Charles E. Whittaker has retained most of the points of the story and constructed a fairly good scenario. The production has truthful local color, and the winter scenes, with the wretched convicts toiling through the snow, are impressive.

"LAST RAID OF ZEPPELIN L-21."

Two-Reel Illustration of Havoc Wrought by Germany.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A SERIES of illustrations, most of which consist of photographed views of actual happenings in connection with Germany's Zeppelin raids on England, are contained in the two-reel picture (approximately 1,000 feet of film), being presented by the Interstate Film Company, Inc. The picture is naturally of interest at the present time, and has been sub-titled in a way which helps to make it an acceptable patriotic offering.

The scenes in the picture include views of the devastated villages on the coast of England. The sighting of the Zeppelin L-21 by means of searchlights as it passes over London, and the constant vigilance of the anti-aircraft gunners are of special interest. The final thrill of the picture shows the L-21 in flames in consequence of the successful attack by Lientenant W. L. Robinson, who succeeded in bombing it from his aeroplane. A close-up of the fallen Zeppelin is also shown.

"THE ACCIDENTAL HONEYMOON"

Captain Warwick and Elaine Hammerstein in Amusing Rapf Production.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

LEONCE PERRET has not displayed any remarkable originality in writing "The Accidental Honeymoon," a five-part comedy produced by Harry Rapf and featuring Captain Robert Warwick and Elaine Hammerstein. The picture is always entertaining, nevertheless. The subject is one that will hold the attention of every real girl from sixteen to sixty. Romance and humor are neatly blended in the story and nothing of either quality is lost in the telling on the screen. A situation that might have become a bit embarrassing for the spectator is played with such matter-of-fact frankness and good sense by the two stars that it is absolutely without offense.

At the opening Robert Courtland has made up his mind to commit suicide because he has been jilted. He stretches out on the railroad track and waits for the 5.15 to end his heartache. The train is late, but something else comes along and puts a stop to his pain—a pretty girl in an auto, which stalls right at the side of the track. Robert helps her to start her engine, and in the meantime his train goes by. To head off further engine trouble Robert gets into the car and runs it himself. He learns that his companion has run away from home to avoid marrying a fat man. That night finds them occupying the same room at a farmhouse. A lack of gasoline and too much thunderstorm force them to accept the farmer's hospitality and they do not think it best to explain that they are not married. This is the scene that is so cleverly managed. The scenes leading up to their real honeymoon are in the true comedy vein.

Captain Robert Warwick's light comedy acting is surprisingly good and Elaine Hammerstein as the heroine is quite as pleasing. Frank McGlyn, Frank Norcross, Blanche Craig and Madame Mea are the prominent members of the cast.

"THE SOUL OF BUDDHA"

Fox Photoplay Features Theda Bara As a Beautiful Javanese Siren.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ONE of Theda Bara's early successes was made as the siren in "A Fool There Was." "The Soul of Buddha," a five-part screen drama written by Miss Bara, gives her a chance to repeat the impression she created in the Porter Emerson Browne play. The same note of strong passion and physical desire runs through the star's first attempt at scenario writing and she is able to portray the same type of erotic womanhood.

Bava Mari, from the Island of Java, is darker of skin but little versed in the ways of the world, but she is just as lacking in moral sense as the beautiful vampire in the Brown drama, and drags down the man who loves her and causes his death just as heartlessly. In place of seating herself in a chair on the very spot where one of her dupes has killed himself she bundles her husband's body into a box lounge after he has committed suicide and reclines gracefully on it when several persons rush into her dressing room to find out who fired the shot.

Save in one important point the virtues of one play are the virtues of the other. Only the siren's victim pays the price in the earlier drama. The vampire of "The Soul of Buddha" is herself caught in the meshes of the moral law and is strangled to death by the priest of the temple where she broke her vows and returned to the carnal world she had renounced forever.

Meeting in the temple a young English officer who is greatly smitten with her, Bava runs away with him and becomes his wife. He takes her to Scotland, but the cold and the fog chill her warm blood and make her unhappy. They return to Java, where their child is born. The high priest has sworn to punish Bava for her insult to Buddha. He creeps into the house and kills the child. The mother is wild with grief, her boy was the one thing she loved on earth. She goes to Paris with her husband and tries to forget her sorrow by entering into the gay life of the capital. He is recalled to Scotland and Bava seeks the sort of dissipation her nature really craves.

A visit to one of the lowest order of cabarets where the gangs of thieves, thugs and Apaches do their wild dances with their female partners gives her an idea. She is already expert in the dances of her country and has danced them before groups of applauding English officers. She will become famous as a Javanese dancer. A theatrical manager offers her an opening at his theater. Before this her beauty and her husband's wealth and position have opened many exclusive homes to her. When her husband returns she is carrying on an affair with a French count. Taxed with the matter she informs her husband she only married him to escape from the life she detested and has never had any love for him. He is heartbroken, takes to drink and puts a bullet through his heart in her dressing room on the night of her debut. The wife of the count comes to her and Bava laughs at her tears and refuses to give up the woman's husband.

Dressed in her native costume, her dancing is a great success. The novelty of the performance wins loud applause. When one of the seated figures of Buddha at the back of the stage comes to life and seizes the dancer by the throat interest is at fever heat so realistic is the struggle. As the lifeless body of the woman falls to the stage the spectators realize the truth: The supposed statue has murdered Bava. The high priest has kept his oath.

The extent to which the spectator will be impressed with this grade of melodrama depends upon his artistic instinct and his interest in seeing the unlovely passions of humanity depicted on the screen. Theda Bara wrote the part of the siren for herself and plays it in keeping with the spirit of her story. The production, directed by J. Gordon Edwards, is complete in every scene.

"WITH HOOPS OF STEEL"

Henry B. Walthall Star in Paralta Photoplay with Human Western Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

FRIENDSHIP is the keynote to "With Hoops of Steel," a six-part Paralta photoplay story by Florence Finch Kelly and scenario by Thomas J. Geraghty. Henry Walthall is the star of the production and Eliot Howe was the director. The advice given by Polonius to his son inspired the title: "The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried, Grapple them to thy soul with hooks of steel." Character drawing and underlying motives in the story are handled in a human way and the entire production shows careful thought. A freer use of the skill of the dramatist would have sharpened the interest and provided a strong finish without resorting to the lost child incident. It is not only necessary to have a good story to tell; it should be told in the most dramatic manner when intended for the screen.

Henry B. Walthall appears as Emerson Mead, an independent cattleman whose two pals are ready to go through fire for his sake. Colonel Whittaker, head of the Fillmore Cattle Company, is Mead's enemy, and when the Colonel's son disappears Emerson is accused of killing him. Mead is arrested but escapes. He sends word that he will give himself up if proof be found that young Whittaker is really dead. The love motive centers in Marguerite Delarue. Albert Wellesley, of the Fillmore company, is also in love with Marguerite.

Before the end of the story Emerson has to give himself up, as he promised. He also hears that Marguerite is engaged to Wellesley. On the day of his trial his two pals offer themselves as hostages so that Mead can join the hunt for Marguerite's little brother, who is lost in the mountain. He finds the boy, establishes his innocence by discovering young Whittaker and beats his rival in the race for Marguerite.

The locations have been chosen expertly and the mob scenes are well arranged. Henry B. Walthall is vigorously and thoroughly artistic as Mead. Mary Charleson, William De Vaull, Joseph J. Dowling, Howard Crampton and Roy Laidlaw are the leading members of an efficient support. Robert Newhard was the photographer.

"RIDERS OF THE NIGHT."

Viola Dana's Acting the Outstanding Feature in Melodramatic Story.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

THE Metro release for April 29 in five reels, "Riders of the Night," is a melodramatic subject deriving its chief entertainment value from the excellent work of the star, Viola Dana. Some of the situations are not altogether consistent, and there is a tendency to overdo them for dramatic effect.

The story is of the blue grass region of Kentucky, and deals with Sally Castleton, a poor descendant of a fine, old confederate veteran. John Deer, a hard-hearted man and owner of the tollgates, is hated by the villagers. He desires to win Sally. His cousin, Milt, also loves Sally, and his love is returned. There is a raid on the tollgates by masked riders, and "The Killer," one of the band, blames the murder of two men on Milt. John is shot, and Sally, believing Milt is guilty, says she is the guilty party. Milt learns that "The Killer" is the real murderer, overpowers him after a struggle, and brings him to the jail just as Sally is about to be hanged.

John H. Collins directed the production. The photography and settings are satisfactory. However, some of the scenes are too grewsome; for example, where Sally, looking out of the window sees the jailer's assistants rehearsing the hanging; also where she is shown on the scaffold with the black cap over her head. Also the scene is overdone where Milt, as Sally is about to be hanged, rides a considerable distance on horseback after "The Killer," overpowers him following a fierce fight, and drags him on foot all the way back to jail, arriving in time to prevent Sally's execution.

The supporting cast, consisting of Russell Simpson as the grandfather, Mabel Van Buren as the cruel aunt, George Chesebro as Milt, Clifford Bruce as John, and Monte Blue as "The Killer," enact their roles satisfactorily, except that Blue shows a tendency to overact.

The production as a whole is hardly up to the Metro standard.

"THE BANDIT AND THE PREACHER"

W. H. Company Will Release Well-Remembered Hart Offering.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IT is easy to understand the gradual building up of the William S. Hart following among screen lovers when one looks at such a splendid reissue as "The Bandit and the Preacher," known to lovers of photoplay three years ago as "On the Night Stage." Such a story, once seen, could not well be forgotten, and it is undoubtedly the type of yarn that will go well on second showing.

The story was produced by Ince and written by C. Gardner Sullivan. It concerns three strong men, all of whom love the same woman—a bandit, a preacher and a gambler. Wm. S. Hart, Robert Edeson and Herschel Mayall play the roles respectively, giving a splendid contrast in the varying standards of the human tribe. Rhea Mitchell plays the girl, her part being that of a dance hall queen, beloved first by the bandit, who turns her over to the preacher, and then by the gambler, who makes a fatal bid for her love in the closing reels.

Elemental passion in its most picturesque form is brought out in the story. There is genuine feeling in the scenes leading up to the friendship between the bandit and the preacher and their mutual love for the girl. This comes about only after the preacher has entered into hand-to-hand conflict in behalf of the bandit, and each sees that the other is at heart a man. The bandit sacrifices the girl to the preacher, and later it is also the bandit who saves the girl from the advances of the gambler when he tries to lure her back to the old life.

The settings are of a rugged, primitive type, entirely in keeping with the tale.

"SOCIAL AMBITION."

Selexart-Goldwyn Production Features Howard Hickman and Rhea Mitchell.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

AN interesting contrast between high social life in New York and the rugged life of an Alaska mining camp is afforded in this number. In the matter of settings and general atmosphere the New York end of the story leads the interest; there is, in fact, a certain authority about the social scenes that is unusual in pictures. The Alaskan end is at times slightly commonplace and mechanical in development.

Howard Hickman and Rhea Mitchell have the leading roles, but Katherine Kirkham does an excellent character bit as the cold-hearted, designing first wife who throws her husband over after his financial failure and later makes an unsuccessful effort to win him back.

The part of the huband is one that appeals to the sympathies. In the beginning Vincent Manton is a well-known broker in the financial district. He borrows money to keep up with his wife's social climbing, and eventually goes on the rocks as a result. She gets a divorce, and squeezes him of his last cent for alimony. He takes to drink, and eventually turns up in a mining camp in Alaska, where he meets further hard knocks, and finally marries Rose, the belle of the camp. He strikes it rich, returns to New York to sell stock in his mine, and again meets the first wife But he discovers the nature of her interest in him, and soon returns to Rose in Alaska.

This story might well have been told in a number of reels less than seven, which would have heightened the suspense. A too frequent use of subtitles also has a tendency to disturb the generally smooth action of the piece.

THREE O. HENRY STORIES.

General Shows Interesting Adaptations of Author's Works.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

OF the three adaptations of stories by O. Henry shown by General Film Company, "The Buyer from Cactus City" will be probably the most entertaining to average audiences. However, all three are interesting, and retain to a large extent the spirit of the author. "Nemesis and the Candy Man" deviates more than the others from the original story.

"Rubaiyat of a Scotch Highball."

As the title implies this two-reel picture deals largely with the subject of drink. Bob, a clerk, marries a simple country girl. Both are admirers of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam. He introduces her to a world-be Bohemian crowd, and strong drink and hollow festivities become a part of their life. Bob finally is led to a realization of what his fate will be, and decides to stop drinking. Jess becomes sarcastic, and Bob is about to give in, when Jess, in a flash, realizes the situation, and sweeps the bottle and glasses to the floor. Agnes Ayres and Edward Earle are excellent in the leading roles.

"Nemesis and the Candy Man."

Walter Ives buys motto kisses from a candy man for his sweetheart, Honoria. He later meets Mlle. Adele, a dancer, becomes infatuated with her, and neglects Honoria, who breaks their engagement. Adele, desiring to fascinate all men, exercises her wiles on the candy man, who also succumbs to her charms, and lays his heart at her feet. She only laughs at him, but he has his satisfaction, for just at this time she receives a note from Walter, the only man she really loves, that he has become reconciled with Honoria, and that they are to be married immediately. The roles of Ives, the candy man, Honoria, and Adele are satisfactorily handled by Ed Burns, William Dunn, Nina Byron, and Miriam Miles, respectively. Miriam Miles work being especially good.

"The Buyer From Cactus City."

Platt, the junior member of Navarro and Platt, Cactus City, Texas, makes his first trip to New York to buy women's suits. In Miss Ascher, a model for Zizzbaum & Co., he sees his ideal. He takes her to dine, and gives her a diamond ring he has purchased. Misunderstanding him, she turns him down, and leaves the restaurant. He follows her to her home and at the door she slaps his face. Just then a ring falls at her feet, but it is not the diamond, but a wedding ring. She realizes her error, and gladly plans to go back with him to Texas. Miriam Myles' work as Miss Ascher and William Dunn as Platt are convincing, and they are ably assisted by Denton Vane as Zizzbaum, Jr., Harry Eytinge as Zizzbaum, Sr., and Charles Ranson as Navarro.

"SELFISH YATES."

Paramount Presents William S. Hart in a Strong Story by Sullivan.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AN entirely new characterization and one of the strongest stories William S. Hart has appeared in, "Selfish Yates" is a sign-post indicating the surest way to motion picture progress. Not only are there present other contrasting characterizations to that of the lead, but definite purpose as well, clear exposition and more than one subtle appeal to the emotions. There is also no sign of those small inanities which the reviewer hates to notice, but which jar on common sense. All these advantages are due to true authorship, sincerity linked to skill. Both author and actor-director are to be congratulated on working out a high-class screen product through harmony of relation and clear understanding of what goes over to the audience.

Starting with these advantages, Mr. Hart goes deeper into revelation of mind and heart than he has heretofore done, proving that he does not need a vehicle and that he can interpret other roles than those in which he repeated himself almost too often. The part he plays is decidedly representative, that of a man who believes the only way to success lies through completely ignoring sentiment, the "business is business" idea. He is represented as an individualist. "You can do as you please—that is your privilege—so long as you don't get in my way, and I shall do as I please anyway."

Through ignoring the claims of feeling, he has become proprietor of a dive in an Arizona mining camp, a big toad in a dirty little puddle, when there is injected into his complacent life two forlorn girls, daughters of a prospector who has died on the desert. These forlorn and helpless creatures receive little help and less kindness in the rough settlement, but they are given shelter in a rude shack, and the elder gets work as a scrubwoman in the dive of "Selfish Yates."

Now begins to percolate through the hardship of their lives some native sweetness and the results of refined environment. There is no sudden conversion of character in "Selfish Yates," and none among his followers. It is by gradual and subtle process that the finer natures of rude men and dissolute women are aroused. The tough little adopted son of the dive keeper, "Hotfoot," gets a lesson in chivalry from the younger sister, and his reform becomes contagious. "Selfish Yates" is led to refuse drink to a young victim of alcoholism and later give the boy a decent funeral. At the latter, while the elder sister is playing a melodion, old memories, half-erased from besotted minds, are revived with a result both strange and purifying.

When this frail little flower of a girl droops and fails, lies at the point of death from brutal assault, manhood asserts itself through the protective instinct, and Selfish Yates rises out of the primitive to discover he has a soul. The dramatic conclusion is a grateful relief, out of the commonplace and far more satisfying, an appropriate end to a pure and simple screen story finely conceived and ably interpreted, one of the very best of its kind.

Comments

General Film Company.

SPYING THE SPY (Ebony).—This comedy, enacted almost entirely by negro players, deals with an amateur spy hunter, who, thinking he is on the trail of spies, gets into the rooms of a secret society and is made to go through an initiation. There are some humorous situations and several laughs.

SLIPPERY SLIM AND THE TOMBSTONE.—This Essanay comedy reissue has several laughs, and deals with Slim's taking out a life insurance. He leaves home, making his wife think he has been drowned. Later he returns and finds that Mustang Pete is making love to Sophie, and that a tombstone has been erected to his (Slim's) memory. After Sophie collects the insurance money, Slim decided to prove that he is really alive. The cast consists of Victor Potel, Harry Todd and Margaret Joslin.

THE RUBAIYAT OF A SCOTCH HIGHBALL.—Omar Khayyam's celebrated poem forms the basis of this two-reel O. Henry story. A young couple join a would-be Bohemian crowd, and drink is beginning to get the best of them when the young man realizes the situation and decides to stop. His wife does not see it that way, but when he is about to give in to her way of thinking, her better self awakes. This is an interesting number with Agnes Ayres and Edward Earle in the leading roles. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

Arrow Film Corporation.

THE ACCIDENTAL HONEYMOON (Rapf).—Capt. Robert Warwick and Elaine Hammerstein lead the cast in this five-part comedy by Leonce Perret. The picture is entertaining. A longer review appears on another page of this issue.

Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

THE BIGGEST SHOW ON EARTH, May 6.—The story of a circus girl, lion tamer, contrasted with her experiences at school and in high society, with Enid Bennett very charming in the leading role. Reviewed in last week's issue.

HIS SMOTHERED LOVE (Mack Sennett), May 6.—A two-reel farce comedy with Chester Conklin in the lead. Highly ingenious and a solid laugh from start to finish. Reviewed in last week's issue.

RESURRECTION, May 6. —This five-part screen version of Tolstoy's powerful novel has Pauline Frederick as the heroine. The story is truthful but unpleasant. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

MILE-A-MINUTE KENDALL, May 13.—Taken from the play by Owen Davis, this five-part picture, with Jack Pickford in the title role, has a light-weight plot, but will amuse many spectators. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

TRUE BLUE (Fox Standard), May 5.—An interesting melodrama, with William Farnum as hero. The setting is mostly a ranch in a rolling prairie country contrasting with aristocratic scenes around the hero's father, who is an earl. There is plenty of hard riding and the usual cowboy atmosphere. The story is good and has the real American democratic flavor. A longer notice will be found on another page of this issue.

BRAVE AND BOLD (Fox Special), May 5.—A six-reel melodrama, with George Walsh. It is especially exciting, has some marvelous stunts by this agile and athletic young actor, and is pretty sure to be generally liked. We have reviewed it at greater length on another page of the current issue.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

JOAN OF PLATTSBURG, May 5.—Porter Emerson Browne is the author of this six-part story, which is patriotic without losing sight of the heart interest. The picture will please any body of spectators. Mabel Normand is the star. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

SOCIAL AMBITION (Selexart-Goldwyn).—Seven-reel subject, depicting social life in New York as contrasted with the rugged mining life of Alaska. The story concerns a man who deserted one to find happiness in the other. This gets a firm hold on the interest, though it is not particularly dramatic in treatment. Howard Hickman and Rhea Mitchell play the leads. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

THE LITTLE RUNAWAY, May 6.—A five-reel Blue Ribbon feature, giving a comedy that is pretty sure to please. It is gracefully acted. The director has enriched it with bits of village life and interesting touches of humanity. A longer notice will be found on another page of this issue.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

WITH HOOPS OF STEEL (Paralta), April 29.—Henry B. Walthall plays a western hero in this six-part picture, which is a human story of the cattle country. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE DAGGER WOMAN (Pathe-Russian Art), May 12.—A five-reel subject, featuring Ivan Mozukin and Olga Zovska, two finished Russian performers, in a story by L. Andrieff. The plot is familiar and concerns an artist who induces a society girl to pose for him at the expense of her reputation. There is a double tragedy at the close. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

HAUNTS OF EVIL (Pathe), May 19.—Episode No. 11 of "The House of Hate." After attacking Queenie Kate and making her a captive, Pearl and Gresham decide to invade the gang headquarters. Pearl poses as Kate's Sister, in order to learn the identity of the Hooded Terror. Kate escapes and plans a scheme by which Gresham and Pearl will shoot each other in a certain building, each mistaking the other for the Terror. The instalment is well directed and leads up to a strong climax.

TWO-GUN GUSSIE (Pathe-Rolin), May 19.—Another breezy number, featuring Harold Lloyd and his capable assistants, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. Harold appears as piano player in a western mining town. He is mistaken for a very tough guy and tries to live up to the part in an enjoyable way. This is typically amusing.

W. H. Productions, Inc.

THE BANDIT AND THE PREACHER (W. H. Productions, Inc.).—A five-reel reissue, featuring Wm. S. Hart, Robert Edeson, Herschell Mayall and Rhea Mitchell. This is one of the strongest of the first Wm. S. Hart issues, the story, by C. Gardner Sullivan, dealing with elemental passions in picturesque form. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

"THE DAGGER WOMAN."

Pathe Presents Ivan Mozukin and Olga Zovska in L. Andreiff's Story, Produced by Russian Art Film Corp. Directed by M. O. Sudokoff. Released May 12.

Cast.

Ivan Savonsky.....Ivan Mozukin
Olga Kartoff.....Olga Zovska

The Story: Although Olga Kartoff, the daughter of a wealthy Russian, is a leader in her own set, she knows little of worldly happenings. A number of her friends preparing for a society tableau visit Ivan Savonsky, one of the most brilliant artists in Moscow, for advice in arranging the affair. Savonsky sees in Olga, who has accompanied her friends, the type of woman he is seeking for his masterpiece, "The Dagger Woman," and finally persuades her to be his model. Olga manages to escape from her watchful parent each time a sitting is required, and as the painting is nearing completion the artist becomes so engrossed in his work that he begins to act coldly toward his model, who has fallen in love with him. His attitude hurts her and in the Spring, when the portrait is put on exhibition and the work acclaimed a wonder, Nicholas Kartoff receives word that his daughter has posed for the artist. He hurries to the studio and an intensely gripping climax follows.

Feature Ivan Mozukin as Ivan Savonsky and Olga Zovska as Olga Kartoff.

Program and Advertising Phrases: A Deeply Emotional Reflection of Events in Real Life with Episodes Based on Fact.
Pictures of Artistic Moscow Society Before the Revolution.
An Awakened Love Brings Belated Happiness.

Cast.

Harry Lange.....Arthur Maude
Milli .....Rhea Mitchell
Isabelle .....Bessie Barriscale
The Devil.....Edward J. Connelly
Elsa .....Clara Williams

The Story: Harry Lange, an artist, casts Milli, his model and sweetheart, aside when his love for Isabelle, a former sweetheart, flames anew. Isabelle, who has not seen Lange for some time, has since married and, together with her husband, she visits the artist's studio to have her portrait painted. The husband, leaving his wife in the studio, goes on business, and during his absence the Devil appears and recalls to Isabelle and Lange the pleasant times they had in the years gone by. When the husband returns he is surprised to see that no work has been done on the painting, and the Devil explains that the delay was due to his interference. As Isabelle and her husband are about to leave, Milli comes in and would have wreaked vengeance but for the Devil, who bids her wait until some future time. When Lange is alone the Devil suggests that he get rid of Milli as she is now beginning to get troublesome, and places a revolver in his hand. From this point on the picture is

"WHY—THE BOLSHEVIKI."

Export and Import Film Co. Releases a Five-Reel Drama Through General Film Company.

(Cast Not Given.)

The Story: The action takes place in Russia during the reign of Ivan IV, "The Terrible." In driving the peasants into military duty to check the progress of Tartar tribes, Ivan meets a seeress, who predicts that he is going to meet with a great misfortune. For this prediction he kills the woman and later becomes the guest of Alexander, the provincial governor, whose wife, Marie, he victimizes. The action is now lifted forward a number of years, and Vladimir is exiled by Ivan for saving Helene, a girl reared by the governor and his wife, from the insults of one of his (Ivan's) henchmen. When Vladimir and a number of other youths come to Ivan to plea for mercy he orders them slain, but Vladimir recovers and becomes a monk. The governor's palace is burned. Ivan has Helene taken to his court, where he plans her disgrace. Alexander prevents this by announcing that Helene is Ivan's own daughter. Remorseful, Ivan, wishing to confess, sends for a monk. Vladimir comes and would have slain Ivan, but is prevented by Helene. Remorse gnaws at the heart of Ivan and he kills himself.

Dorothea.....Baby Ivy Ward
Johnathon Moses Chi Wu Lung, Charles Fang
Jasper Stone.....John Prescott
Mary Higgins.....Helen Dunbar
Owen Chase.....Eugene Borden
The Widow Pryor.....Sue Balfour
Old Settler.....'Pop" Kennard
Sheriff.....Robert Carson

The Story: Cyrus Higgins, D.D., comes to the little town of Yellville to preach the Gospel of God after several others have failed. The rough element of the place having been successful in getting rid of the other ministers have no intention of tolerating Higgins and they set about to oust him. But when Higgins downs Jasper Stone, a scheming deputy sheriff, in a fist fight, they see that he is a different type of man and order begins to come out of chaos. The fight was brought about by Higgins interceding in behalf of Sally Phillips, who took refuge in the minister's house in her flight from Stone. When the fight terminates one of the setlers remarks: "Now I know what C. Higgins, D.D., means. It is Cyclone Higgins, Damn Dangerous!" Mary Higgins, the sister of the minister, takes Sally to the city to educate her, and upon her return to Yellville Higgins finds that his love for Sally is reciprocated.

Cast.

Bavahari.....Theda Bara
Sir John Dare.....Hugh Thompson
Ysora, a priest.....Victor Kennard
M. Romaine.....Anthony Merlow
His Wife.....Florence Martin
Her Father.....Jack Ridgway
Stage Manager.....Henry Warwick

The Story: The widowed mother of Bavahari, an East Indian dancer of considerable fame, fearing for her daughter's morals, brings her to the Temple where Bava consecrates herself as a religious dancer. While dancing at a religious festival at the Temple, Bava falls in front of Sir John Dare, a major in the English army, who aids her. For intervening the priests, headed by Ysora, the high priest, rush toward Sir John and would have killed him but for Bava. As punishment for interfering Bava is commanded to pray before Buddha all night, but she escapes, meets Sir John and they are married. Sir John is cashiered from the army for his escapade, and a year later a child is born to the couple. Ysora, who has vowed vengeance, kills the baby and Bava leaves her husband. Sometime later in Paris where she is making her premier appearance on the opera stage Bava is slain by Ysora, who is disguised as Buddha, thereby carrying out his full oath of vengeance.

Feature Theda Bara as Bavahari and Hugh Thompson as Sir John Dare.

Program and Advertising Phrases: The Death Sign Follows All Who Recant Buddhaism. Theda Bara Gets It at the Top of Her Career.

From the Temples of the Most High Comes Mystery and Death.

Screen Vampire Turns to Buddha and Is Scornfully Rebuffed.

Love Penetrates the Veil of Mystery and Lures Dancer to Death.

Advertising Suggestions: There's a chance here to capitalize on Miss Bara's sensational screen exploits by newspaper advertising and extra billposting and lithographing. There are great numbers who fancy Bara's style of photoplaying, and they should be notified.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x 10, 11x14, 22x28. Press sheets and mats. (Mats may be secured free by writing to the Fox Film Corporation, Publicity Department, New York City.) Cuts are made on special order at the rate of 20 cents per column.

"THE TWO-SOUL WOMAN."

Universal Presents Priscilla Dean in Elmer Clifton's Screen Version of "The White Cat," a Novel by Gelett Burgess. Released May 11.

Cast.

Joy Fielding, Edna, her other self, Priscilla Dean
Chester Castle.....Ashton Dearholt
Dr. Copin.....Joseph Girard
Leah.....Evelyn Selbie

The Story: Chester Castle, who has met with an automobile accident, is rescued by Joy Fielding and taken to her home. During his convalescence he falls in love with her, and is startled to find one day that the kind-hearted and sympathetic Joy has suddenly changed into a coarse and vulgar woman. Chester concludes that Joy must be afflicted with a dual personality, and starts to investigate. He hears that Joy assumes the repulsive personality of Edna, the name under which she is known when in the abhorrent moods, only after coming in contact with Dr. Copin, the physician to the Fielding family, and that Copin hypnotizes her in order that she may be repellant to all men except him, for he intends to marry her in order to get hold of the Fielding fortune. The plans of the doctor, however, are frustrated by Chester, who later makes Joy his wife.

Feature Priscilla Dean, who portrays the dual roles of Joy Fielding and Edna, and Ashton Dearholt as Chester Castle.

Program and Advertising Phrases: How a Female "Jekyl and Hyde" Shook Off Her Evil Genius, Saved Her Fortune, and Gained Happiness.

Cast.

Joe Warner.....Frank McQuarrie
Pete Wright.....Jack Curtis
George Merritt.....Roy Stewart
Ruth Warner.....Josie Sedgwick
Jose Mardones.....Louis Durham
Foreman Merritt Ranch..Curley Baldwin

The Story: The progressiveness of George Merritt, a cattleman, arouses the enmity of Joe Warner, owner of the Cross J ranch. Pete Wright, foreman of the ranch, is in love with Ruth Warner, and when he sees her in the company of Merritt, he instigates a feud between Merritt and Warner, but a fight between the two is averted by Ruth. Later, when Warner is shot by marauding Mexicans, he is of the impression that Merritt's men are attacking his ranch. Warner's cowboys enter the fray and are losing when they discover that they are being attacked by Mexicans. They are saved by the arrival of the cowboys of the Merritt ranch. Ruth meanwhile has been abducted by Wright, but is rescued by Merritt. Wright is killed and the differences between Merritt and Warner settled. Merritt becomes partner to Warner and also the husband of Ruth.

Feature Jack Curtis as Pete Wright and Josie Sedgwick as Ruth Warner.

"THE MARVELOUS MACISTE."

Hanover Film Co. Presents Maciste, the Hero of "Cabiria" and "The Warrior," in His Greatest Screen Exploitation. Comedy Drama in Six Parts. Released Through General Film Company.

Cast.

Maciste.....Ernesto Pagano
Josephine.....Arline Costello
Her Mother.....Louise Farnsworth
Duke Alexis.....Robert Ormand

The Story: The uncle of Josephine employs gangsters to abduct her, and in fleeing from them she enters a motion picture theater, where she sees Maciste playing in the screen drama, "Cabiria." The story pictures Maciste escaping from prison by bending iron bars, and Josephine decides that a man of his strength can be of much assistance to her. She obtains his address, and going to him she relates her experience. At first he is inclined to doubt the truthfulness of her story, but later, when he sees half a dozen ruffians attacking her, he intercedes in the girl's behalf, and single handed subdues them. Maciste demonstrates his marvelous strength in many other thrilling incidents, and finally runs down the uncle and his gang, and turns them over to the authorities.

Feature Ernesto Pagano as Maciste and Arline Costello as Josephine.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Giant in Size and Strength Renews Wonder Through His Prowess and Marvelous Feats of Brawn.
Maciste "of "Cabiria" and "The Warrior" Greater Than Ever.
Tower of Strength in Italian Army Gets Leave for Screen Work.
Astonishing Achievements of a Marvelous Screen Goliath.
The World's Strongest Man Does Gigantic Things Immensely.
Giant Star of "Cabiria," the First Great Super-Photoplay.

Advertising Suggestions: Maciste was reported dead. Austrian soldiers could not kill him, though he towered above his companions. Exploit him as athlete, giant in strength and size, and skillful actor as well. The newspapers will prove the best medium for publicity.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet. Two three-sheets. Two six-sheets. One twenty-four-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Three styles each of one and two-column cuts. Slides. press sheets.

"THE TRIUMPH OF VENUS."

Victory Film Manufacturing Co. Presents Betty Lee, a Woman with Form Divine, in Edwin Bower Hesser's Production. Photographed by Otto Brautigam. Released Through General Film Company.

Cast.

Venus.....Betty Lee
Cupid.....Bonnie Marie
Jove.....John Fedris
Juno.....Beatrice Armstrong
Mercury.....A. Freeland
Diana.....Phyllis Beveridge
Vulcan.....Percy Standing
Apollo.....Don McDonald
Mars.....Carl Dane
Hebe.....Ruth Bradley
The Sculptor.....William Sherwood
Nea.....Grace Hamel
Pannas.....Hassam Mussalli
The Oracle.....M. Paul Roche

The Story: For rejecting his love Jove leaves Venus to the mercies of Vulcan, the monster blacksmith. When Venus escapes and is saved from recapture by Mars, Vulcan tosses his magic net about the couple, and they become hopelessly entangled. The music of Apollo lulls Vulcan to sleep, and he rescues Venus, who goes to the Isle of Milo, where she falls in love with the Sculptor. A daughter, Nea, is born of this earthly union. The Sculptor is slain by Diana when he sees her in bathing. When Nea, grown to womanhood, becomes enamored of Pannas, a fisher youth, she is imprisoned in a rock by the jealous Diana, but is later released by Cupid. Venus intercedes with Jove in behalf of Pannas, captured by bandits, and his life is saved. Pannas and Nea are brought before Jove, who bestows upon them life eternal.

Feature Betty Lee as Venus, Bonnie Marie as Cupid, and John Fedris as Jove.

Program and Advertising Phrases: The Goddesses of Mythology Meet in Competition, Making the Screen a Mirror of Physical Loveliness.
Feminine Forms Flit Through Photographic Fairyland.
Film Spectacle of Surpassing Beauty.
Betty Lee Realizes the Imaginative Charms of Venus.
Now Olympus Gets Into the Movies, With Venus Starring.
Greek Deities Brought to Life in Dazzling Screen Loveliness.

Advertising Suggestions: The natural insinuation of feminine and physical loveliness should not be carried too far, although nobody would expect Venus to wear a kimona. The artistic impressiveness of the subject must be emphasized to avoid hesitancy on the better class of patrons. Consider the film as a brilliant spectacular offering, and make the most of your opportunity.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets. Two six-sheets. One twenty-four-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Three styles each of one and two-column cuts. Slides. Press sheets.

"DENNY FROM IRELAND."

The W. H. Clifford Photoplays Co. Presents Shorty Hamilton in Mr. Clifford's Irish-American Romantic Comedy-Drama. Released by Ernest Shipman.

Cast.

Denny O'Hara.....Shorty Hamilton
Eileen O'Connor.....Ellen Terry
Mrs. O'Hara, Denny's mother, Florence Drew
Priest .....Andrew Arbuckle
Sheriff .....Cameron Cannon
Express Agent.....Ralph Bell
Landlord .....Louis Morrison
Detective .....U. G. Calvin

The Story: As Denny O'Hara is celebrating his wedding to Eileen O'Connor he receives word that his invalid mother has been evicted. He hurries to her bedside to find her dead. He vows to kill the landlord, but finds that he has been killed by a poacher whose aim was poor. The poacher confesses to the priest who, realizing that Denny will be blamed, aids him in escaping to America. Denny leaves his wife behind, telling her that he will send for her as soon as he has the money. Finding that making money in Arizona, where he has gone, is a slow job, Denny decides upon robbing an express shipment of money. Thieves beat him at his own game, but later Denny discovers where the loot has been hidden, takes it and buries it on his ranch. He then is informed that his wife has started for America. They are living happily when a detective traces Denny. Denny, however, is saved from imprisonment by the sheriff who, having made him a deputy, declares to the officer that Denny has located the money. Denny subsequently captures the thieves, thereby removing all evidence of crime from his name.

Feature Shorty Hamilton as Denny O'Hara and Ellen Terry as Eileen O'Connor.

Program and Advertising Phrases: A Comedy Drama Uniting Romance of Ireland with Adventure in America.

Shorty Hamilton Presented in the Best Role of His Career.
True Irish Hearts Win Victory Over Intrigue.
Love and Romance Mingled with Stirring Adventure.

Sparkling Irish Comedy Combined with Romantic Adventure.

Advertising Suggestions: In Irish-American communities this feature will have particular appeal. Make a special effort to interest Irish societies and Catholic fraternities in the presentations.

Advertising Aids: One style each of one, three, six and 24-sheets. Heralds. Lobby displays. Cuts. Press sheets.

"JOURNEY'S END."

World Pictures Present Ethel Clayton in Director Traverse Vale's Production. Photographed by Max Schneider. Released May 13.

Cast.

Aline Marsden.....Ethel Clayton
Phil Marsden.....John Bowers
Jess Alden.....Muriel Ostriche
Pop Moore.....Jack Drumier
Bernice De Armond.....Louis Vale
Wayne Annis.....Frank Mayo
H. E. Barnet.....Victor Kennard
Bernice's Maid.....Jean Loew

The Story: Aline, the young and pretty wife of Phil Marsden, longs for an admirer. Jessica Alden, Aline's sister, is shocked, but the spirit of adventure has seized Aline. Aline bets her sister that within five hours she will capture a suitor, and Jessica, although astonished beyond measure, takes the bet. In less than an hour Aline has the admirer she craved for. From this point on events happen rapidly for Aline, her admirer and her husband. Phil comes to the seashore where Aline, her sister, her guardian, and her admirer, are stopping, and Phil finds it impossible to interfere with Aline's freedom, because he had signed an agreement guaranteeing Aline absolute freedom and independence for three months. But, seeing Aline admired and courted by another man, perturbs him greatly. To add to his discomfiture the stage woman with whom he had become infatuated comes to the seashore. It would be injuring the effect to relate here the startling and thrilling incidents that bring the offering to a most unexpected close.

Feature Ethel Clayton as Aline Marsden, John Bowers as Phil, her husband, and Muriel Ostriche as Jess Alden.

Program and Advertising Phrases:
"Trip no further, pretty sweeting;
Journeys end in lovers meeting."—Shakespeare.

Love Grown Cold Revived by Jealousy.
Wife and Husband Agree, Disagree—and Then Find Happiness.
Domestic Felicity and Infelicity Makes Gripping Photoplay.
Harmless Flirtations Mystify and Capture a Recreant Spouse.
Ethel Clayton Starring in Her Most Charming Characterization.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Free advance poster. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Two-color heralds. One and two-column cuts. Slides. Press sheet.

"THE SILENT WITNESS."

Authors Film Co. Presents Gertrude McCoy in Gerald F. Bacon's Production Based on Otto Hauerbach's Great Stage Success. Released by Foursquare Exchanges.

Cast.

Sarah Blakeley.....Alphie James
Norman Blakeley....Alexander J. Herbert
Helen Hastings.....Gertrude McCoy
Rigsby.....Fred Graham
Bud Morgan.....Junius Mathews
Pelham.....Edward Fosberg
Mr. Weldon.....Albert Phillips
Wilbur Weldon.....Rouloff E. Cutton
Travers.....Jack Sherrill
Richard Morgan.....Frank L. A. O'Connor
Ruth Pelham.....Helen May

The Story: The narrative opens in Denver, where a young woman is engaged to a college student named Morgan, who disappears after a dormitory fire in which he is believed to have lost his life. Shortly after a boy is born to her, and she takes up her residence elsewhere. The action then jumps ahead a number of years, and the mother who has taken the name of Morgan is enabled by her industry to send her son, whom she has named Bud, to college. Because he is of poor parentage he is mistreated by wealthy fellow students, one of whom has learned the secret of Bud's life. In defending his mother's name, Bud fights with this youth, and imagines that he has killed him. Arrested, Bud Morgan faces trial for his life, and at the crucial moment the district attorney, returning from a vacation, takes the case. The district attorney, Richard Morgan, does not know that the defendent is his own son, nor does the boy suspect the relationship. The development of the climax and the manner in which the author handles a situation in which mother, son, and father figure is deft to the last degree.

Feature Gertrude McCoy as Helen Hastings and Frank L. A. O'Connor as Richard Morgan.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Innocent Victim of the Law Faces Death for a Crime No One Had Committed.

One of the Greatest Stage Successes Ever Recorded.
Deep Mystery Unraveled When Suspense Climaxes in Exposure.
Gertrude McCoy at Her Best in Intensely Emotional Role.

"SHAME."

Duplex Films, Inc., Presents Zena Keefe in John W. Noble's Great Sociological Problem Drama. Released by General Film Company.

Cast.

Mary McDavitt, Mary Grey...Zena Keefe
Donald Strong.....Niles Welch
Mary's father.....Fred Stall
Peters.....Lionel Belmore
Seppe.....Paul Doucet
Doctor Strong.....Jack Dunn
Society Girl.....Joyce Fair
Cabaret Dancer.....John Davidson

The Story: At the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, John Gray leaves Mary McDavitt, his sweetheart, to go to Cuba as a volunteer. The weeks pass, and Mary learns that she is to become a mother. So she departs for Cuba that she may be properly married, but her sweetheart is shot on the day she arrives, and dies before the ceremony can be performed. Returning home she makes a broken-hearted confession to her father, and is banished from the house. Subsequently, she dies, leaving a baby girl behind her. The rest of the picture deals with the career of the infant daughter grown to womanhood, and her unequal fight against the stigma of her birth. From orphan asylum to farm employment she at length meets and loves the son of the very physician who was present at her father's death-bed.

Feature Zena Keefe as Mary McDavitt and Mary Grey, and Niles Welch as Donald Strong.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Timely, Significant and Daring Theme Presented in Impelling Sociological Demonstrations.

A Plea to Make the World Safe for Children.
Powerful Indictment of Societies, Laws and Ethics.
Lesson for the Sufferings of Misjudged Humanity.
Love and Romance That Stands the Acid Test of Life.
Betraying the World's Unjust Condemnation of Illegitimate Life.

Advertising Suggestions: "There are no illegitimate children any more. That word should be expunged forever"—the basis of the theme. Child life grows more precious as every gun expels its deadly charge on the battle fronts. The problem of the future must be worked out with every passing day. Interest the medical fraternity, welfare and civic societies—give an advance showing to invited audience selected from leading citizens, ministers, doctors, etc. Get the newspapers interested. There is a chance for real showmanship here.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet. Two three-sheets. Two six-sheets. One twenty-four-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Three styles each of one and two-column cuts. Slides. Press sheets.

"M'LISS."

Artcraft Presents Mary Pickford in Screen Version of Bret Harte's Great Story (Stage Version by Clay M. Greene). Scenario by Frances Marion. Photographed by Walter Stradling. Directed by Marshall Neilan. Released May 13.

Cast.

M'liss.....Mary Pickford
"Bummer" Smith.....Theodore Roberts
Charles Gray.....Thomas Meighan
Yuba Bill.....Charles Ogle
Judge McSnagley.....Tully Marshall
Mexican Joe.....Monte Blue
Clytemnestra Veronica McSnagley, Helen Kelly
Clara Parker.....Winifred Greenwood
Jim Peterson.....Val Paul
Sheriff Sandy Waddles.....W. H. Brown
Parson Bean.....John Burton
Butch Saunders.....Bud Post
Snakebite Saunders.....Guy Oliver

The Story: M'liss is an untutored, unkempt child of the hills, caring for her dissipated father and gradually succumbing to the refining influence of the new school teacher, but the trend of the story is far from being passive. "Bummer" Smith is heir to a large estate, for the possession of which Jim Peterson is conspiring. He has Smith murdered by a Mexican bad man, and Charles Gray, the school teacher, is arrested as the assassin. M'liss assists in Gray's escape, the subsequent establishment of his innocence, and the love existing between them is cemented.

Feature Mary Pickford as M'liss and Thomas Meighan as Charles Gray.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Bringing to the Screen Memories of Annie Pixley's Tremendous Vogue of Other Ways When "M'liss" was History-making Success.

Going Back Thirty Years to Recall Bret Harte's Great Story.
"Our Mary's" Newest and Greatest Screen Success.
Bret Harte's Idyl of the Golden West "In the Days of '49."
Famous Story Appealingly Told by Famous Screen Queen.
Laughs, Sobs and Thrills in Gripping Story of Rugged West.

Advertising Suggestions: New generations will be advised by their elders to see "M'liss," the great drama of other days. Bret Harte's books are still largely read. Mary Pickford's popularity, plus the play, may best be exploited in newspapers to couple with Artcraft's national advertising campaign.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

Issue No. 71 (May 17).

Agriculture—Strawberry Time Is Here. No "berryless" days have been declared yet and there aren't going to be if Warren County, Kentucky, lives up to its reputation this year.—Official film of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Historic Places—English Cradle of Our Liberty. The British Government has just purchased the home of the ancestors of George Washington in the village of Sulgrave, England, as a historic memento. Enemies once—inseparable Allies now!

Our Animal Friends—Chow Dog's Day. Every dog has his day and "Chows" are now having theirs. Originally imported from China, they are the most popular breed in this country at present.

Industry—Making Rubber Boots. Rubber abolished wet feet from the Arctic to the Equator, but only the modern, one-piece boot stands these extremes of climate. (Courtesy of the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Co.).

Animated Interviews—Col. Roosevelt Talks On Universal Service. Teddy, foremost patriot of our time, whose sons Archie, Kermit and Theodore, and son-in-law, Dr. Derby, are now at the front, reminds us again of our duty as citizens of a democracy. (Arranged by Martha Goode Anderson).

Art—Miracles in Mud, Produced by Willie Hopkins.

Issue No. 72 (May 24).

Agriculture—Everybody Helps in the Big Farm Drive. Boy Scouts, school children, young men from the colleges are helping Uncle Sam to raise a bumper crop this year, and put the kibosh on Kaiserism.

Fashions—Ribbons for Milady's Hat and Gown. Now that the Audubon Society have discouraged the use of bird's plumage, ribbon designers have jumped in the breach and in cooperation with the Museum of Natural History are producing wonderfully effective ribbons as substitutes.

Nature Study—Why Not Eat Fish? The cost of fish is one-third less than meat and is just as nourishing. A few of the varieties on exhibition at the New York Aquarium.

Physical Culture—High Class Vaudeville. World's greatest strong men. Attila Brothers give a marvelous exhibition of their skill in gymnastic stunts and statuary groups.

Industry—Marble Quarrying. Vermont, the granite state, is the center of the marble industry. Marble taken from quarries here for shipment to all parts of the country.

Art—Miracles in Mud, Produced by Willie Hopkins.

OFFICIAL CALL

Eighth Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and

Exposition of the Motion Picture Industry

Boston, Mass., July 13-20, 1918

To All State and Local Organizations of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America:

BECAUSE the motion picture industry has been singled out by the President of the United States and publicly commended for the service it has rendered in aid of the Government in carrying on the war, and because it has rendered the greatest service of any single industry in the country, it is of the utmost importance not only to the industry as a whole but to the country at large that the annual convention and exposition to be held this summer be the biggest and largest of any convention and exposition in the history of the business.

Shortly after the declaration of war the President called upon the motion picture industry for aid and the aid was promptly given. That aid has been great, but the opportunity exists to make it greater. At the last convention a split occurred in the ranks of the exhibitors which for a time looked as though it might have disastrous effects, but the convention held in Washington last winter partially healed that breach. The time has come when it should be entirely healed in order that the exhibitors of the United States may give the greatest possible measure of service to the Government.

Because of the vastly important work that is ahead of the exhibitors of the United States during the coming year, and because of the great importance of this convention, I call upon all state and local organizations to pay their per capita tax in order that they may be able to elect a full quota of delegates and alternates to this convention.

The exposition this year will be held jointly by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the National Association of the Motion Picture industry. During the week of the exposition I earnestly invite all organizations connected with and affiliated with the motion picture industry to hold their annual meetings and conventions. The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers have already scheduled their conventions for this time.

Because of the facts outlined above, I, Lee A. Ochs, by virtue of the power invested in me, as president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, do hereby call the annual convention of said Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to be held at the Mechanics' Building in the city of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, from July 13-20, inclusive, and do hereby designate the Copley Plaza Hotel as the official convention headquarters.

Issued this 2d day of May, 1918.

LEE A. OCHS, President,
Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Simplex

The Noted Cinema Master's latest and greatest Production

reflects his continued conviction that the

is essential to success

"The Birth of a Nation" proved Simplex superiority; "Intolerance" confirmed it; and the scores of Simplexes Mr. Griffith uses in his Road Shows have justified his faith in the Projector with Permanently Perfect Projection —does your business fall off in hot weather?

IT won't if the "Typhoon Twins" cool your theatre.

Their fresh-as-sea-air breezes will make your entire house delightfully cool and restful during the hot, sultry Summer months.

Folks will come to your show, just "to cool-off." They will be glad they came—and anxious to come again.

Their extra nickels and dimes will easily pay for your "Typhoon Twins" long before the Summer is over.

"Typhoon Twins" are low in cost.
Easily installed.

"We've just got to win this war—you and I—"

War on Kaiserism WILL be won—but this rallying call to patriots—to you—must be heeded NOW if we are to extend the utmost help to our soldiers—in France. The Boys' Club Federation (non-sectarian) wants you as a partner in its work of developing the underprivileged, imperiled BOYS who are to back up the U. S. Government with the help it sorely needs. Already 121 clubs are at work in 86 cities—but we need more—and more. What will you do? Will you contribute to our work?

Commended by Government Officials

Boy delinquency has increased from 35% to 65% in Europe. The Boys' Club Federation operates to forestall this appalling condition in America. It gets at the root by specializing exclusively on the underprivileged boy of all ages and cooperates with the Government by recommending all boys over 16 to enroll in the U. S. Boys' Working Reserve, Department of Labor, Washington, D. C.

"To make the boys of the Nation physically and morally fit is to fill the ranks of the producers for the present and future, and is specially deserving of the highest commendation. I extend my best wishes to the Boys' Club Federation in its patriotic efforts."
—HERBERT HOOVER,
U. S. Food Commissioner.

"This is truly Boy conservation and the Federation will indeed help the Nation in this present crisis."
WILLIAM B. WILSON,
U. S. Secretary of Labor.

Will YOU—NOW—send $1—or $5—or $25—or more, so that the work of organizing and developing of Clubs can go on? Address

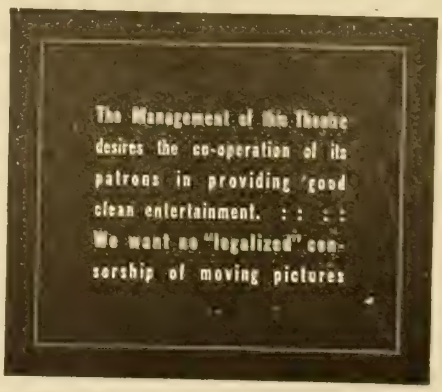
Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.



The Management of this Theatre
desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing 'good clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now!
Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00

A BIG STEP FORWARD

Take the Big Step In the Right Direction By Using

WHITE A. C. SPECIAL MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

The progressive exhibitors and operators using alternating current who are striving for better pictures—clearer pictures and brighter pictures—should take this step and substitute the White A. C. Specials for the old A. C. carbons.

The Result Is Beyond Comparison

The White A. C. Special carbons have been used in all parts of the country by critical operators and have met the requirements so exactly that they are now considered standard. These carbons give a pure white light of high intensity and an absolutely quiet arc.

To get perfect pictures on alternating current requires no change of equipment. Simply take out the old carbons and insert the White A. C. Specials.

FOR DIRECT CURRENT PROJECTION USE THE

NATIONAL SILVERTIP COMBINATION

The combination that is standard the country over. Silvertips combine satisfactorily the features of steady arc and maximum brilliancy.

Write to-day for our folders.

For God—or Kaiser?

MEN of the Moving Picture Industry! In the Liberty Loan just past, 20,000,000 true-as-steel Americans shot the Satrap of Hell his answer in a machine-gun torrent of silver bullets. And in the Loans to come, this great number will mount higher and higher until there is not in this whole land a man so poor, so base as not to have staked his life's treasure on Democracy, the United States and our Allies.

You, then, have your duty plainly marked out before you —for it lies with you, the Exhibitor great or small, so to speed-up—intensify this patriotism that the Beast of Berlin will be drowned all the sooner under its tidal wave.

On you—the transmitter of messages far more urgeful, far more heart-searching, infinitely more lasting than the printed word—the quick accomplishment of this bounden duty very clearly rests.

Go at it any way you will. Your Government furnishes you material—use it! The Producers offer patriotic plays and news reels—show them! Whether it be "THE KAISER, the Beast of Berlin"—or "My Four Years in Germany"—or a Universal News Reel of your patrons' boys in the battle line, you will show one, or the other, or all of them. Yes, you'll show them to the limit!

For this action will not alone serve to protect everything in life that you hold most dear, but it will also reap a financial reward for you in perfect proportion to its common-sense.

TRIANGLE

What is a Film Exchange?

A FILM Exchange is an establishment operated primarily for the benefit and convenience of Exhibitors. Without Exhibitors there would be no need for a Film Exchange.

This is the principle upon which TRIANGLE Exchanges are conducted. Each and every individual in a TRIANGLE Exchange is made to understand that his future with TRIANGLE is entirely dependent upon the careful consideration that he gives to each exhibitor.

It is the aim of each TRIANGLE Exchange to give an exhibitor more attention, better service—in fact more for his money than he can obtain elsewhere. The class of service given an exhibitor is entirely independent of whether he pays $7.50 or $75.00 for a picture.

It is never too much trouble to carefully and courteously serve an exhibitor in a TRIANGLE Exchange. Any reasonable request or demand of an exhibitor will be given immediate and painstaking attention whether in the regular course of business or in a particularly urgent emergency.

Any misunderstandings or difficulties that arise must be settled at once and to the entire satisfaction of the exhibitor. Disgruntled or dissatisfied customers are not tolerated by TRIANGLE.

The development of efficient service is of as much importance to an exhibitor as to TRIANGLE. A closer co-operation between exhibitors and TRIANGLE Exchanges means a big saving in time, labor and money to every TRIANGLE exhibitor. Criticisms or suggestions from exhibitors toward better service in TRIANGLE Exchanges are always welcomed.

Remember the co-operative service for which TRIANGLE stands, whether you are a TRIANGLE exhibitor or whether, like so many other exhibitors, you have about decided to run TRIANGLE.

THE SEAL OF APPROVAL

"Joan of Plattsburg" by Porter Emerson Browne—and starring Mabel Normand—is a motion picture production that will stir my loyal millions to their very depths. A picture of wonderful patriotism; a story of the human heart. A theme that answers the question on the lips of every American: "What can I do to help my country?"

Uncle Sam

Every Exhibitor Helps Our National Government When He Plays

Goldwyn's inspiring contribution towards the winning of the war: A Picture of Home; of Love, of Faith, a Picture for the Brain and the Heart, starring beautiful

MABEL NORMAND in Joan of Plattsburg

by Porter Emerson Browne

The famous author of this story—watching his screen production—says: "I feel like the hen that laid an egg and saw it hatch out a Bird of Paradise."

And Lesley Mason, writing in the Exhibitors' Trade Review, replies: "No, it has not hatched out a bird of Paradise"—

"It Has Hatched Out an American Eagle."

An exhibitor must use his imagination and enthusiasm in presenting this production. He should rally around him every patriotic agency in his town.

"A Particularly Valuable Picture Right Now—"

SO writes Helen Pollock, daughter of the brilliant dramatist-critic, of Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg," voicing the opinion of the New York Telegraph. And she adds: "It is not only the best Goldwyn picture, but one of the greatest productions ever made for the screen."

"'Joan of Plattsburg' contains a quantity of combined pathos and fantasy that makes it tremendously different from the general run of war pictures," says Peter Milne in The Motion Picture News. "This production contains a 'touch' that makes it intensely interesting."

"'Joan of Plattsburg' is meant to typify the American woman's desire to do her share in the great war . . . . . It will win an immediate and hearty response from patriotic picture patrons all over the country." This is the verdict of Edward Weitzel, the keen and cautious critic of The Moving Picture World.

"How even the humblest may do something for this country in the world crisis is the theme of 'Joan of Plattsburg'" says Samuel M. Weller, editor of The New York Review. "It is a stirring comedy-drama with a fine patriotic background . . . . . Exceptionally fine . . . . . Intensely human . . . . . A complete triumph for Mabel Normand . . . . . The patriotic value of this picture is unusually high."

"As 'Joan of Plattsburg' Mabel Normand has the biggest role of her screen career," says The New York Dramatic Mirror. "The very name of this production should prove an inspiration to exhibitors throughout the world."

"A fine thought is behind 'Joan of Plattsdurg'" says Jolo in Variety. "It will thrill picture patrons everywhere . . . . . A pretentious production."

George T. Pardy, expressing the verdict of The Exhibitor's Trade Review, says: "This picture abounds in spectacular scenes and thrills calculated to arouse patriotic enthusiasm . . . . . It gives every indication of being a valuable box-office attraction."

J. A. QUINCEY, of the Elite Theatre, Greenleaf, Kan., is talking about the business Madge Kennedy draws into his house . . . . . "I double my prices for this star and play to capacity," he says.

"The star who is achieving national popularity faster than any other screen personality," says J. A. Quinn, of Los Angeles, the little wizard of Pacific Coast exhibitors.

The heroine of ten thousand small towns —the new favorite of the nation's youth —beloved of all who approve of refinement and good fun—the first girl star of the screen who ever became a matinee idol.

Made famous and popular in "Baby Mine," "Nearly Married," "Our Little Wife," "The Danger Game" and now coming in another melodramatic farce of new delights—in a story of the second greatest American game—BLUFF. Use your mailing lists at once to summon into your theatre her throngs of admirers.

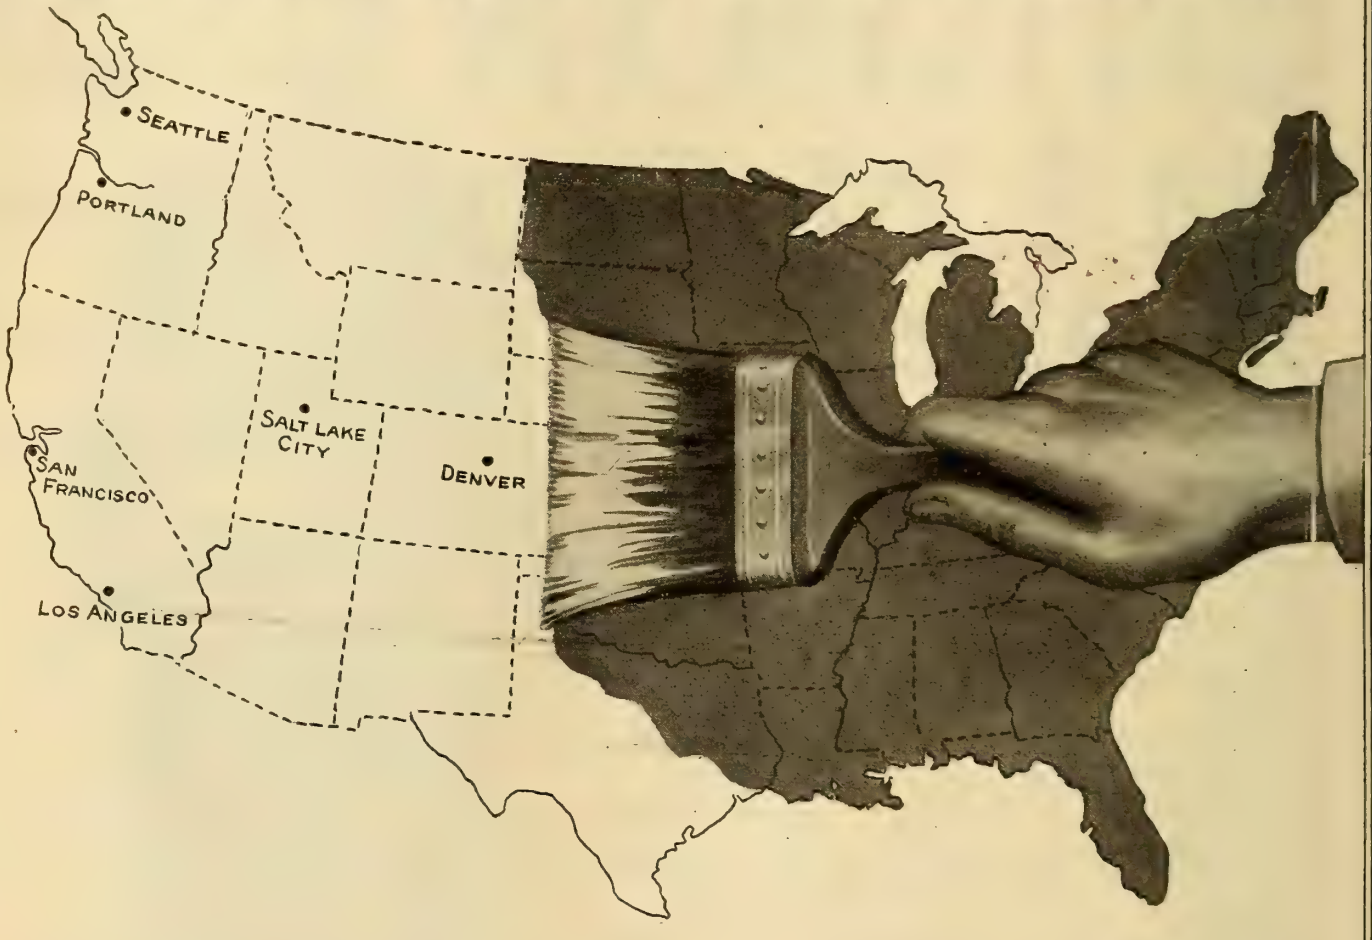
DEVOTION TO AN IDEAL



THE HODKINSON CO-PARTNERSHIP PLAN NOW EMBRACES HALF OF THE UNITED STATES

Any success, to be permanent, must put the method of its progress, ahead of its speed.

The expression, "Rome was not built in a day" has more significance in business, then its common usage indicates.

The survival of the fittest is not the survival of the fastest. It is the test of the sturdiest—the most inherently strong.

Ideals are greater than ideas. They persist. It took generations to complete the pyramids—an ideal product of its kind which has withstood the tests of centuries.

The Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan has not been conceived for a day.

Striving for permanency we prefer the steady, healthy growth that overcomes all difficulties and transforms obstacles into successes.

We are devoted to a practical ideal, and the proof of this devotion is found in the map above, which shows that already half of the United States has been embraced by the Hodkinson plan—and the area is extending daily.

As the ancient said, "Things that are difficult to create are equally difficult to destroy." Permanency, progress and equity summarize the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan.

THE men and women of our profession have been entrusted with a great responsibility in the American Red Cross War Fund Drive, which opens on May 20th and continues until midnight, May 27th.

Recognizing that our profession is the most potent agency to reach the hearts of the people and stir them to deeds of patriotism and generosity, the managers of this great drive have assigned to us the work of gathering millions from the masses during that week.

We accept the responsibility and hail it as a great opportunity for patriotic service.

Let every man and woman of our profession, every artist and every manager, join hands to send a horde of dollars to supply loving care for our fighting men and to heal the wounded of "No Man's Land."

Let us give generously our own money and our time and labors to collect the money of the millions with whom we come in daily contact.

If we are to measure up to the traditions of our profession and fulfill the trust which President Woodrow Wilson and his fellow officers of the American Red Cross have placed upon us, we must have the united, one hundred percent cooperation of every man and woman of the stage and pictureland.

The Red Cross managers in giving us this opportunity and this responsibility recognized that the greatest efficiency and the greatest sums of money to be collected would result from our unified efforts.

Therefore, the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team was created, and to that team, exclusively, was entrusted the work of raising money from the members of our profession, its allied industries, and the million or more people whom we daily entertain in the theatres of this city.

The Red Cross managers have placed this responsibility upon us and have asked that the men and women of our profession stand unitedly behind our own team.

It has been agreed that the best interests of the great cause for which we are all working will be served if all benefits and all efforts to raise funds through the aid of our profession are handled exclusively by the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team.

We ask all members of our profession, in the interest of efficient work, to adhere strictly to the terms of this agreement. We ask you to give every hour of your time, every ounce of your effort from now until the end of the Drive, so that we may send a message to the President of the United States, and to the hundred million people of this nation, that we are the most powerful agency of the land in carrying on patriotic work, and that we are "One hundred percent essential" in the hour of our country's need.

THE EVENING TELEGRAM—NEW YORK, SUNDAY, MAY 5

"SPIES"

Do you know that down on the shores of Staten Island, overlooking the Lower Bay in New York Harbor, in a deserted hut, desperate and designing men labored secretly night and day manufacturing a torpedo which they proposed to discharge at one of our biggest battle ships as she steamed out of the harbor on the way to Europe in the great war for Humanity and Civilization?

Do you know that not many weeks after the United States entered the war, more than eight hundred naval officers of our beloved country, who had assembled at a Broadway hotel, in New York city, for a banquet, celebrated the occasion by dining directly over a room which had been filled with enough dynamite to blow the entire hotel to smithereens?

Do you know that these and other outrages planned by the unspeakable Boche spies were foiled and circumvented by the United States Secret Service officers who are forever tracking and following the dastardly enemies of our country, who are so thick among us that one

EPISODE III—THE PLOT AGAINST THE ATLANTIC FLEET

MR. GRIFFITH'S managers publicly admit that the facts pictured in "The Eagle's Eye" have a tremendous appeal.

In advertising his latest production, based on the war, they draw upon the facts pictured in the second and third episodes of "The Eagle's Eye," and set forth, as a most timely and interesting part of his picture, its story of spy activities.

Therein is a difference.

"The Eagle's Eye" is the only motion picture revelation of the facts of the Imperial German Government's spy war IN AMERICA.

It does not show the horrors of war. It does not go to Europe for spy material. It is confined strictly to what the Kaiser's agents did, and tried to do, to American property, to American lives.

It is intimate and personal in its appeal to theatre patrons in every state in the union.

Mr. Griffith's managers, in their advertising, show their conviction that the facts revealed by Chief Flynn in "The Eagle's Eye" are among the most important public documents of the year.

Their judgment is correct.

Facts and Comments

DATES have been set and plans are being perfected for a big convention of the motion picture industry at Boston. To give the event an international flavor it is proposed that representatives of the picture business in other countries be invited to attend, and committees to accomplish this end have been appointed. This is a matter of considerable importance and should have been started earlier, but there ought still to be time to get the thing going so that, if it cannot be finished at the coming convention, the initiative will be sufficiently informative to warrant a full development of the plan. It is none too early to prepare for the events that will come at the conclusion of the World War. Men who have been abroad and have studied commercial conditions warn us that the Central Powers are already working on plans to regain the trade that has been lost by the war and that a form of competition will spring up that will be difficult to combat once peace is declared.

Preparedness to meet the inevitable trade battle should be complete, but it cannot be made so without the fullest co-operation between the manufacturers and distributors of the allied and neutral countries. An international conference at this time would serve to develop the attitude of the trade and to bring together the men whose interests are at stake and upon whom the burden of the fight will fall. Indications now are that the principal struggle will be for the South American market, although neutral European countries and Russia offer great opportunities. German picture interests are now intrenching themselves in such of these neutral countries as they have access to, buying chains of theaters and securing such concessions as can be obtained with a view to establishing a virtual monopoly of the business.

Much can be accomplished at a conference of film men engaged in international trade to meet this menace. That German picture men should destroy the advantage already gained is not to be thought of, but the position Americans have established cannot be held without a fight. So let's have the international conference at Boston.

WILLIAM FOX, by his energy and devotion to civic duty, has become recognized as the greatest single force in Greater New York when a time comes to enthuse the citizenry on the subject of charity or great patriotic purposes. He has been foremost in two great "drives"—one for the Jewish Charities and the other in aid of funds for the Knights of Columbus. Now he further emphasizes his religious neutrality in accepting command of the forces that will, beyond question, roll up a mighty total to represent the theatrical and motion picture industry in the forthcoming Red Cross "drive."

Jew and Gentile, the godly and the unclaimed, do honor to themselves in paying tribute to William Fox for his devotion to a public duty that can add less to his commercial gain than it will to his personal satisfaction. At the Astor lunch, initiating the general movement, Mr. Fox spoke with patriotic fervor and sincerity that left no room for skeptical deductions. He eagerly acknowledged the gratitude he felt toward this country of his adoption that had given him his opportunity for happiness, advancement and wealth.

He convincingly declared his purpose in taking up a third campaign in aid of an international charity; he disclaimed any desire for personal aggrandizement; he submitted as his incentive a combination of gratitude to the business that had brought him wealth and love of the country that had given him opportunity. He entered the Red Cross drive to convince the Government at Washington that theatricals and moving pictures were "essentials" under war classification; to aid in rolling up such a sum in Greater New York that the President would be brought to a realization that theatrical interests represented a tremendous share in public life.

This "drive" will be a theatrical movement centering only here in Greater New York. The Red Cross officials made no attempt nationally to organize the industries; the local movement now under way would never have been initiated but for Mr. Fox. And with all this Mr. Fox refuses to allow any special praise to be individually his; he seeks only co-ordination and co-operation from the allied industries, root and branch. When the story is told in the total of dollars it is easily believable that May 20 to 27 will not only be a triumph for the Red Cross "drive" but "red letter days" in the commercial well-being of the theatrical and moving picture industries in particular.

Our Weakest Spot

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

WHILE we are all intent on constant improvement there is no need of weeping over sins we have not committed, and reference to our failings should be backed up by more than mere individual opinion, particularly that kind which reasons in vivid and striking terms on premises utterly false. Many a man of vision, who can look out upon the future of moving pictures as upon the stars at night, not accurately measuring the wide field of view, but appreciating its magnitude, has listened with small patience to disparagement of the entire art of production because of certain inferior examples which have appeared on the screen.

Depreciation of that kind sounds like envy.

It may be that the popularity and prosperity of moving pictures have caused discontent and some degree of enmity among those whose mental power is released through other arts of expression, but it is hardly to be expected that the novelist, or the dramatist, can sincerely worship at any other shrine than that he has learned to revere, and it is not impossible that he may come to believe all other arts revolve around his own. He may have a heart alive to the beauties of nature in motion, from the white spray of mountain stream to the ocean's lashing surf, yet he will sneer at their most exquisite portrayal on the screen.

He is bucking against common sense.

It is the truth in such representation, and the beauty behind it, which have made moving pictures so dear to common people. Language is not capable of expressing what the eye can take in at a glance on the screen, and it never will be. This does not mean that literature and the drama, each in the hands of an artist, will not continue to be so many elements of thought and passion, stirring new moods and fresh ideas, quickening the imagination, adding to our instruction and happiness. From those elder sister arts moving pictures have drawn some of the finest material for public edification and entertainment. It means that there is little consideration given the fact that we have not yet come into our own. The art is not to blame for mistakes committed in its name.

It looks as though we lack sense of proportion.

While persistent efforts have been made to create the impression that there is no money in production under war conditions, and it is pointed out that many well organized concerns have passed their dividends, some going out of making pictures entirely, it is hardly too much to say that they might have continued profitably in business had they not indulged in heavy outlay wholly apart from that required by the most costly product. The crucial question of adjusting one part to another has not been given due thought in many cases. In many others this neglect might be readily excused, because expenditure allotment is no easy matter.

But excuses are not reasons.

The popularity of moving pictures is assured, and prosperity can keep pace through vigorous response to a progressive demand for the superior kind. That kind cannot be made by extravagant expenditure in one department of production and parsimony in another, nor by making a grand display of office furniture. Not only by elaboration of the business end, salaries out of accord with service contributed and that terrible handicap, overhead charges, is production overweighed, but it is asked to feed itself where there is little nourishment to be found.

Why not apply ordinary business principles?

In almost any manufacturing industry it is possible to put out substitutions and adulterations for a while and get away with it, but that is a get-rich-quick policy which is bound to react in the end. No dependable brand and lasting success, no matter how cleverly handled at the outset, was ever built up in that way. Honest steel is just as necessary as honest workmanship in shaping the metal. Photoplays that pretend much and promise more at the beginning, only to peter out in nothingness at the end, are not made of honest material. They bring a profit today, with an overbalancing loss tomorrow. That shortsighted policy is not the fault of moving pictures, but of the eager, hurried, wasteful and extravagant concerns making them.

Our weakest spot—is it not lack of vision?

Show Business and the Screen

By Edward Weitzel.

Getting a Line on the Public.

THE best romantic actor in the United States has been traveling about the country for the last two years with the worst play he has ever used—and is making the most money of his career. When first produced in New York the piece was unanimously and deservedly damned by the critics and failed to score a financial success. Although written by a celebrated novelist, it is full of artistic blowholes and rhetorical bunkum, but in the language of the curb, audiences from Maine to California have been eating it up. Plays of exceptional merit produced by the same star have not been received with one-half the amount of public favor.

This is not an unusual phase of the show business.

Among the experienced theatrical men who saw the play during its New York run it is doubtful if one of the number had the slightest suspicion that this stupid looking grub would turn into a golden butterfly on the road. The show business of the screen is quite as difficult to forecast. The local manager may have a safe financial estimate on the sort of pictures that appeal to his patrons. The man who can gauge the taste of the moving picture map of the United States is still unborn.

If he ever occupies an office in Times Square, he will be worth a million dollars a month to the screen business.

Educate the Public.

There is a growing tendency among certain persons connected with the moving picture to limit the range of the screen. They have a decided objection to holding the mirror up to nature except in a very restricted sense, and regard it as good business policy to keep repeating the same class of themes over and over again. Serious subjects are especially objectionable.

Many exhibitors hold this opinion.

Provided the theme be a truthful criticism of life and void of improper material, it is generally the part of wisdom to run it.

The opinion expressed by a spectator is not always a safe guide. It does not always reveal his true feeling in the matter. Some persons are ashamed to admit that they have been deeply impressed by seeing mental anguish depicted on the screen. They may even voice their dislike for all such subjects—and be drawn irresistibly to the theater at the presentation of the next serious drama. Neither is the laughter of the man who is apparently getting more than his money's worth of fun out of a comedy a sure indication of his state of mind. He frequently undergoes a revulsion of feeling, once he has stopped laughing; or is ashamed at being so easily amused and tries to square matters with himself by remarking "I didn't think that picture was very funny."

A more important view of the necessity of educating the public lies in the danger of repeating the same classes of subjects until familiarity breeds the kind of contempt that expresses itself by keeping away from the box office. The stage has experienced this more times than one during its long career, and the screen is bound to go through the same unpleasant awakening. The task of varying a theater's programs is second to none of the duties that fall on the exhibitor. This is doubly true of the theater that changes its program every day.

At the rate maintained by the screen in utilizing plot material, not to extend its range in every possible direction is the part of folly. Just as the supply of gasoline determines the usefulness of the airships and motor trucks used in the present war, so does the stock of plot material limit the activities of the screen.

The whole world is being searched for new deposits of petroleum. The hunt for moving picture themes should cover the whole field of man's material and spiritual life.

Cheer Up, Dr. Crane!

By Robert C. McElravy.

WE are grievously disappointed in Dr. Frank Crane. We had come to look upon him as a writer to whom one might repair in moments of dejection, well assured that he would pass out a fresh supply of spiritual and moral oxygen. His philosophy of life has always seemed impregnable to the ordinary vicissitudes of this mundane sphere.

But Dr. Crane has failed us miserably, and all because he saw a moving picture he didn't like. Listen to what he says:

> I went to a movie last night. I am mad yet. I was insulted. How did any movie man ever have the audacity to present such a picture? Oh, the photography was all right, the pictures were good. Everything about the affair was excellently gotten up—except the story—and that was cheap, poor, and wholly impossible.

More of this and he then asks, "Why pay Mary Pickford a billion dollars a year, and then get a teamster or plasterer to write the story for fifty cents? For the average movie plot is simply punk. What grudge have movie men against regular authors?"

Why is the average of anything pretty punk, Dr. Crane? Why is the average novel and the average play and the average short story something to cry over?

Why do you expect all moving pictures to be excellent, when you don't expect the same ratio of excellence in anything else?

If we remember rightly, you went to see a play called "Pollyanna" once, and then you came away and wrote many words of praise about it. Pollyanna was the Glad Girl and everybody should go to see her, because she knew how to bear up under inflictions.

How do you suppose Pollyanna would act if she happened to sit through a poor moving picture, Dr. Crane? Would she fly into a passion about it and begin writing unpleasant things for the papers? No, we may be quite sure she would not. This is what Pollyanna would say:

"I'm so glad to have seen this poor little picture. I have heard that some moving pictures were uninteresting, and I am glad I have finally found one of that kind. I am glad the villain is so ugly because that makes the heroine look just that much prettier; I am glad there isn't any idea in the story because now I can listen to the music; I am glad the plot is punk because it makes the scenery so much more attractive!"

That is what your heroine would have said, Dr. Crane, and will you not concede that her attitude is correct?

As for movie men having a grudge against regular authors, tut, tut! What are regular authors, any way? Pictures are being made freely from every available source, they are drawing upon the old masters, like Shakespeare, Dickens, Victor Hugo and others; they are using the modern writing of Maurice Maeterlinck, Rex Beach, Ellis Parker Butler, Gelett Burgess, George Ade, Anna Katherine Green, Harold MacGrath, Irvin S. Cobb, Frances Hodgson Burnett, Harry Leon Wilson and literally scores of others. This isn't holding out on anybody, is it?

Surely, Dr. Crane, it cannot be that you have a rejected scenario concealed about your person. If so, you may take comfort in the thought that there are many of us in the same fix. But we must not permit these little disappointments to warp our higher critical faculties. Besides, as you once pointed out, anger and irritation over things engenders food-poisoning and all manner of evils.

Keep a-trying, Dr. Crane; you may land your scenario yet. As for teamsters and plasterers, they at least have driving power and stick-to-it-iveness, which are good qualifications. And barbers, also, we believe you mentioned. Well, who is better equipped for devising hair-raising situations than the barber?

A Sense of Values

By Epes W. Sargent.

EXHIBITORS who assert that their business is going to the demnition bow-wows might, perhaps, grow more optimistic did they cultivate a sense of values. Day after day exhibitors send in programs showing films of varying values. One feature may represent a ten-dollar rental for a cheap reissue and be offered at 10 cents. Another may represent a rental of a hundred dollars, and yet the only thing to distinguish this film from the other is the fact that a fifteen-cent admission is asked. Through this fact alone the public is supposed to be influenced.

So long as this condition prevails it is not possible to realize upon the investment in film rentals. The exhibitor must educate himself to a sense of values and then educate his public. He must make them understand that the more costly film represents something more than a five-cent increase in the admission price. He must make them understand that it is a better story, given a better production. He must so strongly appeal to their imaginations that he can gain more than the increased rental cost. He cannot expect to give a ten-dollar film and a hundred-dollar film the same display and expect the more costly offering to do ten times as well. He must "holler a hundred" for the latter offering or he will lose upon the investment.

The attitude of the public toward a story is largely a reflection of the attitude of the exhibitor. What he praises they accept as good. If he makes the same advertising display for the two subjects the public is apt to appraise them at the same values and stay away on the fifteen-cent days instead of attending in increased numbers. If an exhibitor cannot make more than a ten-dollar noise he should stick to ten-dollar films, but the public demand at present is for something better than the cheap subject, and the exhibitor who would remain in the business must learn to handle the more costly subjects in a manner that will permit him to make a profit.

A film cannot make good for itself, particularly on a one-day showing. The best film is no better than the poorest until its virtues are so extolled that the patrons arrive at a true appreciation of its values. It is no longer possible for pictures, merely as such, to make their own patronage. Audiences must be educated, largely through advertising to a sense of values.

The Requisite of a "Long Run"

CONSIDERABLE hue and cry has been raised recently in behalf of longer runs for pictures. Somebody started it and all the rest of the press agents took it up and now almost every producer is on record as favoring the big idea. Several years ago W. W. Hodkinson first sounded the tocsin for longer runs as against the "daily change" of program. At that time he was running a picture show at Ogden, Utah, and was busy educating his audiences in that town to less frequent changes and making money by the operation. Later he went to the coast as exchange manager for the General Film Company, where he continued his crusade with success. In those days objection was made by the manufacturer who, selling his pictures by the foot, was unable to make as much money from long runs as he did from the daily change because not so many feet were required. Today the same objections do not pertain because film is not sold by the foot and the only requisite to a long run is the quality of the picture.

Good pictures will have long runs, and any manufacturer who finds difficulty in getting long runs for his pictures will have to find some one beside the exhibitor to blame for his failure along those lines. Producers may clamor for longer runs until the cows come home if they do not make pictures good enough to stand a run. The exhibitor knows by experience that few pictures have sufficient box office value to hold on for more than a day and he is wary of taking a chance on a longer booking for any picture, but when pictures with pulling power become the rule the exhibitor will get on the job.

Get quality in your picture; snap, action, pep, call it anything you please, so long as it is the sort of stuff that makes one talk about the picture or desire to see it again. These are the requisites of longer runs.

Daniel Cauffiel Pleads for Sunday Shows

Business Man Whom the Government Has Intrusted with Great Activities Sees Need of Wholesome Diversion for Crowds.

DANIEL CAUFFIEL, the man who brought the huge Government munitions plant to Nashville, is the latest advocate of Sunday moving pictures in Nashville. Mr. Cauffiel, who represents the Government as well as the Du Pont Powder Company, has come out with a statement to the people of Nashville and the city officials expressing his views as to why moving pictures should be permitted in Nashville seven days a week.

Tony Sudekum, president of the Crescent Amusement Company, and one of the leading business men of the city, recently requested that Mr. Cauffiel give an expression regarding the Sunday opening proposition. In reply the following letter was received:

"Replying to your inquiry for my views regarding Sunday entertainment for Nashville since the advent of the powder plant, I feel at ease in expressing them to you. Since one of the leading clergymen of the State has expressed his views on this subject, I do not feel amiss in telling you mine. However, I do not wish to be placed in the attitude of dictating to the city of Nashville what she should do.

"In my past experience in connection with the establishment of plants by the Du Pont Company it has always been a serious problem in caring for the welfare of the men. We have overcome this problem during the week, but on Sunday, away from the plant, the men look for some form of amusement and recreation, as it is the only day they have for pleasure.

"Unless steps are taken immediately to provide amusement for these people on Sunday, conditions are apt to arise here similar to those of other places when plants are first established.

"In my opinion, one of the best things that could be done would be to open the moving picture houses on Sunday, at such hours that would not interfere with church services. This would provide a clean form of amusement to the thousands of strangers already here and the thousands yet to come. It would also tend to keep these people from roaming the streets, which is harmful, both to themselves and the community, as idleness creates more temptations than anything else.

"The majority of these people will come from cities that allow Sunday amusement, and naturally they will expect the same here. It would surely do no harm to the moral welfare of Nashville, as I regard the operators of these houses as high-class gentlemen, who would only allow the most select pictures to be shown.

"Inasmuch as pictures are educative as well as estertaining, I believe that such entertainment would add to the moral effects of the city, much more than having these strangers roaming the streets seeking some place to spend their idle hours."

Sabbath Shows Killed in Birmingham

Small Majority of Votes Decides That Alabama Manufacturing Center Shall Not See Films on Sundays.

DEFEATED by the close vote of 3,098 to 2,807 the city election in Birmingham, on May 6, sounded the deathknell of Sunday moving pictures for the present at least. The election was the outcome of an extended agitation. The shows have been closed, but the moving picture men say not for all time, and that other measures will be taken in an effort to permit the shows to open, even if necessary to run them for charity. The vote was very light.

The uptown districts and the city proper were strongly in favor of Sunday opening, but in the suburban sections, where ministers and others had brought strong pressure to bear against Sunday operation, the vote was in the other direction. A large portion of those who voted in the election were opposed to any kind of theater entertainment. The greatest obstacle in the way of the picture show advocates was that all members of the city commission were opposed to Sunday opening. Politics played a large part in the defeat.

SELECT PROMOTES WOODY TO FIELD MANAGER.

J. S. Woody, who was until recently Pacific Northwest general manager for Select Pictures, with headquarters at Seattle, has just been promoted to field manager. Mr. Woody's promotion is an outcome of the showing he has made in the Seattle territory since the time, only a few months ago, when he took charge of Select's Seattle exchange.

Succeeding Mr. Woody will be H. B. Dobbs. Mr. Dobbs, who is a crack salesman himself, has been with Mr. Woody ever since the latter entered the services of Select.

Mr. Woody's first scene of activity as field manager is the Los Angeles territory, where he is spending ten days in cooperation with Bernard E. Loper, Select's Los Angeles branch manager. A vigorous campaign is now being pushed by Mr. Loper and Mr. Woody in Southern California and Arizona.

STRAND TOPS NEW YORK HOUSES ON LOAN.

According to the figures compiled by the officials of the New York Federal Reserve District, the Strand theater led all other motion picture houses in Greater New York in the amount of Liberty Loan bonds sold in the recent drive. This enviable record was made chiefly through the agency of "My Four Years in Germany," which was shown during the final week of the campaign, the entire gross income from the Gerard picture being converted into bonds.

Following the close of the double run of "My Four Years in Germany" at the Knickerbocker theater and the Strand, the production was shown during the week of May 5 simultaneously at the Crescent theater, Brooklyn, the Academy of Music and the Mount Morris to record crowds.

SELECTIVE DRAFT CALLS SELECT WORKERS.

Ed H. Good of the Pittsburgh branch of Select Pictures Corporation has been called to the colors and has gone to join the National Army at Fort Thomas, Kentucky.

From the home office in New York Austin Keough and Jerome Michael of the legal department have proceeded to Camp Upton within the last few days.

DIRECTORS SUBSCRIBE $322,500 TO LOAN.

The Third Liberty Loan drive among the directors of the Los Angeles Studio, Motion Picture Directors' Association, netted $159,700 from thirty-eight directors. Reports from all the 150 members have not yet been received, but from seventy-five already heard from $322,500 had been subscribed.

Red Cross ball, Hotel Astor, May 25. Auspices Motion Picture Allied Industry for Red Cross Drive.

Theatrical Folk Have Own Red Cross Team

William Fox Heads Vigorous Movement for Energetic Action by the Industry in a Great "Drive" May 20-27

DURING the Red Cross drive, May 20 to 27 inclusive, theatrical interests in general and the moving picture industry in particular will play the usual large part in fulfilling the patriotic purpose of this great charity organization. In Greater New York especially will the work be "boosted" systematically and with promise of unanimous concord to the end that the theatrical fraternity shall have credit in dollars for the efforts that will be untiringly put forth.

The movement was initiated Wednesday, May 8, when more than a score of Greater New York exhibitors assembled at the Astor, upon invitation of William Fox, to partake of a buffet lunch and listen to the general outlines of a plan that had been formulated by their host and a special committee of their fellow showmen. Mr. Fox was very particular at the outset of the earnest and enthusiastic remarks he made to make it unmistakably clear that neither the luncheon or the "drive" to be participated in by the allied theatrical and motion picture industries was "a Fox affair."

For more than an hour Mr. Fox was listened to with intense interest as he set forth in forceful review the things that had been accomplished in behalf of the "drive" up to the moment he was speaking. Punctuating his remarks with an appropriate story, dashing in a few splashes of genuine humor and speaking with a sincerity that carried unquestioning conviction, Mr. Fox held his audience intensely interested and swayed them by the will of his passing moods.

In effect he related how the preliminary details of the Red Cross "drive" had been initiated some three months ago. The responsible head of the Greater New York movement had called upon Mr. Fox to decide as between Jacob Schiff and Morgan J. O'Brien as to which of their teams he wished to serve upon. This was four days previous to the "get-together" luncheon, and Mr. Fox decided that he would prefer to serve upon a team that should represent the amusement interests of the greater city.

No such team had been organized or even suggested until Mr. Fox was called upon for his decision in the Schiff-O'Brien "contest," but forthwith the theatrical movement came into being. Preceding the Astor luncheon Mr. Fox canvassed Messrs. Shubert, Albee, Klaw & Erlanger and Marcus Loew, deciding for himself as to his own interests, and secured from them their hearty promise of co-operation. Then the sub-committee was called to lunch and the "drive" was formally under way.

The Greater New York drive will be conducted under a military system, with generals, colonels and captains responsible for results. Mr. Fox was unanimously selected as captain of the general team, of which the members are: Winthrop Ames, E. F. Albee, David Belasco, R. H. Burnside, William A. Brady, George M. Cohan, Pat Casey, Charles B. Dillingham, A. L. Erlanger, Morris Gest, Alf Hayman, Sam H. Harris, Marc Klaw, Marcus Loew, Lee Shubert, J. J. Shubert, Sam A. Scribner, Winfield R. Sheehan, A. H. Woods and Adolph Zukor.

In this drive W. C. Breed, chairman of the Central Red Cross Committee, has provided that all moneys received through the efforts of the stage, the motion picture theaters and allied industries shall be reported to the credit of the "Allies" team. This includes all benefit performances, subscriptions from individuals or corporations owning theaters; from their employees; all money collected in and about the theaters and from all lines of business directly allied with the theater.

Through this systematic organization only those connected with the Allied Theatrical Team will be permitted to solicit in the theaters and then only when authorized by the committee, and all the speakers will be assigned from this bureau.

The committee appointed controls nearly 1,250 theaters in Greater New York, and aside from the organization of these sub-committees are now being formulated to embrace the theatrical clubs, the costumers, the state organizations, the orchestras, the scenic artists, the property makers, the wig makers, the music publishers and theatrical agencies.

The motion picture section will have John Manheimer, leader of the Manhattan division; William Brandt, leader for Brooklyn, and John J. Wittman, leader for the Bronx. Mr. Fox in making these appointments explained that Queens and Richmond would be considered later, as local conditions made it difficult to decide upon just how the leadership there should be assigned.

It was announced that special cardboard insignia, of half-sheet size, would be supplied exhibitors for display in their lobbies, identifying their house with the "Allies" team. This would put an effectual stop to local demands for "benefits" in aid of any other team than the one showmen are concerned in. Four-Minute Men would be required to speak solely upon the Red Cross during the drive; all money collected in a theatrical building must be credited to the "Allies," and no other team will be allowed to use the theaters or their surroundings for the purpose of collecting funds.

The Van Buren-New York Billposting Company will post all billing matter without charge, and New York printers will furnish paper and printing gratis. Screen players, male or female, who earn more than $100 a week will be expected to make personal appearances at whatever theater shall be assigned them every evening during the drive. The producers will furnish these names to the generals, and these leaders will in turn "book" them on a scheduled plan. Players who decline to appear will be listed among the "missing," while those who give their time and energy to the work will be advertised in appropriate fashion.

On the evening of May 25 there will be given, at the Astor grand ballroom, a gala dance, with tickets at $25 a person. The prettiest girls in theatrical life will be sent into Wall street, and are expected to emerge from their contest with "tired business men" bearing $100,000 at the lowest estimate as the tribute to beauty and patriotic charity.

Governor Whitman will be asked to "lift the lid" on boxing for three nights, and in the hope that he will be so "blind" that he cannot see a series of athletic and glove contests. Madison Square Garden has been reserved in the expectation of cleaning up $75,000 or more in $5 ticket charges.

Saturday, May 18, as a grand opened to the "drive," there will be a parade up Fifth avenue, which is expected to surpass any pageant the famous street has ever carried in all its history of marching hosts. In this parade theatrical and motion picture interests will take an imposing part. To let the world know all that is going to happen in the "Allies" drive Mark Leuscher, general in charge; Harry Reichenbach, J. A. Gove, Willard Holcomb and every publicity man connected with a motion picture or theatrical firm will discharge their battery of mimeographs at the heads of New York daily newspapers.

Headquarters are established and activities are filling every hour of the day at the Subway Central Building, at the junction of Broadway, Seventh avenue and Forty-second street. The telephone number is Bryant 2600. Paste that in your hat! The owners of the Subway Central Building have given the use of the entire second and third floors, and the man who had the advertising privilege in the windows of the second floor has removed his signs and opened the display to the "Allies."

Samuel Goldfish registered the first actual subscription to the team's fund—$1,000. Mr. Goldfish spoke at the luncheon, saying that his business was calling him to California and he was leaving the subscription to represent his personal effort while he was "boosting" the game en route.

Friday noon there was a meeting of trade press representatives at the headquarters of the "Allies," when Mr. Fox delegated to the committee that was later organized, with Sydney Cohen as chairman, the work of mobilizing screen players for the work of making personal appearances at moving picture theaters. Dick Watts was designated as publicity representative of the trade paper committee, and to various papers was assigned the duty of interesting the players in certain specific studios in the patriotic work.

Provision was also made for the calling to the "colors" of all film players who are not specifically allied with any production company; the men and women who may be temporarily out of employment May 20 to 27 or are independently engaged at the time. Sidney Cohen will "route" the players for their "personal appearances," and every man and woman who will volunteer for work in this patriotic cause is urged to communicate forthwith with Mr. Cohen at the Subway Central Building. Routing begins Thursday, May 17. That means quick action.

Publicity of great value to the players will precede and follow their appearances at the various picture theaters. The daily press is in active co-operation with the "Allies," and the screen player who realizes the importance of publicity will have self-interest to spur him on to a patriotic duty eagerly performed.

There will be an "honor roll" containing the name of every player who appears in the interest of the allied theatrical and motion picture industry's team. By making these appearances players will be entirely free from obligation to tender their services to any other team in the Red Cross drive. They will thus be supporting their own profession in rolling up top-score in the final accounting for all "teams," but will have an "alibi" to free them from any outside demands for their services.

Every player who can be reached, by any means, within "striking distance" of Greater New York will be urged and is invited to accept the opportunity to "do his bit" for the Red Cross. It has been decided to publish a "casualty list" as well as an "honor roll" to also designate by name those players who are "found among the missing." Screen players have their own choice as to the roll upon which their name is to appear.

Change in Ownership of Paralta

DeWolf and Katz and Associates Purchase Interest of Anderson, Kane and Brown.

A DEAL which has been in progress for some time past was consummated on May 7 by John E. DeWolf, Herman Katz and their associates when they bought out the entire interests in Paralta Plays of Carl Anderson, Robert T. Kane and Nat I. Brown. The consummation of this agreement is the result of an amicable understanding between these men, who have been the potent factors in the forming of Paralta Plays and their subsidiary companies.

A complete reorganization has taken place, and the Paralta Pictures Corporation is now in the strong hands of well-known business men, who will continue the making of photoplay offerings of exceptional merit. Robert Brunton, who has been the chief executive at the coast studios, will remain in his capacity of manager of productions. He also will retain his entire staff of directors, whose work has lent much to the excellent quality which has marked all Paralta Plays up to the present time.

Paralta Plays, Inc., made its entrance into the industry during March of last year. At that time there was much speculation as to the quality of the productions of the new organization. A number of photodramas were produced before any were presented to the public. "A Man's Man," with J. Warren Kerrigan as the star, was the first Paralta Play to be released. That was the first of last January. The production was successful. "Madam Who," with Bessie Barriscale, was the second Paralta Play, and established this star in a vehicle far different from any in which she had appeared prior to that time.

About this time Henry B. Walthall was engaged as a star in Paralta Plays, and he made his debut in "His Robe of Honor." Miss Louise Glaum, who is the most recent addition to Paralta's list of stars, achieved a success in "An Alien Enemy," released April 1.

Eighteen productions thus far have been completed by the Paralta organization, and the studios will continue without let-up under the new executive direction. About nine weeks ago Henry B. Walthall was released from his contract to permit him to go with David W. Griffith.

Mr. DeWolf and his associates state, however, that it is their intention to produce in the future still larger, better and stronger plays than the organization has presented in the past. The large, new Paralta studios are now practically completed. In the future the Paralta policy will be to present only strong, human interest stories, enacted by stars directed by the foremost men in the industry.

A few weeks ago the rumor was circulated that Paralta would probably discontinue producing. This rumor is erroneous. Paralta will move steadily forward. Louise Glaum and J. Warren Kerrigan are now at work in the Paralta studios. Bessie Barriscale will return to the studios within ten days, and the executives of Paralta are negotiating at this time with other stars. The policy of the company will remain as before—each player will make eight productions a year, which will be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"Pershing's Crusaders" Screened in New York

Bureau of Public Information Releases Seven Reels, Showing Uncle Sam's Boys at Work and at Play.

THE first official war pictures of the American Expeditionary Army in France have just been shown to the trade press in New York. There are seven reels of them, and not an inch of it all but is full of the deepest interest to Americans. How the public will take these motion picture film has been demonstrated in Cincinnati, at the Grand theater, where crowds flocked afternoon and evening for two weeks till it seemed as though everybody in the city wanted to see the boys in camp in France, on the march and in the front trenches.

The first four or five reels deal with activities on this side of the ocean and show life in the cantonments, the Y. M. C. A. houses, Red Cross centers and what the Knights of Columbus and Masons are doing to help the cause. They show something of the size of the undertaking to provide the soldiers with bread and meat for three square meals a day, also how the immense cannon are made, aeroplane work, making of uniforms, training of the ambulance corps, not to forget the scenes on board ship with the Jackies—pictures often artistically photographed and of the most vivid interest to all.

But the last three reels show scenes taken in France, and they, too, are good, clear pictures. Some among audiences will recognize their friends and relatives who happen to be in front. The best scenes of all are the front trench pictures, and they let us see our soldiers actually firing at the Germans and under fire themselves. The first group of captives are shown close by so that we can take stock for ourselves.

The trenches are watery in places, and the dugouts, though necessary for safety, don't look inviting. When a gas shell comes the men have to put on masks, and when the attack has passed a squad goes along and sweeps out the poison fumes with something half-brush, half-shovel. How the soldiers' "slum" is prepared and brought in is shown, and we also get a good idea of some of the different kinds of camouflage.

To miss these pictures and others that are to follow is to miss something that is more valuable than many kinds of education. They are worth making a pilgrimage to see. Any community will be grateful to its exhibitor who gets these pictures for them. H. C. J.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of May 12 at New York's Principal Motion Picture Houses.

THE RIVOLI.—"Old Wives for New," from the David Graham Phillips' novel, was the picture feature at the Rivoli the week of May 12. Elliott Dexter, Theodore Roberts and Tully Marshall head the cast. Cecil De Mille was the director. A Mutt and Jeff cartoon, the Katzenjammer Kids, a scenic and the Animated Pictorial were also shown.

THE RIALTO.—Madame Petrova in "The Life Mask" was the leading attraction at the Rialto. "Fatty" Arbuckle in "Moonshine" was an added feature. The other screen numbers were a scenic and the Rialto Animated Magazine. Annie Rosner and Emmanuel List were the soloists.

THE STRAND.—Madame Nazimova in "Toys of Fate," a Metro production, was the chief attraction at the Strand. The third installment of the Outing-Chester pictures, James Montgomery Flagg's comedy "The Starter" and the Topical Review completed the picture portion of the program. Irene Audrey and Henry Miller were the soloists.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET THEATER.—"The Blue Bird" the entire week.

KNICKERBOCKER.—Ninth week of "My Four Years in Germany."

FORTY-FOURTH STREET.—Sixth week of "Hearts of the World."

BROADWAY.—Second week of "The Bride's Awakening."

SEYFFERTITZ TO REMAIN WITH FAMOUS PLAYERS.

Despite announcements to the contrary Gustav Seyffertitz, one of the most valued members of the Lasky Stock Company, will remain with the organization, appearing in Artcraft and Paramount pictures. One rumor was to the effect that Seyffertitz would become a director for David Belasco of stage productions, but while he is entirely capable of this, being an accomplished actor and director, he prefers to continue in the films under the present auspices.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Northwest Exhibitors Hold Convention

At Seventh Annual Session Picture Men Discuss Local Problems—William Deeth Elected President.

THE seventh annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest opened in Minneapolis Tuesday, May 7. After a short address of welcome by President James G. Gilosky, Governor Burniquist being unable to attend, the meeting got down to business.

In his opening speech President Gilosky flayed those who did much to injure the Northwest organization during the past year by continually criticising its officers without giving credit for the good things done. Mr. Gilosky recalled the work of the organization in fighting unjust legislation at the last session of the Minnesota Legislature and told how three bills that would have been injurious to the industry were shelved and one—the fire marshal's ordinance—which has proved a boon to the exhibitors, was passed.

Mr. Gilosky stated that when the question of withdrawing from the National League was brought before the Executive Committee it agreed to continue the Northwest body's affiliation with the national organization.

Following Mr. Gilosky's address Secretary P. H. Hitchcock proposed sending a telegram to President Wilson and pledging the loyal support of the Northwest body to the nation's executive. This was greeted with cheering, and a motion was carried unanimously.

National President Lee A. Ochs was called upon for a short address, and praised the loyalty of the Northwest exhibitors to the National League. He urged exhibitors to put all of their strength into the organization and pleaded for more unity.

Secretary Hitchcock read letters from several Congressmen and Senators pledging their support to the organization. President Gilosky appointed committees as follows:

Credentials—Dan W. Chamberlain, Mankato, chairman; Thomas Foster, Stanley, Wis.; Dan Eselin, Minneapolis; Archie Miller, Devil's Lake, N. D., and R. C. Gibbs, Huron, S. D.

Resolutions—Joseph Friedman, St. Paul, chairman; H. C. Zander, Rhinelander, Wis.; Dan Eselin, Minneapolis; Anton Gilles, Breckenridge, Minn.

Grievance—Billy B. Watson, Minneapolis, chairman; Fred Upham, Minneapolis; Ed Hinz, Minneapolis; Al Steffes, Minneapolis, and William Watson, Excelsior, Minn.

A motion was made and seconded that exchanges be requested to allow exhibitors 50 per cent. rebate on one-sheets, 5 cents rebate on photographs and slides returned to exchanges in good condition and promptly. The convention was informed that several exchanges had been interviewed about this matter and that a majority of them were willing to concede this point to exhibitors.

Following a recess of an hour for luncheon the resolutions committee reported receiving three resolutions, which were read and two of which were adopted.

The resolution originally drafted by a Los Angeles exhibitors' organization and requesting exchanges holding exhibitors' advance deposits to buy Liberty Bonds with all money in excess of $50 was put into the form of a motion by W. A. Steffes of Minneapolis and seconded by E. F. Hinz, Minneapolis.

S. G. Lebedoff, Liberty theater, Minneapolis, offered a resolution requesting home offices of local exchanges to give local managers more authority in the matter of accepting or rejecting contracts. This met with approval, and was quickly carried.

Mr. Hitchcock's resolution that exchanges be forced to keep moneys given in advance deposits by exhibitors in local banks was the source of considerable debate. On motion of Charles G. Gates, Aberdeen, S. D., which was seconded by Oliver Whaley, Bemidji, Minn., the matter was referred to the legislative committee, to bring the matter before the next session of the Minnesota Legislature should it see fit.

At the morning meeting Thomas Foster of Stanley, Wis., asked permission to have Corporal Arlington, of the Canadian Mounted Rifles, speak on "Germans and America's Battle Ahead." Corporal Arlington's patriotic talk was interrupted repeatedly by outbursts of applause.

Joseph Friedman, St. Paul, spoke on the need of unity within the organization, and asked exhibitors to discuss their troubles with the organization inside the meeting rooms and not in the columns of the trade press.

S. K. Leen, of the Rubey theater, Jamestown, N. D., told of the need of legislation governing advance deposits, C. O. D.'s and return express charges. These subjects were discussed at length, and President Gilosky finally appointed a committee to draw up resolutions on the subject and present same at the morning session, May 8. The committee was made up by Mr. Lee, Billy B. Watson, H. B. Smoots, D. G. Rodgers and Tom Foster.

Chairman Steffes, of the by-laws committee, reported that his committee would be unable to make any complete report until May 8.

In answer to the question brought before the meeting by William Smith of Menomonie, Wis., regarding return express charges, Secretary Hitchcock read from the minutes the action of the previous convention, which voted to have exhibitors take up the matter of return express charges with exchanges individually, as several exchange managers had stated that if return excess charging was eliminated film rental prices would be increased to cover this expense.

David G. Rodgers told exhibitors of various attempts to eliminate the war tax film exchange charge on reels. C. C. Pettijohn of Indianapolis was given opportunity to explain several war tax questions, and in a well-worded speech gave the exhibitors many facts regarding the fifteen cents a reel tax imposed by various exchanges. Mr. Pettijohn stated a committee of exhibitors had presented the matter to Mr. Roper of the Revenue Department at Washington, and was awaiting his decision. Mr. Pettijohn said he saw no reason why the exchanges should impose such a tax.

Mr. Brown of Riceville, Iowa, told the convention that he had never paid tax on films released prior to October 1, 1917, but that he had paid tax on reels released since that date. Mr. Brown stated that the exchanges never canceled any of his service due to his failure to pay war tax. J. E. Sherwood, president of the Wisconsin Exhibitors' League,

Yankee Exhibitors Discuss Convention

Boost Horstmann for National President, Plan International Conference and Appoint Committees.

PLANS for the National Motion Picture Exposition, to be held in Boston July 13-20 under the auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, are fast assuming definite shape. A meeting of 100 members of the Boosters Booming Boston, who are locally in charge of the exposition's plans, was held Tuesday night, May 7, at the Castle Square Hotel, Boston, and many details of the exposition were arranged.

A plan to make the exposition international in scope was approved, and arrangements were at once set on foot to get the leading representatives of the motion picture industry in England, France and Italy to attend an international conference of the industry during the exposition and allied conventions in Boston.

The Boosters launched a red-hot boom for National Treasurer Ernest H. Horstmann as national president. A number of speeches were made in booming Mr. Horstmann, and in his reply he stated that he would run as the candidate of the New England motion picture exhibitors' leagues.

National Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott made a strong plea for the amalgamation of all branches of the moving picture industry at the Boston convention. He deplored the plans of the American Exhibitors' Association to hold an independent exposition and convention in Chicago in June. He said that in war times the industry must present a united front to assure the support of the Government. He said that "for the duration of the war at least" the industry should forget its petty internal differences and present itself to President Wilson and the business interests of the United States with a united front. He said he felt sure that in such a case the Boston convention could be assured of the presence of President Woodrow Wilson to address the moving picture interests with a message that would be heard around the world. He said a movement was on foot to "bury the hatchet," and he hoped it would be a success.

The banquet was held at 7 o'clock in one of the large banquet rooms of the hotel. This house is in the heart of Filmland City in Boston. The exhibitors, exchangemen and representatives of the producers gathered shortly after 6 o'clock, and there was a pleasant hour of reunions and handshaking. The banquet opened with a toast to President Woodrow Wilson, "the greatest president of all times."

At the head table were President M. J. Lydon, of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Leagues; his brother, P. F. Lydon, chairman of the Boston Boosters, who acted as toastmaster; Ernest H. Horstmann, national treasurer; Frederick H. Elliott, New York manager of the exposition and executive secretary of the N. A. M. P. I., and Lesley Mason of New York.

A six-course dinner, which proved appetizing and satisfying, was served. The tables were prettily decorated, and after the dinner a flashlight picture was taken of the gathering.

Lourie Launches Horstmann Boom.

Jacob Lourie, manager of the Modern and Beacon theaters, launched the boom for Mr. Horstmann for president. He said that the Boston men went to the Chicago convention last year full of enthusiasm and conviction that Boston had a claim to the convention. He said they proved their claim and brought back the convention. He said he believed Boston and New England now had a just claim to the national presidency. He said that with the same system and organized work as brought the convention to Boston he felt sure Mr. Horstmann could be landed in the president's chair. Mr. Lourie's boost for Mr. Horstmann was received with loud applause.

President Lydon seconded the nomination of Mr. Horstmann as the Boosters' choice for national president. He said he knew of no man in New England or the country better qualified for this important position. "His election would carry a great honor to this section of the country," he declared. "No man in the industry would work any harder in the interests of the exhibitor. I have known Mr. Horstmann nine years, and I have watched his work in organizing the Massachusetts and Rhode Island exhibitors. He is a big man for a big job."

H. I. Wasserman, former secretary of the Massachusetts branch, called for three cheers for the "next president of the league." They were given with a will.

Calls for a speech brought Mr. Horstmann to his feet. He said he had been with the national league from its founding. National conventions up to the past two years, he said, consisted of a dozen self-appointed men from the different states getting together and doing what they thought for the best interests of the industry.

"The industry faces a crisis today," said the treasurer. "It is vitally important that we get together in the biggest way possible to meet this crisis."

Mr. Horstmann made a strong plea for greater organization work. He said it was a pity there were but 42 paid-up members in the Massachusetts and Rhode Island leagues out of 240 exhibitors in this territory. He said some states had done much better organization work and some not so good. He called attention to the fact that Judge John O'Donnell was nominated for the national presidency at a meeting of the Philadelphia exhibitors by a vote of 121 exhibitors out of a possible 156.

"I want the exhibitors to organize throughout New England," continued the speaker. "It matters little to me whether I am elected national president or not if I can accomplish greater organization among the exhibitors. I will work for a 75 per cent. organization among our New England exhibitors. If I can accomplish this I will have done a great good for the industry. By better organization we will earn the respect of the exchangemen and the producers."

The speaker said a few years ago the exhibitor asked why he should join the league as he "could return to his old occupation at any time." He was not dependent upon the show business. Now he says this condition has changed. The exhibitor has made the show business his business, and is devoting all his time and money to it. It is in his own interest to organize, Mr. Horstmann declared.

"I will stand for national president," said the treasurer. "If elected I will do my best for the league, working 368 days a year, as there is not time enough in the regular 365 to do the work that will have to be done. We know of our high standing with the Government as one of the greatest industries of the country. The President came to us before he went to the press to ask us to take measures toward winning the war. We want to measure up to the standard he has placed for us. We should bring the Massachusetts and Rhode Island membership up to at least 75 per cent. instead of the present 15 or 20 per cent."

Mason Urges International Conference.

Chairman Lydon called upon Ledley Mason of New York as a representative of the trade press. Mr. Mason said he had found Mr. Horstmann a hard worker in the interests of the national league and believed him a good candidate for president. He spoke of the needs of greater organization work.

Mr. Mason urged the necessity of making the most of the opportunity offered by the war to make the coming Boston gathering an international affair instead of only national. He asked the promoters of the exposition and the heads of the various organizations to extend invitations to representatives of the motion picture industry in England, France and Italy to attend an international conference in Boston as a feature of the gathering. He spoke of the importance of such a conference to the Government, and said it would assure the attendance of President Wilson.

Mr. Mason's plan was approved by a unanimous vote, and the following committee for an international conference was elected: Lesley Mason, Frederick W. Elliott, E. S. Black, of the National Board of Directors and president of the Maine league; Ernest H. Horstmann, President M. J. Lydon, Boston Motion Picture Censor John M. Casey and Joseph Di Pesa, press representative of the exposition.

National Executive Secretary Elliott gave hearty endorsement of the candidacy of Mr. Horstmann for national president. He spoke of Horstmann's hard and consistent work in the interests of the national organization. He said Mr. Horstmann would undoubtedly muster up to the standard of any man who could be secured for national head of the exhibitors' organization.

He told of the postponement, which was necessary, of the New York show, and said it would in no way conflict with the Boston exposition. He endorsed the movement to make the coming Boston gathering an international affair.

"I believe that Frank J. Marion, our commissioner to France and Italy," he said, "should be recalled at that time to tell us of the war conditions as they affect the motion picture industry. The message he would bring us would be a very important one. It would aid in getting President Wilson to the convention."

He spoke of the efforts which had been made to get the American Exhibitors' Association to give up their plan of a convention and exposition in Chicago in June.

"I believe this is no time for separate organizations and it is a time when the Government is demanding centralization and consolidation," said Mr. Elliott. "The President and the Government heads are opposed to wasted efforts, and it will be wasted effort for the film industry to attend a June convention in Chicago and then come to Boston for our national convention in July.

"If moving picture men have any fighting energy they had best use it in helping to win the war. Those of the outside world care nothing for our interior dissensions, and the petty jealousies we may have in our ranks can well wait until after the war.

"William A. Brady is working effectively in getting President Wilson to Boston in July. With complete harmony in our ranks and international representatives here there is little doubt, if conditions are not much more serious than at present, we can get President Wilson to deliver us an address that will ring round the world."

President Lydon took the chair and spoke in behalf of greater organization work in New England. At his request the chairmen of the various committees of the exposition were elected as follows:

Exchangemen, G. K. Robinson; Boston theaters, A. E. Somerby; executive committee, B. H. Cornell and E. R. Gregory; committee of arrangements, Harry Asher; musical program, F. J. Howard; publicity, J. A. Di Pesa; guests, Jacob Lourie; entertainment, Harry F. Campbell; state days, A. S. Black; finance, I. E. Jones; badge, Leon Dadmum; decorations, G. K. Robinson; National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, M. J. Lydon.

Charles S. Miller, of the Boston Post, and John H. Mahoney, representing the city of Boston, made brief speeches.

President Lydon appointed the following committee to work in connection with the Boosters in making the exposition a success: William A. Brady, Lee A. Ochs, A. S. Black, F. S. Elliott, the Moving Picture World and other trade papers.

St. John Exchange Managers Organize

H. H. McArthur, of Regal Film, Is Elected President—Movement Dominion-Wide.

A MEETING of the exchange managers of St. John, N. B., was held at Bond's restaurant on May 4. The object of the meeting was to form a branch of the Exchange Managers' Protective Association. This will be known as the Exchange Managers' Protective Association of the Maritime Provinces. The following officers were elected:

President, H. H. McArthur, of the Regal Film Company; vice-president, G. A. Margetts, Canadian Universal; secretary-treasurer, R. Romney, Vitagraph; legal adviser, T. P. Regan. The movement is Dominion-wide, and the association tends toward the protection not only of the exchange managers, but also of exhibitors.

The theaters are doing everything in their power to assist in all the government movements, such as the food conservation and production and the Soldiers of the Soil organizing. Slides are shown in nearly every motion picture theater and vaudeville house. Lately the five-minute speakers have been introduced who give these short talks upon war-time subjects. The managers have co-operated with the committee in charge of this in every possible way. It is always the theater managers who are consulted and called upon to give a hand in each new patriotic appeal and they are always most willing.

This last week the Imperial theater has been twice given up to the Y. M. C. A. appeal to raise $100,000 in New Brunswick. Sunday a mass meeting was addressed by the Rev. George Adam and Captain Dingle, who both told of personal experiences at the front.

FILM ORGANIZATION MEETING HELD.

A general meeting of members of the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California was held during the luncheon hour on May 1 at the Palace Hotel, San Francisco, and considerable business was transacted. Sam H. Levin, a prominent exhibitor, was chosen treasurer to succeed Morris L. Markowitz, and Louis R. Greenfield was added to the Board of Directors. The question of Sunday closing, which has come up in the community to the southward, and which promises to become a State issue when the Legislature meets again, was given considerable attention.

LEAGUE IN OREGON IS OUT OF DEBT.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon is now operating on a solid footing and is entirely out of debt. This result was obtained by a committee of prominent exhibitors who have been working for several months to liquidate all the obligations of the organization. A recent statement of the League's assets shows it to be the owner of a lot of beautiful furniture and a good-sized bank balance.

Malitz and Engler Sentenced to Prison

President of American Correspondence Film Gets $5,000 Fine and Two Years; Secretary a Year and a Half.

FELIX MALITZ and Gustave Engler, president and secretary respectively of the American Correspondence Film Company of 2 Rector street, New York, convicted Friday, May 3, in the Federal Court, Brooklyn, of smuggling rubber disguised as foodstuffs to Holland for use of the Germans, were sentenced May 5 by Judge Manton.

Malitz got the limit prison sentence under the law, two years, and in addition was fined $5,000, half of the maximum.

Engler was sentenced to a year and six months. The sentences will be served at the Federal Prison, Atlanta, Ga.

Judge Manton denounced the convicts, both of whom are Germans with first citizenship papers. He called them "counterfeit citizens," and said they had come here in the interest of Germany to disseminate propaganda favorable to that country.

WORLD PICTURE USED IN RECRUITING.

One of the recent World-Pictures, "The Cross Bearer," is being used with great success by the Naval Recruiting Bureau, which operates under the direction of the secretary of the navy in the enlistment of naval recruits. The picture is flashed on the screen and is then stopped at some scene showing the brutal treatment of the Belgians by the German invaders, and the speaker conducting the recruiting rally then asks the audience if they wish to have such scenes repeated in America. If they do not they are urged to enlist at once.

New Canadian Tax Causes Consternation

Exchangemen Declare Action of Government Is Worst Blow Ever Dealt to Industry—Contracts Will Be Canceled

THE worst blow ever dealt to the moving picture business in Canada was the action of the federal government, through A. K. McLean, acting minister of finance, in deciding to impose an additional duty of 3 cents a running foot on all moving picture films imported from the United States. The exchanges have been paying 2 cents a foot, or an assessment of 25 per cent., on an arbitrary valuation of $80 a reel of 1,000 feet. The exchanges, exhibitors and patrons have also been paying many other taxes, including a 7½ per cent. Canadian war tax, the American war tax, provincial war tax, heavy provincial license fees for theaters and exchanges and heavy municipal license fees for theater, censorship fees, poster censorship fees, real estate taxes, business taxes, income taxes, and heaven knows what more.

It has been figured that the various taxes and fees which have been paid on films represent a cost equal to the market value of the reels themselves. Now the Canadian Government proposes to add to this imposition by requiring the payment of a duty of 5 cents a foot on all imported "positives." The instant reply from the Canadian film men is that it cannot be done. It is also declared that the increased duty will mean less importation of films, particularly news weeklies and other releases whose working days are numbered. Exchange managers declare that it would not be profitable any longer to bring news reels into the country when such subjects are junked after ninety days at the outside.

Counting duty and war taxes only a Canadian exchange pays out no less than $58 on each reel of 1,000 feet, the government valuation of which is placed at $80. The exchange gets fifteen bookings on an average for each news reel. This means an average of $4 a reel a customer for duty and war taxes alone. How the exchange is going to make any profit on the reel is rather difficult to see.

One Canadian exchange executive has declared that the proposed increase in duty will mean an additional expense to his company of $750 a week, and that the increased revenue secured by the federal government from all exchanges in Canada will amount to $250,000 a year.

Immediately after the announcement at Ottawa by Mr. McLean the film men of Toronto, Montreal and other cities launched a vigorous protest. Lengthy telegrams, to the number of one thousand, were sent to every exhibitor and exchange manager in the country. These wires urged the recipients to wire a protest to their member of Parliament and to have all influential citizens of the locality do so also. These messages were sent out from Toronto, and the result was a flood of telegrams at Ottawa. The Toronto exchange managers retained H. M. Ludwig, a prominent local lawyer, to take up the legal aspects of the situation. The Toronto men have been keeping in close touch with film officials of Montreal in order to obtain co-ordination of effort. The local managers were prepared to send a strong delegation to Ottawa at a moment's notice if necessary.

"It is a terrible imposition," declared James Travis, secretary of the Toronto Exchange Managers' Association, who is also the local Mutual official. "We do not want to pass the additional duty along to the exhibitor as he already is shouldering a severe financial burden. The moving picture business should not be taxed any more than it has been. It has been taxed to the limit all along. The additional duty means that all exchanges may have to cut out a considerable quantity of pictures. We may be compelled to stop importing news weeklies."

Mr. Nathanson, of Regal Films, Limited, declared that film importations into Canada would have to be greatly reduced if the promised increase is made. There was nothing else that could be done. In the meantime he was prevailing upon every film man, exhibitors included, to fight for their rights.

The new duty will undoubtedly bring about the cancellation of all existing contracts for films by exhibitors, as new terms will be necessary. One suggestion was that exhibitors be charged at the rate of 50 cents extra for each booking.

It has also been generally predicted that the increased duty will lead to the abolishment of the 10-cent admission price at all theaters. There were also declarations that the reduction in importations would be so considerable that the expected increase in revenue to the government would not be apparent at all.

It is also pointed out that all Canadian exchanges and exhibitors have been liberal in donating their services and their theaters for the presentation of propaganda films of all kinds and in lending their facilities for war loan, recruiting and patriotic campaigns. Many managers have turned over portions of their receipts for Red Cross and other patriotic purposes.

It is also interesting to note that during the first week in May the Ontario Board of Censors condemned no less than forty different pictures, according to an official announcement. This wholesale banning of releases has also had a depressing effect on the Toronto film men.

Another recent misfortune sustained by a Canadian distributor—the Mutual Film Company of Canada—was the loss by fire of a large shipment of films from St. John, N. B., to Winnipeg, Manitoba. In this case films valued at $4,000 were destroyed in a wreck, and the total recompense secured from the express company under existing regulations amounted to only $50.

On top of the move by the Canadian Government to increase the duty on film imports from 2 cents to 5 cents a lineal foot, making the duty on a reel of 1,000 feet no less than $50, came the presentation of a resolution before the House of Commons at Ottawa, by A. K. McLean, acting minister of finance, requiring a special levy on each reel of film each day that it is used of 15 cents a day.

The exchange managers and others of Montreal, Toronto and other cities went to Ottawa on Wednesday, May 8, to protest against the new assessment as proposed. The film men say that they will stand for an increase of not more than 1 cent a foot in import duty on films and no more. The war excise tax is out of the question entirely.

Alberta Has New Ticket Tax

Exempts Less Than Ten-Cent Admissions and Imposes Heavy Penalty for Violations of Act.

THE deputy provincial secretary for Alberta, E. Trowbridge, has made official announcement regarding the new amusements tax act, which became effective throughout the province on May 1, 1918. The new regulation provides for the following schedule of taxation on admission tickets to theaters and all other places of amusement where a fee is charged for entrance. There is no tax on tickets valued under ten cents:

When the price of admission is from 10 cents to 20 cents inclusive the tax is 1 cent; more than 20 cents, but not more than 75 cents, the tax is 2½ cents; from 75 cents to $1 the tax is 5 cents; from $1 to $2 the tax is 10 cents, and when the price of admission is more than $2 the tax is 25 cents.

Where admission is given by pass or complimentary ticket a tax shall be payable at the highest rate charged for the performance to which admission is granted.

The penalty for obtaining admission to a place of amusement without paying the tax is $50, or six months' imprisonment. The penalty for permitting the admission of a patron without paying the tax is $25 to $200, or imprisonment for six months.

FLORENCE BOLLES WRITES GOLDWYN SCRIPT.

The creator of Madge Kennedy's newest photoplay, "The Fair Pretender," is Florence C. Bolles. Only a few years ago she was among the unknowns, but today she is on her way to the top of the ladder. By reason of her persistence and the presence of genuine ability to write stories for the screen, Miss Bolles proves again that determination must always bring a definite reward.

When she began to create vehicles for stars she met with many setbacks. Rejections came thick and fast, but finally Miss Bolles sold a story to the late Arthur Johnson. More attempts followed, and within a short time her name appeared on the films of several leading companies.

"P. A." Heads New Rochester Concern

Powers-Cameron Film Company Has Ambitious Program, Including Talking Pictures.

NEGOTIATIONS have been completed for the sale of the half-million dollar plant of the Fireproof Film Company, located on Ridgeway avenue, Rochester, N. Y., to the Powers-Cameron Film Company, a million dollar corporation which plans to bring out something new in the motion picture industry.

P. A. Powers, whose fame is linked with the Universal Film Company and Victor Talking Machines, is at the head of the new concern. The new company plans that before long the motion picture public will be witnessing a stereoscopic pictureplay in which the speech of the characters is synchronized with their actions.

It is said that under the new process the characters on the film will stand out from the screen, talking and acting as in every day life. This discovery is said to combine the oldest and the newest ideas of the industry. The principle of the thing is the stereoscope that used to lie on the parlor table of every home. A double film is fed through the projection machine to produce the stereoscopic effect.

The most startling thing about the new film is that it is claimed that the human voice will be produced on the sensitized film exactly as on a phonographic record, and in this discovery it is also said that the voice and the action of the characters will be perfectly synchronized.

The development of this apparatus would be one of the most important events of recent years in the motion picture industry and would certainly mark the crowning achievement of the career of any man now in the business. Pat Powers has had a notable record as producer and a distributor of films and he now intends to devote himself to the manufacturing of the new film.

In the large plant which the Powers-Cameron Film Company has taken over at Rochester, it is predicted many seeming miracles will be performed in the very near future. The new company plans to manufacture more than two hundred million feet of the new film a year, and it is said that the entire output has been contracted for by the Universal people.

With the entire product of the plant disposed of before manufacturing is even begun the company will be free to turn to developing the latest ideas in the motion picture field. In this regard Mr. Powers is said to be planning to spend a fortune on experimental work which may bring other no less wonderful ideas.

The stereoscopic-talking picture is only one of the great possibilities it is hoped to realize in the new plant. There is a hint of a lens, the discovery of a Pacific coast inventor, which is to perform other wonders. It is built up of hundreds of small tapering pieces of glass and its construction is said absolutely to prevent refractions of light rays, the present despair of motion picture photographers. The company is said to have purchased this owner's patents and to also own a film formula that will give a film that will wear twice as long as the present in use, at half the cost.

But perhaps the greatest feat which the new company has in mind is the development of an individual motion picture camera for home use. This has been tried by several companies, but so far there has always been some drawbacks which prevented the public from buying in any large quantities. With some the price has been prohibitive and with others the fault has been that the cameras have not used the standard film. The aim of the new company is to produce a machine using standard film and to sell both the camera and the projection lantern for about $50. Should the company's plans along this line be successful, it would mean that homes would own their own motion picture equipment, even as they now own their own phonographs.

It is understood a large amount of Rochester capital has been invested in the enterprise and that the work of getting the plant in shape will be rushed. Those interested in the enterprise say that they will start to ship film by the first of June.

KLEINMAN RESIGNS FROM LICENSE BUREAU.

James S. Kleinman, attorney for the Department of Licenses of the City of New York for the past three years, owing to the large increase in his private law practice, has tendered his resignation to Commissioner John F. Gilchrist, effective May 1.

During his association with the License Department, Mr. Kleinman had charge of all cases against theatrical booking agents, theaters and motion picture houses. He also assisted in the reviewing of motion pictures about which complaints had been made. During his term of office he was particularly active in the prosecution of cases against unlicensed booking and employment agents, who under the guise of being "managers" attempted to charge a greater commission than that permitted by law.

Sherry to Distribute Keeney Pictures

Exchangeman Will Have Sole Agency for the United States and Canada.

FRANK A. KEENEY, head of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, and William L. Sherry, formerly vice president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation and still one of the principal stockholders in that concern, have entered into an agreement whereby Mr. Sherry, through the Sherry Service, is to be the sole distributor of the Keeney Pictures for the United States and Canada. The first release will be "A Romance of the Underworld," a screen adaptation of the well-known play of the same name by Paul Armstrong. It will star Mr. Armstrong's widow, Catherine Calvert, who was also featured in the drama.

The combination between Mr. Keeney and Mr. Sherry would seem to promise a high degree of success for Keeney pictures. Mr. Keeney is a man of wealth with a reputation of never doing anything by halves. Mr. Sherry is a man of broad and intimate experience with the distributing end of the motion picture business. He headed the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company and for years was sole distributor for New York State of the productions of the Famous Players-Lasky Company. Recently he resigned as head of the Purchasing Department of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, in order to be free to carry out some large plans, including the distribution of the Keeney Pictures.

"A Romance of the Underworld" will be released in the near future. Applications for bookings should be made to Mr. Sherry at his temporary office, Room 501, Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue. Mr. Sherry is optimistic over the future of the company. He says experience has taught him that pictures such as Mr. Keeney is producing find a ready market, because they are the kind the people want to see. The next release will be "Marriage," by Guy Bolton. The Keeney forces are now working on a third picture, which has not yet received its title. It is by E. Lloyd Sheldon, who wrote "The Forbidden Path" for Theda Bara. James Kirkwood is directing all of the Keeney productions.

Amateur Afternoons at World Studios

Directors Try Out Screen Aspirants and Find Some Promising Material.

FOR the purpose of getting new faces and new talent in World-Pictures and thereby getting variety in casts, World-Pictures has set aside one afternoon a week at the World studio for the purpose of trying out new material and making selections of people for the smaller roles in new productions.

A comprehensive and successful plan for the selection of these has been inaugurated. On the afternoon the aspirants are gathered in the studio and are there tried out by the directors as to their quickness of perception, their ability to grasp the essentials of a scene and their success in depicting emotions. Those who prove capable along these lines are then given screen tests—that is, they are put through their paces before the camera by the directors. If they show up well when the tests are developed and printed they are hired for some production in which they will fit well.

Recently at one of these try-outs afternoons thirty-five young women were given a trial. Of the thirty-five six developed enough ability to warrant screen tests and of the six two were hired for work in new pictures.

GRADWELL PRESIDENT OF WORLD PICTURES.

Ricord Gradwell, former vice president and general manager of World Pictures, was elected president and general manager of the concern at the annual meeting of the board of directors held last week. Joseph L. Rhinock, former president of World Pictures, has been named chairman of the board of directors. Other officers elected are as follows: Vice President, E. J. Rosenthal; vice president, Lee Shubert; secretary and treasurer, Briton N. Busch. The following were named members of the finance committee; Joseph L. Rhinock, Ricord Gradwell, Milton J. Work, Paul Stamm and E. J. Rosenthal.

Russell Bassett, Veteran Actor, Dead

For Half a Century He Had Played on Stage and for Screen—Active Until the Last.

RUSSELL BASSETT, veteran actor of stage and screen, died at his home, 101 West Eighty-ninth street, New York, on Wednesday, May 8, of hemorrhage of the brain. Mr. Bassett had been in his usual excellent health up to the preceding Saturday. On the day before he had completed his work in the Cavalieri spectacle being staged by the Famous Players at Fort Lee. His last characterization was of a priest. Mr. Bassett leaves a wife and one son, Albert Anthony, both of whom were with him at the end. He was seventy-four years old.

Russell Bassett.

For half a century Russell Bassett played on the stage and for the screen. Born in Milwaukee, at an early age he left there for California. His father had the mining fever. The youngster was raised in Oakland. His first experience before an audience was during his attendance at Brayton College, in that city. His work in dramatic and comedy readings attracted attention. Later the college was transformed into the Dietz Opera House, and singularly enough it fell to Mr. Bassett to open it in "His Last Legs."

Mr. Bassett's first theatrical engagement was at the Old Opera House, Washington street, San Francisco. He was in the original Hooley's stock company of Chicago with James O'Neill and William H. Crane. He played with Edwin Booth, Joseph Jefferson in "Rip Van Winkle," E. A. Sothern, Lester Wallack, Maggie Mitchell, Mrs. John Drew and Joe K. Emmett among others.

On the screen Mr. Bassett played with the Biograph, Edison, Yankee, Pathe, Imp, Reliance and Nestor companies before joining the Famous Players. It was nearly eight years ago when he joined the Nestor company, when its studio was at Staten Island. Later the company was absorbed by the Universal and Mr. Bassett remained with the organization.

About four years ago Mr. Bassett was engaged by the Famous Players, for which company he skillfully interpreted a wide variety of roles. A record of two engagements covering eight years is an unusual one for a screen player. Mr. Bassett will be mourned by a host of friends.

Penrose Discusses Censorship With Film Men

Influence of Ward Leaders on Pennsylvania Censorship Deplored—Meeting Called for May 14.

SENATOR BOIES PENROSE, of Pennsylvania, discussed the evils of a politically controlled state board of censors with a group of film men at a preliminary meeting held in the Senator's offices in Philadelphia on Friday, May 10, and appeared anxious to get down to some basis upon which he could work out plans that would be a betterment to the industry for the future. Matters pertaining to the methods employed by the present board in censoring pictures revealed the fact that most of the reviewing of the film was done by subordinates appointed chiefly through the influences of ward leaders and who had proved themselves incompetent in a great many ways. It also was stated that the members of the board very rarely inspected the films themselves, thereby depending entirely upon the opinions of their subordinates.

Owing to the meeting having originally been set for Saturday, May 12, and later changed to Friday, May 10, the confusion which resulted in the mix-up of the dates brought out only a small percentage of the prominent men in the industry. In addition to the Senator, his political lieutenants Oscar Noll and W. J. Sadlier were there to aid in the conference. It was finally decided to hold the main meeting on Tuesday, May 14, when it was hoped a sufficient number of film men would be present to make a more representative showing.

Goldwyn Again Signs Mabel Normand

Samuel Goldfish, on Eve of Departure for Tour to Coast, Announces Engagement of Player on Long Contract.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, president of Goldwyn Pictures, departed for California May 9, to be gone several weeks, happy in the knowledge that Mabel Normand will continue as a Goldwyn star for a term of years. Miss Normand's former contract still had quite a time to run, but Goldwyn wished to have this favorite in its productions for an even longer period.

Miss Normand, being contented in her Goldwyn alliance, consented to a new contract of even longer duration than her first one, and now all of the selling agencies of Goldwyn are pleased to know that even bigger productions lie ahead in the future for her under the Goldwyn imprint.

"Miss Normand has borne out every prediction we made for her even before she had made her first Goldwyn production," said Mr. Goldfish. "We predicted that she would surprise her audience of admirers by being a brilliant dramatic actress instead of merely a comedienne. In Goldwyn she has developed a new personality that combines her former graces as a comedienne with dramatic power that we knew she had. I am especially happy that Miss Normand has signed a new contract with Goldwyn for a term of years, for I know that she is once more at the flood tide of popularity in all parts of the world."

Mr. Goldfish goes first to Los Angeles, after which he will visit the principal cities of the west and mid-west. He will see all of the big exhibitors and many of the smaller ones in those sections of the country. It is the fixed policy of the Goldwyn organization to have its offices and executives make frequent trips to visit exhibitors and know at first hand the local conditions under which theaters are operated in all parts of the country.

This is Mr. Goldfish's first trip to the Pacific coast in eighteen months, his last visit there being signalized by the signing of Mae Marsh, as the first Goldwyn star to be announced, and Mabel Normand—the first artists who entered his mind at the time of planning and launching the Goldwyn company.

Indianapolis Exchanges Hit by Ordinance

City Council Rules That No Film Distributor May Be Located in Building Where Public Congregate.

ONE local Indianapolis film exchange will have to change quarters, and it is likely that a few others will have to begin some remodeling and reconstruction work or move from their present locations as a result of the action of the city council at its meeting, May 6, when by a unanimous vote it passed the ordinance regulating the storing, handling and manufacture of motion picture films.

This is the same measure to which Edward G. Sourbier, owner of the Keystone and Palms theaters, and a delegation of film men strenuously objected at a meeting of the finance committee of the council a few weeks ago. The film men said at that time that they were perfectly willing to comply with any reasonable regulations and they submitted an amendment which would make the measure retroactive, but the council apparently paid little attention to their pleas. At least the ordinance was passed as it was originally drawn.

As a result of the passage of the measure, the Mutual Film Corporation will have to move its exchange from the rooms above the Keystone theater. This provision stipulates that no film exchange may maintain headquarters in a building where the public congregates. The Mutual company is the lessee of the rooms above the Keystone theater, owned by Mr. Sourbier.

That section of the ordinance which no doubt will affect other local exchanges says that every owner, proprietor, manager or user of any building now occupied or used for the storage, handling, repair or use of motion picture films or like products, shall within 120 days from the taking effect of this ordinance, remodel, reconstruct, repair or alter such building so as to comply with all the conditions of the ordinance, and such owner, proprietor, manager or occupant, shall not be liable for any of the penalties prescribed in this ordinance until the expiration of 120 days from the taking effect thereof.

"Intolerance" in Mexico

An Artistic Outrage Committed by the Local "Owners" of the Picture.

SAYS the "Semana Cinematografica," a weely trade paper published in Mexico City:

With a great deal of surprise we heard from a friend yesterday that the owners of "Intolerance" were already "properly arranging" the picture so that it would be "appreciated" by the Mexican public.

We saw the play after it had been "arranged" by its wise owners, and can find no words strong enough to protest against the artistic outrage that has been perpetrated. The "arrangement" consists in a complete separation of the four themes that had a parallel and logical development in "Intolerance," with the result that the philosophical idea on which Griffith's masterpiece is based has been entirely eliminated.

. . . The picture exhibited now under the name of "Intoltrance" is something very different from Griffith's conception. . . . As films of doubtful origin have been purchased in the past without compunction, so the importers have not hesitated in this case to destroy one of the most powerful photoplays ever produced.

If "Intolerance" does not succeed in Mexico, its failure will not be due to lack of proper appreciation on the part of the public. . . .

Leaving out the artistic question entirely—we presume the man exploiting the film saw a chance of making four rentals out of one and grasped it without giving the matter further thought—how did "Intolerance" get into Mexico?

A representative of the Epoch Producing Corporation, which controls the domestic and foreign rights on the picture, told the writer over the telephone that no copies had been sold to Mexico or any other Latin-American country.

Then, who bought the picture? This would not be hard to find by writing to Mexico.

But, who sold it here?

And why, in the name of common sense, has it not been sent already to all the big Latin-American markets?

Have the producers made up their minds to wait until duped or pirated copies have invaded those territories; or is this particular film similar to good wine, that ripens and its value increases with age?

Cromelin Against Duping Privileges

Claims That the Effect Would Be Harmful to the Whole Industry.

ASKED if he looked with any approval on the recent suggestion to American manufacturers that the privilege to "dupe" their pictures may have to be extended to European buyers because of embargo conditions, president Paul H. Cromelin, of Inter-Ocean Film, replied in the negative.

"The danger of such a practice cannot be too strongly emphasized," says Mr. Cromelin in a statement to the World. "It is very hard to control the duping of prints, once such a course is generally adopted. It is foolish to feel that there are any safeguards for the American manufacturer, for there may be no end to the duping operations, and how can the American manufacturer maintain a secret service force in foreign countries to watch the welfare of his product?

"And suppose illicit dupers of prints were spotted—what manufacturer can go to the expense of engaging legal talent abroad for each separate prosecution? Even if complete embargo comes, the manufacturer with foresight will decline to extend any such privilege to the foreign buyer. The foreign buyer himself loses out by such a practice, because illegally duped prints will constantly drop out to compete with his so-called legally duped ones. Not only that, but there will be a very great difference in the looks of the picture on the screen. Is the buyer going to risk his reputation for all time by showing prints with poor photography in his territory for just a few months?

"In fact, it is this very difference in the appearance of duped and genuine positives on the screen that has heretofore been the legitimate foreign buyer's surest protection. It has been easy for him to locate illicit competitors, because any child could tell a duped positive from a genuine positive. Are foreign buyers going to voluntarily reject this simple means of protection? And going back to the American manufacturer, can he afford to let his reputation for good photography go because an unfortunate shipping condition might arise and prevail for a few months?

"Can he afford, with his big investment in films, to bring the day of the duper and duping back? I think I can answer for most American manufacturers when I say that they would rather not receive a penny from a market for a few months, than sponsor an evil in that market that might well destroy their prospects for all time. I am sure that the average American manufacturer will say: 'If the Government cannot spare space in its ships for my negatives, I will be patriotic enough to lose some money for the time being by totally staying out of that particular market. Under no circumstances will I, to hold that market, allow my pictures to be duped. Rather would I wait until the Government allows me to make shipments again.'"

Norwegian Production of Moving-Picture Films.

According to Ralph A. Boernstein, U. S. vice-consul at Christiania, there exists but one Norwegian film-producing concern—the Christiania Film Co., A/S., of Christiania. This firm has released several small dramas, but it can scarcely be said that its productions thus far would warrant an attempt to exploit them in the United States. The American film of today is so far superior to most foreign productions that they are demanded by the Norwegian public far beyond any films made in this or, in fact, any other European country, and a large percentage of the pictures shown there are of American make.

Norwegian scenic and educational films would probably be acceptable to American releasing companies, though it is stated that little profit is to be derived from pictures of this character, as the releasing companies seldom pay more than 50 cents per foot and usually accept only a small portion of the film.

There are several film-producing companies in Sweden and Denmark, among which are the Swedish Biograph of Stockholm; the Hasselblade Co., of Goteborg; and the Nordick Film Co., of Copenhagen.

Guatemala 'Quake in Pictures.

C. C. Moody, sole agent for The Pryer Pictures, of New York, announces that he is about to release a series of pictures taken in Guatemala after the recent earthquake.

A cameraman of the Pryer company has been in Guatemala since last December and has taken many interesting views in and around the capital and of the volcano that caused the disaster.

As recorded in the daily press, ninety per cent. of the buildings in Guatemala City, including the famous President's palace and the old cathedral, one of the most imposing structures in Central America, were razed to the ground by the seismic convulsions.

The views will be released by Mr. Moody as a series of single-reel scenics and educational subjects.

Among the Exporters.

K. B. Clarendon, head of the K. B. Clarendon Feature Film Company, and who claims to have played with James A. Herne, Richard Mansfield, Andrew Mack and Chauncey Olcott, has a very interesting advertisement in one of the Spanish periodicals published in this town. Part of it reads as follows: ". . . but today that for five dollars a week, and in the space of six short weeks anyone can initiate himself into this profitable motion picture art, we cannot understand how those who nobly aspire to a future which will redeem them from the slavery of the office or the hardships of manual labor have not come to us in hundreds." Very enticing. We ourselves are tired of the "slavery of the office" and have had a sneaking suspicion for some time that, with a little practice, we might carve a name for ourselves before the camera. It would not be a bad idea to consult Senor Clarendon, particularly at the small cost of "five dollars a week for six short weeks."

Inquiries from Abroad.

The addresses of these firms may be obtained from Cine-Mundial, 516 Fifth avenue, New York. We do not assume responsibility as to the standing of the inquirers, and the usual precautions should be taken in all cases. All inquiries are received direct by the Moving Picture World and Cine-Mundial, the Spanish monthly edition of the Moving Picture World. Please mention number when writing:

35. A man in Venezuela is interested in securing a program of about ten pictures to be renewed every three months. Pictures should be at least four reels long.
36. A firm doing business in Panama wishes to obtain a weekly supply of film on a renting basis.
37. A man in Santiago, Cuba, is in the market for film boxes made of fibre.
38. A Central American exchange controlling some theaters is in the market for films. Their desire is to connect with a reliable American firm and are willing to give guarantees for any representation they may secure.
39. A firm in Cuba is in the market for second-hand film.
40. An exhibitor controlling some theaters in the Azores is interested in securing, on a rental basis, a regular program of American pictures with Portuguese titles.

MONTGOMERY HARD AT WORK IN SPOKANE.

Under the direction of Frank E. Montgomery, general manager of the Titan Feature Photoplay Company, who has just signed a contract with the company for a year, the administration building has been completed.

"We consider ourselves fortunate in getting the regular services of Mr. Montgomery," said J. Don Alexander, president of the company, "for his experience is extensive and he fits best into the work we have outlined for this territory."

Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery have been conducting a school, and the plan is to import stars for the productions.

Among some of Mr. Montgomery's former affiliations are as director with the Selig, 101 Bison, Kalem, New York, Mutual and Universal companies and he has produced more than 500 photoplays.

WILLIAM P. S. EARLE JOINS WORLD PICTURES.

William P. S. Earle has affiliated himself with the directorial staff of World Pictures. He has been assigned to direct Miss Barbara Castleton. Mr. Earle's first World production will be "The Blood of the Trevors," written by Maravene Thompson.

Mr. Earle has had a career in motion pictures of marked variety. After his graduation from Columbia University he devoted himself to writing stories and plays. He then became a cameraman with the Vitagraph company and then commenced to direct feature pictures. Here his versatility became evident and he was assigned such pictures as "Womanhood," "Within the Law," "For the Glory of the Crew," "His Own People," "Who Goes There," and others.

The Experience Column

Views of Our Readers Who Are Using Motion Pictures in School and Church Work.

IN OUR issue of May 4 we published certain views of a prominent western college moving picture educationalist, a man whose experiences are not only interesting, but will prove helpful to many others. We like the candor of his complaints and publish herewith his complete letter replying to our article above mentioned, believing that all our readers may be benefited by his favorable comments and also as by his criticisms:

I read with much interest the comments provoked by my letter of recent date. If I can read the thing rightly our bone of contention is the term "Educational Film"; hence, with your permission, we will still continue to quarrel—in a pleasant humor however.

I will begin by agreeing with your statement concerning the differentiation between the educational powers of the motion pictures in general and the educational motion picture in particular. I agree "that when an exhibitor uses the word 'Educational' it ought surely be within the power of every intelligent person to know just how the term is applied." Now my dear friend it ought to be but it isn't.

I have never found two writers of education who would define education in the same way. John Doe's idea and Richard Roe's idea of the term "Educational Motion Pictures" are entirely different. Your correspondent does have lists of "Educational Film" as catalogued by the Moving Picture World. I have inspected the entire list as are found in the files we have of your excellent trade magazine. I have gone over the list twice in search for material which we might be able to buy or lease or rent so as to enrich our supply of film and at the same time be assured that the finance committee would not hold up the bill. I am absolutely sure that "Broadway Jones, "Half a Rogue," "The Secret of the Submarine," "One Day," "Aladdin from Broadway"—all of the foregoing taken from your literature group—would be blue penciled, and I would have a mighty hard job convincing our eagle eyed finance committee that these films are "Educational." I am not the fellow to say they are not, but I have a "hunch" I know the verdict of the committee.

While in the public school work two experiences came under my observation which has made me more or less skeptical. I fought the motion picture proposition through. Bought a machine, helped the manual training teacher build the booth, install the machine, and that without a penny from the school board. To convince the non-reconcilable I ordered a film from one of the reputable exchanges in this state. I, myself, was a tyro in the movie game, and trusted to the judgment of the manager to send me a program really worth while. The film came filled with divorcees, an easily tempted young man, a preacher who could not resist the temptation of being "naughty" when he was a thousand miles from the parish; hence, he indulged in a little booze and got cleaned up in a game of "Stud Poker," as I believe the game was called. Now this was what came when I ordered a good, clean educational and entertaining program. I then tried my luck with an exchange bearing the name Educational. Positive assurance was given that all films were properly censored, and were very good for churches and schools. It happened that we were teaching Heinie in our Hun language class, and I thought it would be a good chance for me to show the teachers that even the languages and literature could be supplemented by film. I asked for "The Lorelei." Well it arrived in due time. A fine siren, vampire, homebreaking one-reeler. The teachers had one on me then for sure. Yes, Mr. Jackson, "when an exhibitor uses the term 'Educational' it ought to be within the power of every intelligent person to know just how the term is applied." I agree that I was not exercising a due amount of intelligence when I trusted to the judgment of the two film concerns not named.

Just to keep history straight I will say that my school has ousted German language since, and has instituted a course in citizenship and Government. This experience I mentioned above was long before we thought of any war.

You are right about your correspondent being a fan. He is putting his best licks to add his mite to the good cause. He reads your column the minute the Moving Picture World arrives, and he hopes to see the school people of the state open up their eyes before many more days have lapsed.

He succeeded in getting the motion picture discussed at three district teachers' associations over the state this spring, and has been promised a place on the State Teachers' Association program next fall. Just give us time and we will put the thing across.

In answer to an inquiry we are glad to publish the following letter from the Superintendent of Instruction of Dayton, Ohio. In doing so we congratulate Mr. Frank W. Miller upon the fact that he is using the moving picture in the high schools of his city. We are especially pleased to note that he finds "visual instruction of great benefit." May his experience be a catching one:

Dear Sir.—In reply to your letter of April 25, I will say that we have three moving picture machines. We have one in each of our high school buildings. In each one of our grade schools we have stereopticons in which we use lantern slides. We find visual instruction to be of great benefit both in the moving picture machines and in the stereopticons where slides are used. I do not believe that I could say anything further that would be of interest to you at this time since we do not intend to extend our activities until after the close of the war.

FRANK W. MILLER.

The following letter from Dr. H. M. Ferguson of Morris, Illinois, is brief and to the point. We are somewhat acquainted with the work of this energetic physician, who by means of the moving picture has rescued a church from the verge of the grave and transformed it into a living organization. In spite of some opposition and at his own expense Dr. Ferguson purchased and installed a moving picture equipment, prompted only by the faith that in them lay the secret of renewed life for his church society. We congratulate Dr. Ferguson, and trust that the publication of his letter will bring him the help and encouragement that he desires and deserves:

Moving Picture World,

Gentlemen.—We are conducting three showings a week in our church. Making a business as it were of running a movie in the church. However, we do not seem to be "on the map."

We would be very happy to have you make mention of the fact at the proper time and place so that the trade generally will place us on their mailing lists. Direct correspondence to Dr. H. M. Ferguson, 221 West Main street.

Thanking you very much in advance, I am,

A Bright Idea

E. W. Hammons to Extemporize Filmsically on the Picturesque-Dramatic Side of the Coal Industry.

WE LEARN with interest that Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation, who has long contemplated the subject of the romance of coal as both picturesque and highly dramatic, has recently enlisted the services of Director Frederick A. Thomson to make a multiple-reeler on this theme.

William Addison Lathrop has been engaged to write the scenario for this production, which will be in seven reels with the tentative title, "The Romance of Coal." The coal country of West Virginia, which incorporates much of the beauty of the Alleghany Mountains, will be used as a background to a human interest story, which has already been submitted and accepted. Miss Caroline Gentry, a native of those regions, has collaborated with Mr. Lathrop in the making of the story.

This subject is of special interest at the present time. Trans-Alleghany mines have been working practically at half-time when they ought to have been speeded up to top-notch production in view of military requirements and next winter's domestic needs. A worse coal famine than last year is predicted unless conditions are remedied.

The reason of the half-time production is car shortage. The cry goes up all over West Virginia: "Give us cars!" Operators have no facilities for storage, and when the regular supply of cars to transport the coal from the mines is interfered with work at the mining camps stop. Then labor is diverted to other industries, and the future of the coal industry is threatened.

The whole allied world is dependent on the normal cycle of continuous mine production, regular, unceasing transportation and the consequent storage of abundant supplies at tidewater and in the vicinity of munition plants. For patriotic and commercial reasons operators and miners are anxious to do their utmost.

Among the gifts of coal to humanity are not only the conventional light, heat and power, but explosives, dyes, chemicals, medicines, preservatives and the myriad products of carbon. "The Romance of Coal" will show incidentally to its story the methods of production, the nature of the economic processes and the life of the working people. Director Thomson, who is now selecting the cast, will go with his company to Charleston, W. Va., late this month, and with this as his headquarters will pick out the most salient scenes for the picture.

The Sugar-Coated Pill

Herbert F. Sherwood Points to Truths Regarding Informational Films and Suggests Suitable Combinations.

ACCORDING to Herbert F. Sherwood, of the National Board of Review, the word "education" does not suggest anything stirring to the youth who comes in daily contact with it. To him it is like unadulterated quinine. A piece of apple pie has been found in the days antedating sugar-coated pills an excellent camouflage. for the administration of quinine. While one may not compare informational pictures with quinine, for they have great entertainment value if suited to the age and interests of the audience, yet combined with the proper amount of the apple sauce of entertainment pictures one may be satisfactorily introduced. The environment and association are favorable; but this is as far as one should go. The leading motion picture theatres of the United States invariably include in their programs a picture which would come under this head. They usually also have a "news" reel. The environment is one of receptiveness. The association is that of entertainment and recreation.

Put into plain language this means a balanced program, including a good story, a comedy, having as chief elements adventure and surprise, and an informational picture suitable in subject and artistically and logically prepared. Suitability is the important thing to consider in connection with the whole program. The informational picture should meet this requirement through its timeliness, its general interest for young people and its value in answering a normal inquiry of youth. Logical construction of the picture would involve a sequence of ideas that would carry the mind forward and leave a residuum of information and a sensation of satisfaction. Those pictures which are somewhat technical in their subject and complicated in their ideas should be left to the environment of technical training. That is to say, an exhibition of "educational" pictures should be associated with a place where education is the chief object. Young people should not be invited to "entertainments" which are courses in education.

"Keep on Insisting"

THERE is a well-known saying "Strike the iron while it is hot" that will never lose its wisdom or the timely power of its application. What has this to do with moving pictures? Simply this, that by the continual bringing before the people the highest advantages of the pictures in these the great days of picture popularity we may surely mould them to that permanent shape of durability and service to which they are justly entitled.

We have all lived long enough to know that only those things endure that have the power to serve, that which does not help and serve humanity soon dies. Fads and fancies are all short-lived. Fashions please, but they change and die; nothing lives that ministers only to the physical and temporary, that alone survives that appeals to the mind, soul and spirit. The true picture enthusiast desires to see the pictures so established that they shall live with Time itself. The "Fan" may be satisfied with temporary pleasure and fills a passing want in encouraging the growth of the moving pictures in all popularity, but he does not secure permanence. It is in this relationship that a leading moving picture man, John R. Freuler, former president of the Mutual Film Corporation, says in a most timely and wise manner:

"It is unfortunately true that the moving picture is still largely viewed as merely an amusement, a luxury—almost as a public vice in some quarters. We must insist continually, and never cease reiterating that the moving picture is an instrument of public service as much available to the common good as the Press, the Pulpit or the Lecture Platform. We must keep on insisting until the picture is completely recognized in every quarter. When the picture gets that recognition it will automatically free itself of many parasites of graft and persecution. The vast official recognition given by the Government in calling for the aid of the pictures in all the recent activities connected with every branch of war service is highly important."

The Educational Department of the Moving Picture World makes it a part of its policy to "keep on insisting" that the moving picture is "an instrument of public service" and that nowhere is its public service of more value than in the service of young people and that in endeavoring to procure its recognition "in every quarter" the school authorities must be among the first to acknowledge "this instrument of public service." It argues well for the public service when a man so prominent as Mr. Freuler leads in an open demand for the rightful high place of the picture; it is also a well-known fact that other leading producers share these views. Very recently we have had occasion to attempt to convince the doubtful-minded among school authorities who deceived themselves into supposing that picture producers were only actuated by "commercial purposes," that higher ideas than mere financial gain prompted the policies of the larger and more successful companies. It is most timely to find that it is a picture man who is "insisting" upon the "reiteration" of the "power of service" in the pictures and not some outside philosopher. The best and highest interests and purposes of and for the moving pictures are found within the ranks of the moving picture people, they know the value of the pictures better than anyone else and are the first to wish everyone else to know and benefit by those values.

Official Recognition.

Mr. Freuler calls attention to the "official recognition" which is constantly being given to the valuable and profitable use of the moving pictures. This is true from the President of the United States down. Everywhere, where occasion has arisen for the trial, they have not failed to secure "official recognition," and such recognition has only failed when they have lacked official use. W. H. J.

A Hit in the Cartoon World

Paramount-Bray's 119th Release of Pictograph Has Unusually Amusing Animated Drawing.

MOST of our readers know something about the Bobby Bumps animated cartoons, which appear from time to time on the end of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph. These funny little comedies, in which Bobby and his dog Fido are the central figures, are made by Earl Hurd, and are among the cleanest and most pleasing cartoons for children's programs, as well as being delightful to the adult audience. The particular number to which we refer at this writing appears in the 119th issue of the Pictograph, and is entitled "Bobby Bumps Caught in the Jam."

The trouble starts when Fido tries to catch the cat off her guard so that he can steal her saucer of milk at dinner time, and with the aid of a tiny mouse accomplishes his object. The plan, which the mouse and Fido work out between them, involves the luring of the cat from the saucer by the mouse while Fido takes a few laps and the duplicating of Fido for the mouse while the latter satisfies her thirst. This plan repeated in connection with a jar of jam at a later date fails to arrive at a successful culmination, for while the cook is on the trail of Bobby Fido gets his head caught in the jar, a fact that ends disastrously for all concerned. This is one of the funniest yet.

Interesting Educationals

Which Include Three Travel Subjects, One Zoological and One Sport Subject.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"Tid-Bits of Travel" (Educational-Newman).

AN ENTERTAINING and informational reel of film is contained in this issue of the Newman travel pictures, which are being released by the Educational Films Corporation of America, and which appeared the week of April 28 at the Rivoli theatre. The first scene shows a quaint water wheel in Japan, followed by a picturesque view of a stream in which gold fish abound, and which are so tame that they take their food from the hand of a pretty Japanese maiden. Then the scene changes to Nara, where we watch schoolboys undergoing strenuous physical training. The narrow streets in the Fifth avenue section of Pekin, China, and also streets in Canton are shown, drawing attention to the modern Chinaman without his queue. The Philippine Islands come next, presenting a group of infants, and, finally, Hawaii with its various types. The latter presents some interesting scenes on the sheep farming industry.

"Picturesque Wales" (Pathe).

The Rivoli presented, during the week of April 28, some beautiful scenes photographed in Wales by the Pathe cameraman. These scenes have been artistically colored, and are indeed a feast to the eye. Llangollen with its picturesque dwellings, including the Abbey of Via de Crucia, will interest the architect as well as other lovers of the beautiful. Then there are delightful pastoral scenes—fishing from quaintly formed boats, and canals which form highways of commerce.

"Our Egypt of the Southwest" (Educational).

One of the most interesting reels of pictures which come under the educational or informational class consists of scenes taken among the Indians of the Southwest. Here we see the stately Navajos and also the Hopis plying those arts and industries which they have followed for centuries. Pottery making is one of the most attractive of these. The making of the Navajo blankets is also a feature of the picture.

"Ingenious Insects" (Paramount-Bray).

The 118th release of the Pictograph includes one of the most fascinating insect studies that one could imagine. The "Trap-Door Spider" is the subject of the picture, and close-ups are shown of this remarkable little insect, which not only betrays large intelligence in choosing a place for its home, but also understands the art of camouflage. This spider burrows into the ground in a diagonal fashion, weaving at the bottom of its nest a soft blanket for its bed. It also equips its home with an invisible trap door on the surface of the ground. This will be found not only informational, but entertaining.

"Rod and Reel Champions" (Paramount-Bray).

An interesting subject appearing in the 119th release of the Pictograph presents a bevy of skilled casters of the bait. Trials of skill have been photographed and the various points which prove the excellence of the feats accomplished, are explained.

All About Our Navy

"Your Fighting Navy at Work and Play" About to Be Released by the Educational Films Corporation of America.

THE good right arm of Uncle Sam's fighting forces—the Navy—will soon be presented by the Educational Films Corporation of America in a series of spectacular motion pictures called "Your Fighting Navy at Work and Play." The pictures, the taking of which has been completed, are now being titled with the co-operation of Lieutenant Henry Reuterdahl of the United States Navy. Mr. Reuterdahl is not only a celebrated marine artist, but also one of the foremost experts on the strength, resources and offensive powers of the world's navies. His contributions to magazines on military and naval preparedness attracted wide attention, and he was brought into the department to help in the patriotic work along with Lieutenant Wells Hawks and other writing experts.

The aim of the pictures is to show the ships and the service as they are today, keyed up to the highest efficiency in the struggle with the submarine and likewise for the naval Armageddon that is bound to come with the German High Sea Fleet before the close of the war. The series will thus be very different from a set of peace-time navy pictures, for every form of fighting activity is illustrated—the mighty guns at work, the battle evolutions of the fleet, the work of the submarines and destroyers, the firing of torpedoes and the building up of smoke screens.

Other units of the series will illustrate the life of the Bluejacket, both afloat and ashore. Kinsfolk of the fighting forces want to know what the boys are doing at work and at play. These films will set forth not only the marvels of disciplined effort, but the recreations of the sailor and the lighter sides of life on shipboard.

Making Ribbon of New Design

Substituting Bird Designs on Ribbons in Place of the Barbarous Custom of Decorating With Dead Birds or Their Plumage.

IN the Universal Screen Magazine No. 72, which will be released on May 24, is a timely subject which is of unusual interest. This deals with the manufacture of ribbon of the latest design, and the copying of designs from bird groups in the Museum of Natural History.

When we see the trouble to which the designer must go to obtain the proper article for the manufacturer, and the time and material consumed in transferring the design to a copper plate previous to actually printing the ribbon, we are not surprised at the high price of these beautiful articles, which combine beauty of color with other attributes. This subject also includes the draping of a ribbon gown, as well as the trimming of a hat.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

A new exchange has been opened in Syracuse by E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation, with A. H. Westfall acting in the capacity of manager. Residents of that district will no doubt be glad to learn of this fact, which will place them in close touch with some of the best educational and semi-educational films on the market.

Two pictures of unusual natural history interest were pre-released by the Educational week of May 5 in "The Ice Age," at the Rialto, and "Adaptation," at the strand. Robert C. Bruce, in "The Ice Age," shows how the glacial ice-cap has cut off mountains, sculptured scenery, created lakes and waterfalls, the scenes being laid principally in the Glacier National Park in Montana. The Raymond Ditmars animal picture, "Adaptation," illustrates the extremes of development whereby wild creatures have been fitted for their place on the globe. Both "The Ice Age" and "Adaptation" will be generally released on May 12.

Metro Engages Pageant Specialist

Its President Believes Recruits Drawn from Different Walks of Life Add Value and Variety to Screen Stories.

AN artist and student of modern pageantry has been added to Metro's growing staff of scenario writers, in accordance with the belief of Richard A. Rowland, Metro's president, that the motion picture, the latest of the arts, should receive tribute and aid from all the others.

Louise Rive-King Miller Boyer is the latest acquisition to the colony of scenario writers preparing productions for Metro stars. Mrs. Boyer has studied painting in Paris, and pageantry in America, the latter under the tutelage of Thomas Wood Stevens, who is authority on this new development of artistic and civic life. Mrs. Boyer brings to the screen a sense of pictorial values developed in the arrangement of color, form and mass groupings in the art-processions she has directed, as well as in the study of the world's greatest paintings. She has specialized in decorative design, and her ability in this direction will be fully utilized in the making of Metro pictures.

The stage, the newspaper world, playwriting and civil engineering have contributed to Metro's scenario staff. Luther Reed is the department's civil engineer. The stage is represented by June Mathis and by Katharine Kavanaugh. Albert Shelby Le Vino brings the exact mental habits of the trained newspaperman to the service of the screen. He has had more than fifteen years' experience on the New York Times, New York American and other leading dailies, and is also a prolific writer of articles and short stories.

Charles A. Taylor is the "melodrama king" who presented such thrillers as "From Rags to Riches" and "The White Tigress of Japan," and with heart-dramas like "Yosemite" and "The Queen of the Highway."

Alice Solis in Metro's New York studio has devoted all her attention, since completing her education, to the writing of motion picture plays and technical work such as continuity.

"CUPID" IS ALSO A STAGE HIT.

One of the hits of the New York dramatic season has been scored by little Bonnie Marie, who just previously played the role of Cupid in the Edwin Bower Hesser film spectacle, "The Triumph of Venus." The little girl whose splendid work as Cupid in the photoplay of Olympian deities called forth the highest praise of critics, is now playing in support of Chauncey Olcott in "Once Upon a Time," which has just made its New York premiere.

Sound Sense from Steve.

STEVE FARRAR, of the Casino, El Dorado, Ill., sends in a letter so full of sound sense that we wish we might take it over the country and force every weak-kneed exhibitor in the nation to listen to it and understand. With hundreds of exhibitors with a more or less broad streak of yellow on their hides yelping about bad business and bankruptcy, it is refreshing to get a letter from an exhibitor who knows his business and who knows that bad business is his own fault, because he does not go after it and GET it. Listen to Steve, you of the elastic spines and quaking knees, and take heart again. What Steve has done, you can do.

> When this war thing hit us, a year ago, I knew there was some tough sailing ahead for us, and made my plans then to weather the storm—get the money—and do my bit. I knew the draft would take a lot of my very best patrons, the young fellows who spend it as fast as they make it, and it has; 133 left this morning for camp, but my business is better than ever before. I knew that the folks these boys left behind were going to be lonely, and that I was the man to cheer them up, and I went after them, with the result that I am getting people in my show every night regularly that never came a few months back. Something went out of their lives (their boy) and they just had to have something to take its place, and the screen at the Casino, with soldier boys marching across it, was just what they wanted. I have done my bit by donating the theater free for all kinds of drives, and have donated with both hands to everything that came up. And in making up my programs for the past six months I have not overlooked the comedy end of it; have played a two-reel comedy every night in the week, and always finish the show with the comedy, no matter how sad and grim the feature may be—when they go out, they go with a smile on their faces—a yard long. This war is not going to last always, and when it's over I'm going to do the greatest business I ever did in the town, all my old patrons will come back and I'll have a lot of new ones.
> The war tax was another jolt; I first thought I would collect it a penny at a time, but decided that would be confusing to a lot of my patrons, so, on November first, I raised the price to 10 and 15 cents. This was my regular admission after that date, never less than that; the opposition thought they would pull a good one, so announced that their price would remain the same—5 and 10—and they would pay the war tax; my business fell off first three weeks, then it began to climb, and its been climbing ever since. And I have been running in shows for 10 and 20, 15 and 25, and a few at 15 and 30 (got that for The Honor System and Within the Law), and it pleased them and did a big business. The other fellow's 5 and 10 price helps me, for when they come to me and kick on my price, I just tell them I am giving them a show worth all I ask and that if they feel that they cannot pay that for a good show, there is a show right up the street where they can see the same number of reels I show for ten cents, and its the best argument in the world for my show and prices. I am not trying to make them pay high prices; it's up to them. Next week I have two 10 and 20 nights—Douglas Fairbanks one night and a return date on Polly of the Circus. Another thing is that I am not playing any vaudeville; haven't had an act in the house in almost a year, and they don't want it any more; I've convinced them that good pictures is the best show on earth.
> As I said before, this war isn't going to last always, and the thing to do is "keep the home fires burning" and the old projector running until the boys come home, then things are going to hum again, and the fellows who have sold out and quit are going to have a severe case of the bellyache. If I don't write or send in anything don't think I've gone back to the farm—I'm just busy, that's all.

And do you notice how Steve fears his opposition? He didn't keep his prices down just because the other fellow did. He minded his own business, stood a falling business for a couple of weeks and now he is more than getting it back in a small town in a part of Illinois that the old-time concert companies used to call "The Graveyard," because so many troupes died there trying to work their way from the more profitable Ohio valley district to the lake regions. And still Steve finds time to go to the dogs, if his business doesn't, for he is trying to raise a champion bulldog in between shows.

Philadelphia Programs.

The Fifty-Sixth Street theater uses an oddly shaped program but four inches wide and nine inches long. It has a good advertising patronage, but something more than the third of each inside page is reserved for the house, and clearly marked off. As this is an eight-pager this gives a page a day to the attractions, but where a title runs more than one day the double space is given to the single title. This is a good idea, for it gives a certain suggestion of importance to the subjects that are held over for a second day, which naturally will help to build business. One objection is that the body type is not easy to read. It is a very slightly ornamental face in monotone, and is not as easily read in bulk as a shaded letter. One of the straight Roman faces would be better. The days are named and dated and the copy is carefully prepared. It is rather above the average.

The Amusement Parlor is a horrible name for a theater, but it may be an inheritance from the penny-in-the-slot parlors that preceded the pictures and too well known to chance a change of name; but even at that we think we would take a chance and change the name anyhow. The program follows general lines, but it is printed in black on brown stock, and the result is far from striking. The black sinks into the brown, and the general effect is not good. Where colored stock is used there should be a careful selection of color, not alone as to color, but shade. A copy on paper slightly off the white for another week looks much better, though the printer has been careless in locking up the front page, and the border work makes the entire page look dirty. A little brushing with benzine would not hurt that border either, the finer lines of which are clogged with ink and dirt.

The Lehigh Palace uses a sheet of white paper, 3½ x 5½, printed on one side only. The days are undated, and you have to look to the top of the bill for information. They shave it pretty close when they announce "The first showing in Central North Philadelphia" of a certain subject. If this is kept up we shall presently be boxing the compass double—once for the section of the town and then for the section of that section, and each house will then be able to claim a premiere, even for commercials.

The Auditorium, Logan, gets out a very neat looking program. There is nothing especially new about it, but it is all well done and attractive without being unduly ornate or expensive. Good taste in types and good press work are generally better than two colors and sloppy work.

The Globe makes the mistake of printing sixty screen cuts in photo-brown in the belief that it will give a photographic effect. Brown is seldom a good color to work on programs, and it does not work well with cuts unless these are fine screen and carefully made ready. Brown and the lighter shades of red should be carefully avoided.

The Fairmount has a 6 by 8, printed the wide way. Green ink is used on white paper, and the ink is not suited to the paper used, or vice versa. At any rate it spreads and looks mussy, and it is not a good policy to use mussy advertising lest the suggestion be created that it advertises a mussy house. There is too much type in the daily boxes and the days are undated.

How Not to Do It.

Here is an excellent example of how not to advertise. It is taken from an Atlanta, Ga., paper, and takes a space slightly larger than four fives. It is one of the primary points of good advertising that the three chief points of a theatrical advertisement, in the order of their importance, shall be the house, the attraction and the date. In this advertisement the title is given prominence, but is slightly obscured by a fanciful type, but the house and date are buried in the middle of the advertisement and the date is very clumsily set in for it "Com. tomorrow matinee." An additional line advises that "All this week matinees daily." This might mean that Cleopatra is to be shown for the entire week with daily matinees, but it might mean that daily matinees were to be given this particular week, or that the attraction would be shown at the matinees only. It is very poor phrasing and still worse display. The house name should be displayed so clearly that it cannot be overlooked. The date should be clearly stated as "All this week. Matinees daily", and the name of the attraction should be given in the most readable type possible. The place for pictures is in the line cut, not in the type used for one of the most essential points of the announcement.

Ruff Stuff.

Ralph Ruffner writes that he did not think it necessary to print "Happy Easter" or some similar legend on this advertisement for the Liberty, Portland, Ore., though it was used on Easter Sunday—across the page and down eleven inches. There is very little advertising to the display, but it looks well on the page, and we think it brought as much business as a thousand words of argument would have done. It is capitally done and it reproduced well, and we don't blame Ruff for feeling proud about it, but we do not think that it overshadows this advertisement for George Beban. We wish we could reproduce this in the original five nines, for it is seldom we have found a better combination of scene cut and text. Of course the photograph had to be right in the first place, and it is almost impossible to get scene photographs that have a real meaning, but this one does work out well, and the dim background of the steamship (even to the Italian flag at the stern) and the half-suggested Statue of Liberty all form a harmonious whole. The artist has begun where the photograph stops and has completed the suggestion without overshadowing the central figures, and the type is put in as artistically as the art work. No gush; just a few appreciative words that make you say "That's so," and start for the theater either then or later in the engagement. Were we running a prize ad contest we think this would come pretty close to taking first prize.

Two Good Ideas.

F. S. Workman, of the Brainerd, Brainerd, Minn., sends in an idea for a book marker that also carries a matinee scheme that he does not seem to have considered as new as it is. The latter is an offer to the ladies to come in at cut rates at the matinees, and reads:

LADIES

Have a Matinee Party—we will admit any party of Six for (Tax Included) 50c at this matinee.

The book marker, which Mr. Workman says he uses as a throwaway with unusually good results, is a strip of fairly stiff paper about 2 by 8½ inches, with about two and a half inches folded over on itself, the turned part showing a cut of the player while the rest of the strip carries the announcement of the play in which the star shown is to appear. This necessitates a double printing, but the effect is much better than where the straight slip is used. We cannot reproduce the slips as they are in brown on brown, but if you send a return envelope to Mr. Workman, we think he will let you have a sample. It works well as a daily program for house use as well as for a throwaway; perhaps better, since they are almost too delicate for the latter use. A throwaway should be more bold. Mr. Workman has been away from the department for some time, but he comes with full hands.

Family Rates.

J. P. Gruwell, of the Palace, Grand Rapids, Wis., sends in some copies of his house program with a request for suggestions. The Palace Messenger is a four-page, 4½ by 7½. The front page is a little too full of type to bring the best results. This advertises the Sunday show, but it would be better to carry most of this text inside, even if it is necessary to crowd the space a little, and let the front show a more open appearance. A still better idea would be to keep the front for the excellent house talk now run on the back page, setting this in the same size type as that now used, but writing enough to fill the space or with perhaps an inch at the bottom for the chief feature of the week. Then start the inside page with the Sunday show and run down through the week. One thing we like in the makeup of the program is the flexibility of the announcement. There is not an even division to the page, but the space allotted seems to be governed by the importance of the subject, though generally Thursday is feature day. A thing we do not like so well is the rather weak style of announcement. There is no punch to the statements. We do not mean by this that there is a lack of superlative adjectives; that is not punch. What we do mean is that there seems to be a lack of familiarity with the subjects. The statements are too general. Also there is a certain lack of exactness as, for example, the announcement of William Collier and not William Collier, Jr., in The Bugle Call. On Monday nights the entire family, regardless of numbers, is admitted for a quarter, but it is easier to know who's who in the family in Grand Rapids, Wis., than in Grand Rapids, Mich.

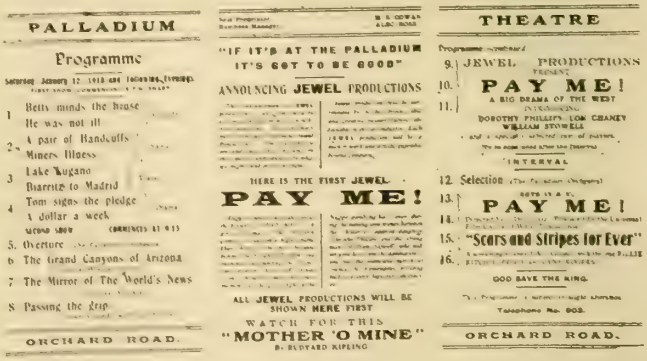
Mr. Arnold's Bereavement.

James A. Arnold, proprietor of the Star theater, Bellingham, Wash., died March 1. Our sincere sympathies are extended his son, J. Lewis Arnold. The senior Arnold was a good showman, and his skill raised the Star to a point of prosperity that we believe his son, bred under his father's instruction, will maintain. We need the good showmen now to hold together the more timid ones who can see naught but failure ahead.

From Singapore.

The Universal press department sends in some programs and throwaways from the Palladium, Singapore Straits Settlements. The program is along the familiar lines of the English program; a six-page folder with pages 4 by 7½. The cut work is badly done, but this seems to be more the fault of the ink and paper than of the printer. The middle page of one side shows a drawn design with the house heading, the other two pages being duplicates of a house advertisement. The inside three pages are printed up with the program. There are two shows, the first, at eight o'clock, consisting of one-reelers and running about an hour. The second show starts at a quarter past nine and offers a five-reel feature, a Universal Weekly (which must be a trifle out of date by the time it reaches India), a scenic and a comedy. All of the night program is made up of Universal material, though this is not always the case. The layout of the program is shown in the cut.



The house uses 2,000 throwaways, 7½ by 18, for each change of bill, and changes twice a week. They are rather closely set. They make a cleanup on Mother o' Mine, possibly because of the magic of Kipling's name in the land he placed his best stories in.

Here's a Curio.

Here is a genuine curiosity. It is a float used by a New York exhibitor. True, he is over in Brooklyn, and we do not really regard Brooklyn as a part of the real New York any more than the Post Office Department does, but it is in Greater New York, and it is hard to find in any part of New York an exhibitor who uses floats or other evidences of hustle. It was used by D. Schaever, of Fox's Comedy theater, to advertise the Fox Cheating the Public, which, perhaps, accounts for the unusual burst of enterprise. Like most large towns, the New York houses seem to depend upon the crowds rather than intensive advertising, though the large towns will respond just as readily to a street wagon as the smallest hamlet—perhaps even more quickly.

Wasted Space.

This advertisement of the Imperial, Pawtucket, R. I., is a good example of a double waste of the same space. In the first place, the underline stands out so clearly that it kills the drawing, and this, in turn, makes the underline look more desirable than the current offering. Both of the underlines are well and cleanly displayed. The second current feature, a Madge Evans, is almost lost in the lower left-hand corner of the cut. Thirteen reels is entirely too much show to be seen at one time, yet most of the Providence theaters offer double features with single reels.

One for Toronto.

Toronto exhibitors may be all at sea in their newspaper advertising, but the Regent, of that city, gets out an imposing house organ, sixteen pages, 7 by 10 inches, plate paper. It carries a neatly drawn front page frame, not too ornamental, and faulty only in that the name of the organ too much overshadows that of the house, which gets but a fourth the size. Possibly the idea of this is to give the suggestion of an independently printed sheet with the Regent taking the front page for an advertisement, but it is so clearly the house publication that the scheme does not work. It carries a lot of dignified advertising, some miscellany, and sufficient house talk of features and the music; the latter being played up as a house feature, and from the program in the issue sent it would appear that the music was worthy of being featured. Where but a single half-tone is used in an issue of sixteen pages we think that a saving might be effected in the paper without destroying the appearance of the sheet, but it assuredly presents a pretty appearance as it stands.

Doug. Isn't Dead.

Douglas Fairbanks is not dead. This is merely the Saratoga idea of display. I. I. Goldsmith sends it in and asks for comment. The first comment is that we would not let the compositor stick the name of a star in a mourning border. After we got him trained to that we would try and educate him to the belief that "added attraction" is not as important a line by many points as "The Eagle's Eye." That "added attraction" should have gone in a six or eight point letter and the space thus gained could have been used to better the display of the title.

KEYSTONE COMEDY

Read what the New York Times says today of Maeterlinck's Blue Bird which opened at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City yesterday. This wonderful picture will be shown at the Palace Theatre.

As a matter of fact an even better arrangement would have been an eight-point "added attraction" at both the right and left hand sides of the column as:

Added Attraction Added Attraction

THE EAGLE'S EYE

This would have gotten the line from directly about the title (where it crowds the important line) and at the same time would have added to the apparent importance of the announcement. We do not think it good policy to give so much space to the following attraction unless the paper is an evening edition and goes to the homes so late that few are attracted out that night. In such a case it would be better to give a majority of the space to the underline, but we would arrange the larger lines so that they would not suggest that Miss Marsh was to be seen in "The Cinderella Man," a Keystone Comedy. Even the announcement of "six joyous acts" heightens this suggestion. Another curious idea is the last bank, which urges the reader to see "what the New York Times says today of Maeterlinck's Bluebird, which opened at the Rivoli theater, New York City, yesterday," adding that the attraction will be seen later at the Palace. Instead of causing a run on the newsstands for copies of the Times (And why only the Times?) the house might have quoted extracts. Citing but a single paper suggests that the other papers were not so favorable and rouses suspicion. "See what your New York paper today says, etc.," would be far more convincing, even if not all of the notices were as elaborate as that in the Times.

Stage and Screen.

RECENTLY, in a magazine article, David Belasco declaims against certain devices of the screen, never realizing that the screen but duplicates in its own way the artifices of the stage. Mr. Belasco, it would appear, does not wholly approve of the closeup. It is inartistic. We are quite ready to admit that the excessive use of the closeup is not artistic; indeed, in the hands of some directors, it becomes an aggravation. But what is the closeup other than the spotlight on the darkened stage? Of course Mr. Belasco is too artistic a handler of stage tricks to turn out the lights and throw on the spot. That sort of thing belongs to the era of crudity, but there are modern equivalents; the light streaming through a suddenly opened door, the illumination of the moon or, to cite one of the most striking of Mr. Belasco's effects, the withdrawal of the trap to the torture chamber in The Darling of the Gods when the heroine, in the semi-darkness, is dragged to the glare that streams from that unholy apartment. All of these are but the stage equivalent of the closeup, or, more correctly, the closeup is but the screen rendering of the stage device.

In the same way the cut-back finds its duplicate in the sounds off stage. The only difference is that instead of beating with rattans on a leather cushion to suggest a battle, the screen shows the actual battle and gives the courier riding with dispatches instead of using a pair of cocoanut shells on a slab of stone.

Visions are no more than the lengthy asides and tiresome narratives of the early stages of the drama. In place of the "Listen and I will tell you the sad story of my life," the scene fades down and we get the story in action instead of tiresome narrative and more or less faulty elocution.

Getting right down to facts, it would seem that the screen in these matters has the advantage of the stage. There is lacking the magic of the voice, the color and actual presence of the players, but in return we get the greater flexibility of locale, the greater ease of explanation and the greater semblance of reality once the black and white is accepted in place of color.

Each phase of the art has its advantages and its drawbacks. To question the value of any form of literary expression, be it drama, the printed word, or the screen, is to confess to a narrowness of mind, a lack of vision that is far from creditable. It is perhaps natural that the stage should dislike the screen, since the picture theaters have drawn from the patronage of the theaters, but to offer sweeping condemnation of the screen merely because it is not the stage is bigotry and nothing more.

It is to be regretted that Mr. Belasco looks so unfavorably upon the pictures, for with some slight practice he could give us some wonderful productions in which the devices of the screen would be used to their fullest extent, but with an intelligence and restraint upon which few of our present directors display in their work. He very probably would offer some new ideas, and assuredly he would show us something well worth while.

It's a Profession.

Photoplay writing is no longer the toy of the multitude. It is a profession, and to seek to win success without due preparation is merely to waste time and postage. More than this, the intrusion of the boob hurts the chances of the novice writers whose work really does deserve attention, but who are classed with the encumbrances merely because their work is not yet known to the editor. One recent inquiry was typical of the many who are now clogging the market. The writer asked as to the disposal of five stories, which, by his own account, had already been to several markets, and wound up by asking the difference between a cut-back and a cut-in. He was unfamiliar with the simplest terms of the art, yet he was seeking to market his imperfect wares. Another demanded an explanation of the market, declaring that something must be wrong with it since his three scripts had not yet been sold. He knew his stories were good; there must be something wrong with the unappreciative market. With people such as this plying the trade, it is not to be wondered if sometimes editors class all unknown contributors as boobs and refuse to have dealings with any of the class.

Cheapness is no longer a factor in the selection of a story. The majority of the companies will gladly pay in four figures for a five-reel idea, but it must be an idea worth that much money and not merely the unformed plot of an ignorant or untrained writer. There is no opening for the untrained man at present—at least, not until he has emerged from his training period, and this period is sometimes overlong for the impatient.

Make It Heart Interest.

While the theaters report that melodrama seems to have the call over musical comedy and comedy productions, it must be remembered that melodrama is largely a form of heart-interest drama, and that the purely heart interest plays, if they make genuine appeal to sentiment, take even better than drama. It is much the same with the screen. We have entered the second stage of the war. Comedy is now in less demand than the plays offering a greater absorption of interest. The heart-interest play makes the strongest appeal, but since there are so few heart-interest plays and so few directors capable of putting these on, the chief demand is for melodrama. But melodrama must have a well-sustained story. It is not sufficient that the story shall wind up with a big scene. There must be appeal in the opening. And the story must be unusually strong, for it is the misfortune of the photoplay that a production must pass through so many hands that there is a very considerable dilution of the author's ideas before the public is reached, for each man who handles the script intrudes his personality into the story. The average produced photoplay is not unlike a bottle of whiskey which passes through half a dozen dishonest hands before it comes into the possession of the eventual owner. Each temporary custodian takes a strong drink and makes up the loss with water, until the bottle arrives at its desination rather more water than whiskey, yet it is whiskey according to the label, and so whiskey it must be.

Notebooks.

Someone wants to know what is the best binding for a notebook for authors—as though that has much to do with it. The best bound notebook is bound in skin—with some hair on the outside if you have luck, and bone is used to bind over instead of press board. In other words, train your memory and recollection to be your note-book. If you want something to cover white paper, get a strong cloth ("iron cloth," we believe it is called), in preference to leather, which scratches and tears, and finally rots. Leather bindings look better at first, but they don't last. It is better to put on less style and get more service, entirely apart from the question of price.

Full Synopses.

Lieutenant R. Ralston Reed, who used to be one of the old guard before he joined the Medical Reserve Corps, puts the question of detailed synopses very neatly when he says, in commenting upon a recent magazine article, "They want a novel to read, if not to use." They want all of the details, then they will go ahead and do something else, in all probability, but give them the novel to read, if they want it, or, at the least, a long story.

Leaders.

Chaplin calls attention to the comparatively few leaders in his newest film. He can be funny without the aid of the leader writer. What might be termed "caption comedies" are becoming almost too common. Get really humorous action and it will not be necessary to build up with humorous explanations.

Suspense.

Even Griffith, in his new production, taxes suspense too far at one point in Hearts of the World. So clever a trickster as he (and like Belasco he is more the artistic trickster than the artist) has failed to realize that suspense, carried too far, becomes first tiresome and then amusing. This applies most directly to the single situation, but it is almost equally applicable to a situation strong in itself, but which is depended upon to yield suspense out of proportion to its value.

Serials.

Announces a proud writer: "I have a serial with no masked characters, clutching hands, mysterious agencies and that sort of rot. It will hold the interest on the strength of the story alone. To whom shall I send the idea?" We would suggest the junkman as the most likely purchaser in these days of scarce paper, for it is upon the mystery that the serial depends to hold the interest from week to week. You cannot hold interest because the lovely heroine is hanging in mid-air at the end of the chapter. It must be something deeper, and the masked character is the favorite device.

Equitable Release Slips.

Under its new management the World is said to be paying off on releases for the picture rights only instead of taking all rights for the one price. Most release slips are unfair to the author, and yet they must be signed if the money is to be forthcoming.

Hurts Your Chances.

It hurts your chances of being read at all to send the continuity along with the synopsis of your story. This may not seem fair, but since it is so do not send the entire lot with a note to the effect that you are also sending the continuity, though you know it is not now customary. Bow to that custom and hold on to the continuity unless you are asked for it.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

The DeVry Portable Motion Picture Projector.

While in Chicago I visited the factory of the DeVry Corporation, where it was my privilege to meet H. A. DeVry, President, and A. E. Gundelach, Sales Manager of the corporation, both of whom have in the past made a very fair imitation of a real talkative clam when it came to sending in information concerning their very excellent portable commercial projector. The DeVry machine was described and illustrated in this Department some years ago, and it is to be hoped that in the future the corporation will keep us better posted with regard to their activities than they have in the past.

The DeVry Portable Projector is contained in a strong, but very light, pressed steel suitcase, seventeen inches square by seven inches deep, covered with imitation leather and lined with asbestos. The compartment containing the motor, the electric wiring and the incandescent source of illumination, is divided from the compartment containing the mechanism and film by an asbestos-lined metal division, the edge of which may be seen in the picture. The source of illumination is a 400-watt Tungsten filament lamp, working through an especially designed optical system consisting of a spherical mirror reflection, placed behind the lamp. The incandescent lamp is what is known as the standard G-30-400 watt bulb. It is about four inches in diameter and its front edge sets almost in contact with a miniature plano convex condenser two inches in diameter. The front side of this condenser sets 1½ inches from the film. The objective lens is a special type made for the DeVry Corporation. This lens consists of three units—two positives and one negative, all cemented together as is shown in the second illustration. This lens gives a sharp definition and a comparatively large opening, thus making available a maximum percentage of the light delivered through the film by the condenser. In other words, this type of projection lens retains sharpness of definition and at the same time minimizes the loss of light due to the spread of the ray beyond the aperture. The lamp itself is contained in a separate, fireproof metal compartment, which has ventilation direct to the outside air. At the bottom of the lamp compartment is the electric motor, which is of the universal type, hence can be used on either alternating or direct current. Behind the motor, not shown in the illustration, is an opening in the case. On the further end of the motor shaft is a small fan which runs 5,700 revolutions per minute, pumping air up through the lamp compartment, thus dissipating the heat generated by the Tungsten filament illuminant. The motor is belted to the mechanism in the usual way, and has speed regulation sufficient to take care of all reasonable requirements, the regulation being accomplished by means of a field rheostat controlled by a knob on the top of the case.

What corresponds to the upper reel and the take-up reel in a standard projector are on one spindle, the outer reel, which is visible in the illustration, being the one corresponding to the upper reel in a standard projector. There is a simple arrangement by means of which take-up tension may be adjusted to any required value. The path of of the film through the machine may be traced in the illustration.

The large knob on top of the case to the right of the handle is the framing device. The knob on the right hand side near the top is the focusing screw.

The electrical connection is made by means of a motor attachment plug on the back of the case, the same being flush with the side of the case. The mechanism is small, compact, sturdily built and very ingeniously arranged. The frame is of pressed steel, all one piece, including the lens holder. What corresponds to the upper and lower sprockets in the standard projector are provided with double idlers, which gives a maximum grip of the film by the sprocket. The tension is similar to that used in standard projectors, being pivoted, so that the tension on either side is always the same. The aperture plate tracks may be easily replaced when worn.

I have witnessed the projection of a very excellent picture by the DeVry machine under adverse conditions of light. I also saw the machine started running with the lamp burning, the case lifted up, turned upside down, sidewise and in every conceivable position, the machine still grinding away projecting a picture alternately on walls, ceiling and floor. The machine appears to me to be thoroughly practical for the uses for which it is intended. It is not a theater machine, nor are the makers seeking to sell it for use in theaters. It is for the use of traveling salesmen, for use in factories, homes, churches, classrooms and work of that kind. It uses a three-wing shutter. My own opinion is that under ordinary lighting conditions, and with a proper screen, the DeVry will deliver a very acceptable picture up to eight feet wide. This size may be expanded under some conditions to as large as ten feet, with good results. The company prides itself on the simplicity of the mechanism, which contains but four gears, all told, and the fact that it is as nearly fool-proof as any mechanism can be made.

For Our Opticians.

John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, writes:

Here is a question which I think would bring in some good dope on the optical system without over-burdening your mail. I am attaching my own conclusions in the premises.

The question is what is the cause and effect of the halo around the condenser image at the shutter position?

My own view is that there are several reasons for the cause. It will be observed that it occurs in varying degree while the film is being run, and in lesser degree when there is no film in the machine.

The cause in general may be ascribed to deflected light rays. That is to say they reach the objective lens in a direction which does not coincide with any point on the condenser. For example, suppose a ray from any point of the condenser surface to strike the edge of the aperture plate. If it be not completely obstructed it is deflected from its original course, and will reach the objective as though it came from a point a considerable distance to one side of the condenser. That this actually does occur to a number of rays may be proven by the following simple experiment: Place a screen in the path of the rays, the exact size of the condenser image (and presumably at the aerial image position.—Ed.). The result will be a dark screen with a border of light like a reversed mourning card, the bright border being the rays reflected from the edge of the aperture plate opening. The reason the rays thus deflected do not confine themselves to the area of the condenser (aerial image.—Ed.) is that because of such deflection they to all intents and purposes emanate from a condenser of much larger diameter than the actuality. The foregoing refers only to rays deflected while there is no film in the machine.

The film itself, however, is a very important factor in deflecting rays of light. In fact in some cases the deflection amounts almost to diffusion, the halo being nearly as bright as the condenser image itself. But all would be well if the revolving shutter could take care of such a wide beam, because the deflected rays, even though they pass through the halo instead of the condenser image, finally reach their correct position on the screen. (Mebby, Friend John, but I'll be Billy-be-gosh-hanged if I see how they do it.—Ed.) Unfortunately, however, these rays reach the screen while the film is moving, thus helping to destroy the definition of the picture, even, in some extreme cases, being strong enough to cause slight travel ghost. This latter would only occur in scenes in which the emulsion causes almost complete diffusion. (Wrong term, John. If there were diffusion there would be no definition. Deflection is the word, I think.—Ed.) There is also another reason for the halo, and one which probably is the worst offender in so far as injury to definition be concerned. I refer now to those rays reflected from the inner surface of the projection lens to the celluloid (back) side of the film, and then back again through the projection lens to the screen. These rays not only help form Mr. Halo, but they pass through the condenser image itself. They carry no definite image, being reflected from a different point upon the film from that through which they first passed. These rays cannot be eliminated, but it is a very simple matter to eliminate the halo by supporting a screen on the lens side of the revolving shutter, and quite close to same, the screen to have an opening of just sufficient size to pass the condenser image. This is preferable to having a small port hole, as the halo rays may be mixed with the regular beam at the port.

I cannot agree with Griffiths that the screen should be located at the revolving shutter plane in all cases, because in only a comparatively few cases are the operators advanced enough to, or able, by reason of mechanical limitations, set their shutters at the plane of the condenser image. In these cases it seems to me the screen should be at the plane of the condenser image. This plane (plane, when used in this sense, means the distance from the lens at which the condenser image is formed) may be determined by projecting the white light to the screen and moving a sheet of black or very dark-colored paper back and forth in the ray until you have a reasonably sharply defined image of the condenser on the paper. I have long advocated the elimination of the halo by stopping down the lens port to the size of the actual beam, and hundreds of operators will remember that when I visited their operating rooms I spoke to them on this point particularly. I think I can see, however, that Griffith's argument is good, and that the plane of the condenser image. This plane (plane, when used in this is not at all impossible that the interposition of a screen, with opening exactly the size of the condenser image, at this point may help materially in sharpening the picture and eliminating tendency to slight travel ghost, though I do not think you need expect anything startling in the latter respect.

Rheostatic Resistance.

Frank J. Keilhock, Kansas City, Kansas, says:

Last time I wrote I was a member of Local Union 170. I now belong to 498, which has been organized, and has about 30 members—100 per cent. strong. Say, Brother Richardson, if a man gets past that Vancouver examination he certainly knows his business. The questions are splendid. One in particular I noticed, viz.: No. 2, under "Electric Branch." Is attached sketch correct for the connection? It is very interesting to me. Local 498 has done its bit toward helping our stricken brothers in Halifax. Good luck to you and to the World. Let the good work go on.

You did well to organize. Hope you men are more progressive than the local across the river in the Big Town. The Kansas City local is about the poorest excuse for an organization I know of anywhere, not even excepting Cincinnati and Memphis. No, brother, your connection is not right. I hope the necessity for telling you so will act as a stimulant to study. And from the connection you made you need to study that particular thing.

Let us examine into the problem named. We have 3 fifty ampere, 110 volt, 2 thirty ampere 110 volt, 3 twenty-five ampere, 110 volt, and 2 fifteen ampere, 110 volt rheostats, all non-adjustable. We are to so connect them, using all the resistances, that we will get approximately 100 amperes from a 220 volt supply. First it is evident that every rheostat must be in series with another rheostat, else it will burn out, the supply being 220 and the rheostats all 110 volt. To do the problem right we would have to take into consideration the fact that the rheostats are presumed to work in series with a projection arc, hence their actual resistance would be such as would deliver the stated amperage working under that condition. See Handbook, pages 29, 30, 31, 32 and 33. But for convenience we will disregard this. Voltage divided by amperes gives ohms, hence a 50 ampere, 110 volt rheostat has (110 divided by 50) 2.2 ohms resistance. The other rheostats have respectively 3.66, 4.4 and 7.33 ohms each. Now, voltage divided by ohms gives amperes. If one 50 ampere rheostat has 2.2 ohms, then three in series will have 6.6 ohms, and 220 volts divided by 6.6 gives 33.33 amperes as the delivery of the three in series. The two 30 ampere ones in series will give us 30 amperes, the two 15s will give 15, and the three 25s will give a little more than 16, so that if we now hitch these various series connections in multiple with each other we shall get about 95 amperes. Possibly if we figured it as it should be figured, first subtracting the estimated arc voltage, we would have the 100. I have only intended to show you how it is done. My best to the men of 498. Glad to know you did your duty by Halifax.

One of the Finest.

New York City prides herself on having the best there is, but the new T. & D. theater in Oakland gives Gotham a close run for her money. The auditorium is a beauty. Three thousand four hundred of Oakland's citizens may find comfortable seats therein. "Behind the scenes" a 20-h.p. exhaust and a 25-h.p. intake fan controlled by a quarter-h.p. motor-driven Johnson temperature regulating system, all of which attends to the items of ventilation and temperature. An elaborate vacuum cleaning system removes dust and dirt. A twenty-foot picture is projected a distance of 140 feet by two Powers 6-B machines, taking current from a 6¾-k.w. Westinghouse motion picture motor-generator set. There is a Bausch and Lomb dissolver, three Albert speed controls, a spot lamp, flood lamp, a motor-driven rewind and a Westinghouse voltage regulator. A glimpse of the projection current rectifying plant is shown in the illustration.

A Warning.

John Kortiff, New York City, writes:

A few words to warn you not to be too quick to accept a new thing coming on the market; for instance, the new $2,000.00 projector described in Feb. 23 issue. For myself, I cannot see how a double machine (two heads and one lamphouse) can ever replace the two-machine installation. Mr. Robin or the Standard Company will have to show me how even a competent operator could fool the projection master, F. H. Richardson, or even any up-to-date projectionist when running a multiple-reel subject. Most emphatically it would be impossible to switch from one head to the other without a noticeable interval of darkness on the screen, and that won't do at all. Another thing: Does friend Robin expect to run his projector with a Mazda lamp? If not, then how in the name of common sense can he "get by" when projecting say a six-reel subject. Does he claim that he can project six reels without renewing carbons?

As to using a 5.5 to 1 intermittent, I give Mr. Robin full credit for being a progressive, up-to-date man. Certainly this is far better than a slower movement and a step in the correct general direction. It is utter foolishness to set the few added dollars necessary for repairs where the faster movement is used against the immense saving in light and possible lessening of flicker. There is no comparison, and Mr. Porter of the Simplex should know that. (I think you have misunderstood Mr. Porter. He favors the faster movement, but has hesitated because of the howl theater managers would put up when the movement did recommends same set with their White a. c. Special.—Ed.), but only for a. c. Well, it may work with their a. c. carbons, but in general anyone who recommends jack-knife set is full of prunes. I have tried it very thoroughly and have disyourself, but you must remember that exhibitors are likely to condemn the machine itself because of the comparatively slight added cost of maintenance, not understanding that they gain ten times the added cost in additional light and improved screen results.—Ed.) I would suggest that you recommend to not last as long as usual. Mr. Porter is of the same opinion as Mr. Robin the use of a long shutter spindle. A few inches of metal won't cost much and may help wonderfully in some cases. I see the Speer company recommends the jack-knife set for their new Alterno carbons (Only a modified jack-knife, lower vertical and upper angled out to meet it. National carded it.

And so did I when I was operating. The new carbons give a much longer arc, however, and it is possible that Speer and the National are right. I have not yet determined that point to my entire satisfaction. As to the speed of intermittent, why I thoroughly agree with you, except that I would like to see all intermittents six to one. As to Mr. Robin's double machine, I have already called the weak points you name to his attention. The Robin will, however, be made both double and single, and I imagine most sales will be of the single machine. With Robin's shutter possibilities I think the long shutter shaft will not be so necessary. He has several possible shutter positions and one is a once-and-a-half-around to each picture, which is the same as the Edison Super was and the Baird is. It gives a high shutter speed and thus reduces the time lost in cutting across the light the dissolving point of the light ray. With the once and a half around ray, which is the principal and only reason for setting the shutter at to the picture shutter the effect is practically the same, or maybe even better than is possible with the slower shutter set at the dissolving point.

Projectionist vs. Operator.

It is always hard to overturn an established custom. The man who runs a projection machine has, since the beginning, for some to me un-understandable reason, been called an "operator." Possibly it is because he operates a projector, in which case a locomotive engineer is also an "operator," because he operates a locomotive, and the street car motorman is an operator because he "operates" a motor. As a matter of fact the term operator is distinctly confusing. If a man says to a stranger: "I am an operator," the man is equally entitled to believe he is a telegrapher, motion picture machine operator, operator on vests, operator on pants or any other one of several other callings in life which come under the title "operator."

For these reasons this department objects to the term as applied to the man who projects motion pictures. It is not distinctive. It is not in the least degree descriptive. It is in no degree dignified. It is not appropriate.

What then would we suggest, do you ask? Well, in seeking for a name we shoul dconsider only such as most nearly conform to the above named requirements. It should be distinctive, descriptive, appropriate and dignified. Is such a name available for our purpose? I think so! "Projectionist" measurably fulfills them all. Certainly it is both distinctive and descriptive. Certainly it is appropriate, and to my mind it is at least very much more dignified than the nondescript

This department does not expect to overturn the custom of years. That would be too much to hope for. It does, however, insofar as itself be concerned, propose to adopt the term projectionist in lieu of operator in future. That is our privilege, and we intend to exercise it. We have faith to believe, also, that some of the more advanced unions will see the wisdom of the proposed change and follow us in adopting it. In considering the matter let me suggest to you that there really is considerable in a name. The man who has pride in his profession and wishes to dignify it as such, does not care to be classed indiscriminately with half a dozen other crafts or professions. He wants to be known for exactly what he is, and the man who projects pictures is a PROJECTIONIST.

Current Rectification.

Dawson Springs Auditorium Company, Dawson Springs, Kentucky, writes:

> Our current is being changed from d. c. to a. c., and we would like to know the best equipment necessary for the change. We now have two Power's 6-A projectors, one motor and one hand driven, eight large ceiling fans, ten wall, and one suction fan. Your advice will be highly appreciated.

Your data is not sufficient to enable one to reply with certainty. You should have given cycle of current and price per K. W.; particularly the latter. If your rate per K. W. is low you might be justified in installing a motor-driven 110 volt generator of sufficient capacity to carry all incandescents, fans and other motors, and both projection arcs during the period of change-over. This plan has the advantage that it allows you to retain your present motors (presumably 110 volt d. c.) and to use 110 volt incandescent lamps for lighting, which are standard and preferable to low voltage lamps. On the other hand you will by this plan be obliged to waste wattage equal to projection arc amperage multiplied by about 60. In other words you must waste fully half the energy generated for your projection arc. This is due to the fact that the projection arc will only operate at its best at between 48 and 60 volts, and the line voltage must be broken down to that value through resistance—waste. This will not be so serious if current cost is low, but very serious if it is high. You might also proceed as follows: Get a motor-driven 110-volt generator for incandescent lamps and motors. Then get one of the various motor generator sets made especially for handling projection arcs. Your information is, however, too meager to allow me to give an authorative opinion.

A Sensible Course.

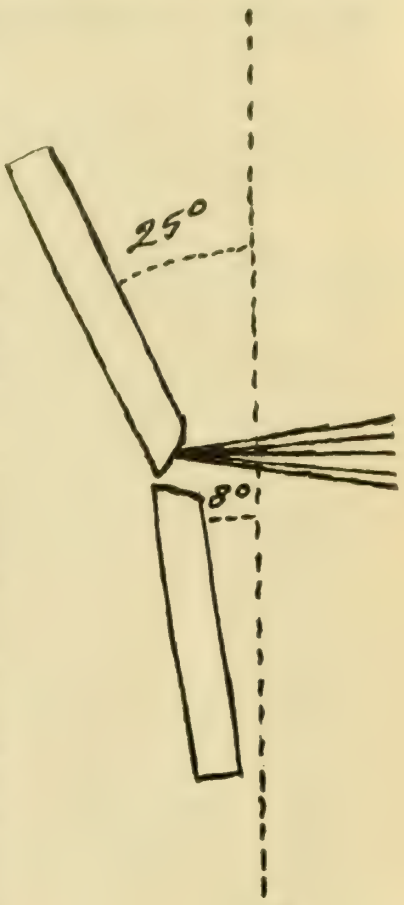
Recently the National Lamp Works started the preparation of a new pamphlet designed to be descriptive of the Mazda lamp for projection. This bulletin, among other things, set forth the possibilities of the lamp for replacement of the electric arc. Usually companies go ahead, get out their bulletins on such things as this, in which their statements may come into direct conflict with the views of this department, only sending us a copy thereof when it is all finished, and then get quite angry when we take issue with their statements as set forth in their new and I'm-very-proud-of-you bulletin baby.

The National, however, exercised common sense, and mailed us a set of proof sheets, asking for comments thereon. Now this did and does not mean that the National is bound to, or will, accept any suggestion or suggestions I may make. But it does mean that the company will know what my views are, and why they are so, and know them in time to make suggested changes if in its wisdom it seems good so to do. If other companies took similar action under similar circumstances it is quite possible there would be less criticism, because there might be less ground for it. This department does NOT like to criticise. It only does so when forced to in line of its duty.

Jack Knife Set.

V. W. Whitehunch, Mare Island, California, of the U. S. N., writes:

> Have read with much interest your various articles on the jack knife carbon set, particularly as applied to the new Speer Alterno. Have not as yet used that carbon, but have and am now using the modified jack knife set. Am using ¾" cored National carbons, pulling 70 amperes. Have the upper set 25° and lower 80° from perpendicular. Sketch illustrates very closely the shape and position of crater. It, I might add, produces a remarkable amount of light. Have been at the projection game five years, but have not heretofore written the department. Perhaps the condenser combination I am using would be of interest: 7½ and 9" plano convex and 7½" E. F. projection lens. 101' 8" projection distance. Get perfectly clean field. Will await comments with much interest.



I have never condemned the modified jack knife set except to say that the straight D. C. set is better, though harder to handle. Granting a higher c. p. for the jack knife, or modified jack knife set, I hold it to be utterly impracticable, not to say impossible, to maintain that c. p. at even value as applied to the light received by the condenser. Taking your own set, for instance, as your carbons burn away you must advance the upper as well as feed it. That is inevitable and it is expecting too much, I think, to believe the advancements will always be such as will maintain the crater in fixed position with relation to the condenser. But with the new carbons it may be that the modified set, such as you use, may nevertheless be best. That seems to be the general consensus of opinion, and who am I that I should go against the general experience on a thing I have not myself thoroughly tried out? As to your condensers, why, I cannot agree. I have no chart for 70 amperes, but the proper condensers for 60 (plano convex) is two 6½", with 19½" from center of condenser to film. At a guess I would say your present combination is as close to right as you can get, considering machine limitations. I think, however, an 8½ in front and about 23" from center of condenser to film would be somewhat better. Your arc is a little too far from the condenser, I think, and you know light strength from an open light source decreases inversely with square of distance.

And right here let me remark that the idea that good projection light cannot be had from a. c. is all wrong. Given sufficient amperage it is quite possible to get equal light volume with d. c.; also the a. c. light is ordinarily more penetrating than that from d. c., but has a somewhat harsher tone value. With the new a. c. carbons possibly this latter fault will be modified, and if noise can be eliminated a. c. might become available for projection on a plain but little below that of d. c.

Handy Formulas for Motion Picture Cameramen.

Although there exists a certain prejudice against the use of the same developer for Negative and Positives, the following is capable of yielding most satisfactory results for both, and is recommended for use where the numbers of developing tanks is limited:

Metol-Hydroquinone Developer.

Water	180 gals.
Hydroquinone	8 lbs.
Sodium Sulphite (Anhydrous)	40 lbs.
Sodium Carbonate	22 lbs.
Potassium Bromide	1½ lbs.
Potassium Meta-bisulphite	2 lbs.
Metol	8 ozs.
Citric Acid	10 ozs.

The following is slower in action:

Water	160 gals.
Hydroquinone	8 lbs.
Sodium Sulphite (Anhydrous)	25 lbs.
Sodium Carbonate	25 lbs.
Potassium Bromide	1 lb.

Care must be taken to have temperature 65 degrees to 70 degrees fahr., as hydroquinone does not work well below 65 degrees and is too contrasty at about 70 degrees.

Edinol—Hydro Developer.

For Negatives Only.

Water	160 gals.
Bayer's Acetone Sulphite	6 lbs.
Sodium Sulphite (Anhydrone)	24 lbs.
Bayer's Edinol	2½ lbs.
Hydroquinone	1½ lbs.
Potassium Carbonate	40 lbs.
Potassium Bromide	1 lb.

Note—This is an excellent developer for Negatives, Films or Plates, but not suitable for Positives.

Not the least important factor employed in the manipulation of Motion Picture Films is the Fixing Bath.

While the ordinary plain "Hypo" seems all that may be desired, yet there are times and conditions where it fails, particularly in hot weather. The following mixture (for all times) on account of its unfailing certainty even under the most trying conditions is recommended:

Mix in the Order Given.

Water	250 gals.
Hyposulphite of Soda (Crystals)	400 lbs.
Sodium Sulphite (Anhydrous)	25 lbs.
Acetic Acid No. 8 (one-half carboy)	50 lbs.
Powdered Alum	1½ lbs.

Note—Remove "Scum" before using. Where mixing facilitates permit it is better to mix the last three ingredients separately in 10 gallons of the water and decant or filter into the hypo after settling.

Toning Prints.

Where Brown or Sepia Tones are desired, care should be taken to somewhat under-develop the fully-timed print. This treatment will yield a Black and White picture which (viewed as such) will appear lacking in vigor and contrast; but the subsequent toning will produce the desired strength without crowding out the detail in shadows, which would be the case were the print too strong, or normal strength, in the beginning. In other words, no toning can be accomplished without intensifying the image to a certain extent.

After original development and fixing prints must be thoroughly washed to remove "Hypo" before immersing them in the Bleaching Bath.

Water	60 gals.
Potassium Ferricyanide (Red Prussiate)	12 lbs.
Ammonium Bromide	12 lbs.

Prints should remain in this solution until the film assumes an even cream-color showing no signs of greyness in the deepest shadows, after which they should be washed (for a few minutes) before being transferred to the toning solution.

Brown Toning.

Water	60 gals
Pure Sodium Sulphide	5 lbs.

Leave prints in this until all trace of the bleach has disappeared from the back of film, after which the prints (and racks) require a prolonged washing to eliminate the Sodium Sulphide, as this chemical proves injurious to everything with which it comes in contact.

Very pleasing effects on sea-scapes and night scenes may be obtained by using the following formula for Blue-Green Tones.

Water	60 gals.
Citric Acid (crystals)	6 lbs.
Potassium Ferricyanide	1 lb.
Iron and Ammonium Citrate (Brown scales)	1 lb.

No previous bleaching is required for the above, but care should be taken to have prints slightly under strength before subjecting them to this treatment, as it intensifies considerably, especially if left too long in the solution. The blue color becomes more pronounced in the final washing.

Bleaching Solution for Blue and Green Tones.

Bleach.

Water	10 gals.
Ferricyanide of Potassium	4 lbs. 4 oz.
Ammonia, .880	13 oz.

After bleaching, wash, then tone blue in

Water	4 gals.
Ferric Chloride	8 oz.
Hydrochloric Acid	8 oz.

If Green Tones are desired, immerse the Bleached Print in the following:

Water	4 gals.
Ferric Chloride	3 oz.
Vanadium Chloride	3 oz.
Ammonium Chloride	6 oz.
Hydrochloric Acid	8 oz.

No bleaching required for the following:

Red Tones.

Water	4 gals.
Ammonium Carbonate	6 lbs.
Sulphate of copper	8 oz.
Potassium Ferricyanide	16 oz.

Without Bleaching the following may be used for Grass Green Tones.

Water	3 gals.
Vanadium Chloride	2 oz.
Ferric Chloride	1 oz.
Ferric Oxalate	1 oz.
Potassium Ferricyanide	2 oz.
Oxalic Acid (Saturated Solution)	1 gal.

An almost endless variety of effects may be produced by combining some of the foregoing Tones with the various Tints used in film work (the mixing of the latter should always be done according to the formula given by the dealers in these film dyes).

By bearing in mind that the toning process effects only the deposit of silver (of which the picture is composed) leaving the lightest parts of the image clear; the tint chosen will appear (in all its purity) only in such clear position, while it changes the tone by interposing itself upon the color already produced by toning thus:

By immersing a Blue Toned print in a Yellow Tint, the Blue is converted into Green with Yellow high lights if plunged into Rose or Red. A purple is procured by lighted portions Rose or Red and so on.

"Cash With a Kodak."

"Cash With a Kodak, or Lessons in Magazine Photography," is the title of a very practical booklet that is number ten of the National Efficiency Library. Twelve chapters or "lessons" give many practical and profitable plans for increasing the photographer's income, valuable both to the amateur and the professional. This booklet is not a bulky volume, but we know of one photographer, one of our subscribers, who has made a nice little income during the past year through a plan almost identical with one of the least promising of those given. Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON.

Notice.

QUESTIONS regarding music, addressed to this department, will receive a carbon copy of the department's reply by mail, when 4 cents are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matter which cannot be answered in this column $1.00.

What About Summer Music?

THIS summer should make little difference in the box office receipts of picture theaters throughout the country. What traveling is done must be confined to America or Canada, as the facilities for getting elsewhere are limited. The drain upon the pocketbook of the general public, made by Liberty Loan subscriptions, Red Cross campaigns, Y. M. C. A. funds and Boy Scouts' movement would seem to indicate that the majority of us will have to be contented by a vacation at home this year. Another reason why people will not probably go away is their deep sense of patriotism. Is it right that we should indulge ourselves when every dollar is needed to crush out the menace of autocracy? By these deductions we can safely conclude that people will remain close to their homes this summer or, if outings be arranged, they will be of short duration.

Now, Mr. Exhibitor, if the people of your neighborhood, town or city stay at home what are you going to offer them? Are you inclined to follow the practices of past years and cut down or throw out your orchestra about June 1st on the plea of expecting poor business?

We have never quite understood this prevalent procedure because the theater is the loser in every instance. At a glance it would seem that the exhibitor saves money by releasing his orchestra and cutting his salary list, but that very action brands his house in no uncertain terms of cheapness from the standpoint of the regular patrons.

He lowers the standard of his performance, but does not think of lowering his admission fee. A patron having been regular in attendance during the winter finds that his faithfulness in coming during the time of crowded houses is rewarded by a mediocre show at the same price, when he can obtain a seat without doing violence. Naturally that one will kick and go elsewhere. When autumn comes again he has been weaned away and the theater knows his presence no more.

In talking over this matter with a typical movie man we were informed that the above argument was truly sound, but that nearly everybody of any consequence in his neighborhood went away in the summer and the few that remained could not make any material difference in his cash box if they stayed away entirely.

"Then why not close your theater altogether?" he was asked.

"I can't do that because my opposition house keeps open and, besides, my film bookings would not permit of it," he replied, and proceeding, added "My patrons do not expect as good a show in the summer as they do in the winter. They know what I'm up against and they fully understand that I am not in business for my health."

"Then why not run cheaper pictures?" we queried.

"No, I can't do that because my contracts with the producers give me the sole right to exhibit their output in this district. I am forced through competition to play the best pictures I can get or quit business."

"Do you realize the vital importance of good and suitable music in presenting your pictures?" we asked.

"Well, we get good music from our lady pianist in the summer months. She has been with us for years, and if the theater up the street hadn't put in an orchestra we never would have inaugurated such a bill of expense."

"Does your competitor dismiss his orchestra for the summer months?"

"He sure does. If he didn't we would have to keep ours and lose more money than we do. Orchestras cannot be used in the lean months. The overhead has to be cut somewhere and the music department is the least essential."

Now that you have reached this paragraph we ask you to contain your enthusiasm for the words of wisdom you expect to hear from us and start rereading, beginning at the paragraph "In talking over this matter, etc."

You have reread it—Fine. Now there is only one conclusion to be drawn. This exhibitor doesn't give three hoots for his patrons, winter or summer. He tries to hog the best pictures to draw patronage from the other fellow. In fact he is continually scheming to "get by" with a show at the least possible expense, using his competitor as a criterion, and charge as much as he can, again using his competitor as a criterion. He has no individuality, no initiative, no sense of showmanship, and no humanity.

The best theaters have established a standard performance (due care being given to the music) and conscientiously endeavor to maintain it through the year. They become known for their excellent programs. The public know what to expect and are never disappointed. No doubt the theater loses money in the summer, but the added attendance during the winter months make up for it. Nothing can be gained by losing patrons in the summer whose places are taken by new faces in the winter. Why not keep the old and gain the new?

As we pause to glance over what we have written we inadvertently notice that we are supposed to write about summer music and must needs get to the subject.

Let this summer be epochal for the musician everywhere. Make his hours a bit easier during the hot weather. Get together with him and draft up some plans for the winter. Try out some innovations in the music line. The pit is very hot for the players; why not place them on the stage if you have one. By placing them out of sight you can find out whether your patrons like concealed music or not. The orchestra will be more comfortable and the newness of the idea may commend itself to the audience.

A local singer frequently adds to the drawing power of a theater and, as they are not expensive, it might not be a bad plan to try one out on the summer audience. If she's a hit you can broaden out with better talent as the season progresses.

This year will be unusually good and if anything the orchestra should be enlarged. Why not try the scheme of open-air concerts played by your orchestra? At a given hour each evening, on the green adjacent to your theater, have your orchestra render a big overture, a light opera selection and a popular song, new march, or bright waltz. The entire program should not exceed 30 minutes and could be given as the opening to your performance, which would begin in the theater immediately after the open-air concert.

This advantage of getting the people out can be readily seen, and the publicity angle cannot be overlooked.

By no means cut your orchestra this year. People must be amused, and as the legitimate shows are about to close they will flock to the places of picture amusement. Do your bit by keeping up the depressed spirits of a sorrowing nation.

Music at the Rivoli.

During the week of May 6-13 we dropped into the Rivoli to see what new idea Mr. Rothapfel had started in the line of music. We found the gentleman away and the music suffering for his absence. There is no gainsaying the fact that when "Roxy" is on the job things go with a verve that is not found when he is away.

The overture conducted by Mr. Rapee got nowhere. The motifs were not sharply brought out, and in many instances the music became conglomerate. We cannot blame the orchestra for this, nor the composer. The attacks were poor, but no doubt the heat of the evening had its depressing effect, and we prefer to censure the weather.

The music for the educational, showing the glacier effects in the Rocky Mountains was well selected and beautifully played. The people about us seemed to really enjoy it from every standpoint and their feelings accurately reflected ours. Nothing is so pleasing as a scenic played well and appropriately. The difficulty in fitting this class of picture lies only in the fact that there is little pastorale music to be obtained without considerable research work on the part of the musical director.

The pictorial review received the usual good setting. The Japanese number and the interwoven Allies theme were the outstanding good points, but some one's foot slipped somewhere when a march was played while the "Jackies" were dancing a two-step on the Coney Island beach. The excuse, if there could be such a thing, would be that it was too short a scene to bother with. The fact remains that the playing of a march made the scene ridiculous and caused a ripple of smiles to light the faces of the audience.

The feature, "Mile-a-Minute Kendall," required nothing but light music and it would seem that there could not be any error in the fitting of this light picture, yet after the explosion in the first reel the orchestra played a hurry. It is true that the sound of the explosion threw the household into violent agitation for about three seconds, but the dramatic aspect of the situation seemed paramount. It is not the big situations that need the care in choosing music, because they almost take care of themselves; it is the little detailed effects that require judgment and test the leader's ability. The use of "We Won't Go Home Until Morning" showed bad taste. The dominant emotion of the scene where the mother had waited up all night for her wayward son bespoke maternal affection of the deepest kind and her theme could have been repeated here most effectively. In passing we might say that the use of Romberg's "Mother" proved a worthy theme.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

DAGGER WOMAN, THE (Pathe—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante and Russian. Suggest Chanson Triste—Tschaikowski, Moment Musical Moszkowski, of Nocturne—Krizyzanowski.

Russian music must be used throughout this picture, as the action takes place entirely in Russia. Dramatic music with a few light intermezzos will be useful. La Boheme might be used successfully if led up to by a number not too pronounced in its Russian characteristics. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Pathe exchange.

LITTLE RUNAWAY, THE (Vitagraph—Five Reels)—Theme—Valse Lento. Suggest Kathleen—Berg, Destiny—Baynes, or Heartstrings—Veesey.

The atmosphere is distinctly Irish. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Vitagraph exchange.

MASKS AND FACES (World—Six Reels—Theme—Andante and dignified. Suggest Dialogue—Meyer-Helmard, Extase—Ganne, or Meditation—Delmas.

The play takes place in the Eighteenth Century and must be flavored strongly with old English airs. Guard against the use of a popular hit number of the present day, and if music of today must be played choose something comparatively unknown. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World exchange.

NINE-TENTHS OF THE LAW (Atlantic Distributing Co.—Six Reels)—Theme unnecessary.

The picture is big in dramatic value and should call forth wonderful music. Note the pastorale effects needed in the fourth reel and the fight a little later. Cue sheets can be obtained.

PAYING HIS DEBTS (Triangle—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest Basket of Roses—Allers, Intermezzo—Heurter, or Legend—Friml.

This is a Western story requiring the usual hurrys for hold-ups, agitatos for ambush and misteriosos for mysteries. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Triangle exchange.

PLAYING THE GAME (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest Serenade—Pierne, or Along Came Another Little Girl, from Jack o' Lantern—Caryll.

The music is light throughout and due care should be used in marking the change from Eastern to Western life. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

REASON WHY, THE (Select—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest Russian Romance—Friml, To a Star—Leonard, or Hearts Desire—Losey.

The atmosphere is English and the story dramatic. Big stuff needed all the way through. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Select exchange.

SEAL OF SILENCE, THE (Vitagraph—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest Romance—Mericanto; Amaranthus—Gilder, or Serenade—Karganoff.

A society drama with a punch to it. The story runs smoothly and needs only a fair selection of dramatic stuff. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Vitagraph exchange.

VENGEANCE (World—Six Reels)—Theme—Moderato and Oriental. Suggest Oriental Love Song—Kiefert, or Less Than the Dust—Woodforde Findin.

The picture deals with the Orient and the atmosphere is distinctly East Indian with the exception of a few hundred feet taken in England. This gives you a big chance for Oriental music and the suggested list may help to add to your library:

Almeh ..... Armand
An Egyptian Love Dance ..... Pryor-Klugescheid
Egyptian Midnight Parade ..... Isenman
Iron Cross, The ..... Isenman
In the Sudan ..... Sebech-Roth
March of the Janizaries ..... Hosmer
Marche Orientale ..... Tavan-Kretschmer
Berceuse ..... Delacour-Kretschmer
Mystic Shrine ..... Cameron
Oriental March ..... Bendix
Salome Dance ..... Tobani
Syrian Patrol ..... Aronson
Shepherd's Serenade, The ..... Laurendeau
Turkish Patrol ..... Michaelis
Brightest Days ..... Michaelis-Rietzel
Uarda ..... Tugginer-Laurendeau
Les Orientales ..... Gauwin
Indian Love Lyrics ..... Woodforde-Finden
In a Persian Garden ..... Lehmann
Among the Arabs ..... Langey
Arabian Nights ..... Mildenberg
Arabian Serenade ..... Langey
Arab's Dream, The ..... Kendall
Bacchanale ..... Saint Saens
Callirhoe ..... Chaminade
Dance of Egyptian Maidens ..... Shelley
Danse Orientale ..... Lubomirsky
Egyptian Dance ..... Friml

ZONGAR (Physical Culture Plays, Inc.—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest Eleanor—Deppon, Roses and Memories—Spector, or "Serenade—Leander.

This is a strong dramatic situation in which you will require misteriosos, dramatic agitatos, hurrys and many dramatic tension numbers. The drummer should watch for dog barking, shots, fore, automobile and aeroplane effects. Cue sheets can be obtained.

Leaders' Service Bureau.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. Does the title, "The Lost Chord," imply that there is something musically "lost" or incorrect in the composition?

A. By no means. There is a story in connection with this song, in which it is alleged that Sir Arthur Sullivan, while seated at the organ improving, struck a chord wonderfully beautiful. In his enthusiasm of development he proceeded, believing that he would remember the chord, but found on attempting it that he had lost it entirely. For weeks he searched the keys for this chord and was unable to find it.

Q. The "younger set" in my town have been pretty good patrons of my theater. Occasionally they give a dance and want to use my orchestra at nine o'clock. My closing time is ten-thirty, and because I have refused to let my orchestra off ahead of time they have boycotted my house. What would you suggest doing?

A. Stick to your policy. The man who comes in at nine-thirty and expects to hear the music is entitled to get what he pays for. A little firmness and a good show will bring the young folks back.

Q. Do you consider a harmonium necessary when I have an organ and a piano?

A. No, because you have all the excellent qualities of the harmonium in the organ, besides having a better solo instrument.

Q. Where can I buy some good silk E violin strings. The ones I've been getting recently have been simply rotten. What is your opinion of a wire E string?

A. Try G. Schirmer, Inc., Three West Forty-third street, New York City. Wire E strings are not good for solo playing but hold up well under a grind.

Q. I play 'cello; would I have much difficulty in learning to play cello-banjo?

A. It depends entirely upon you; if you are apt you will not have much trouble. Why do you want to handle a banjo when you can play cello?

Q. Is there a published score for "Lest We Forget," and where can I get it?

A. There is not, but the original mss. score can be obtained from the Rita Jolivat Film Co., 220 West Forty-second street, New York City.

Q.—"I want to better my position as a leader. What is the best way to go about it?"

A.—"Send us full particulars regarding your qualifications, your past experience, stating what salary you want and any preference you may have, and we will try to find the vacancy for you. There is no charge for this service, unless you desire an answer to your letter, when four cents should be sent to cover postage."

Q. I am the leader in a fair-sized town and we play the best pictures that are procurable. My boss is an independent, booking wherever he finds the best drawing cards. His usual buy is from a state's right agency. Some of his pictures are direct from New York, after a Broadway run, and I can, after great trouble, procure scores for my orchestra to play, others have cue sheets, while some have no musical suggestions whatever. My position here is a good one with the exception of the tremendous amount of hunting that I am forced to do in order to get some idea of what to play for our shows. What can you suggest to help me?

A. My dear brother, you are contending with the same conditions that prevail all over the country. Producers, especially independent producers, are most careless regarding the needs of the musician. You can do nothing better than you have been doing, but if you will mail us a list of your future releases we can tell you what provision has been made for music on each release. If you will pay the postage incidental to getting them to you we will be glad to see that you are supplied with musical suggestions on each, at the earliest possible moment.

Q. I see so many references to "Prometheus" music. Who is the composer and what character is it?

A. To answer your last question first, we would say that the music given this title is usually somewhat dramatic. The "Prometheus" by Beethoven is very dramatic, while that of Lizst holds a lighter vein. There have been other composers who have attempted "Prometheus" also. If you need it for pictures we would advise the two mentioned as more adaptable to your needs.

Q. What instrumentation would you suggest for an airdome picture place?

A. Piano, Violin Conductor, First Violin, Flute, Clarinet, Cornet, Trombone, Drums, 'Cello, Bass, Violins, Second Violins, Viola, Horns, Second Cornet, Second Clarinet, Oboe, Basson and Harp in the order named. If the size of your orchestra desired be only five instruments, take the first four and add Drums; if it be seven or more, take them in order as arranged above.

Proposed Amendment of Censor Ordinance

If Passed It Will Remove Second Deputy Funkhouser from the Chicago Censor Board.

AT a meeting of the Chicago Council held Monday afternoon, May 6, Alderman George M. Maypole, a member of the judiciary committee, introduced an amendment to the present censorship ordinance, which in substance provides:

1. That the entire power of censorship shall be given to the present board.
2. That it takes away all power from the second deputy superintendent of police over the censorship of motion pictures.
3. That a picture may be rejected only by a majority vote of the board.
4. That if a picture is rejected by the board and subsequently a judgment in mandamus is entered by a court, it may be immediately exhibited after such court order. That is, the city would no longer have the right to hold up the exhibition of a picture while the case was pending in the Appellate Court.

At this time it will be instructive to state that when the original censorship ordinance was passed in 1911 it simply prohibited pictures to be shown which were obscene, immoral, etc., but it did not provide for a board of reviewers.

When the police reorganization ordinance was passed in 1914 it provided for a second deputy's office, and among his duties was the censorship of pictures. At the same time the censorship ordinance was amended and Major Funkhouser was made second deputy. He went to the finance committee and asked for an appropriation which would provide for a certain number of men and women to review pictures, as it was impossible for him to review all of them. This collection of men and women has never been constituted as a censor board under an ordinance, and they have simply reviewed pictures and submitted a report to the major, who has disregarded such reports when they did not meet with his personal opinion or judgment.

Alderman Maypole is of the opinion that the amendment will be reported favorably to the city council for passage, and it is the intention to dispose of the amendment prior to the summer vacation of the city council, which will take place some time in July.

The ordinance as amended by Alderman Maypole reads as follows:

Section 1. Sections 1626 and 1627 of the Chicago code of 1911 are hereby amended to read as follows:

Section 1626. The censor of moving pictures in charge and the censors of moving pictures now employed in the department of police shall constitute a board of censors, and shall be charged with the city of censoring moving pictures. Before any permit, as provided in Section 1625, is granted an application in writing shall be made therefor, and the films, plates, rolls and other like apparatus by or from which such picture or series of pictures are produced, or the picture or series of pictures itself is shown or exhibited, shall be deposited with said board of censors together with said application. The said board of censors shall inspect such plates, films, rolls or other like apparatus or the said picture or series of pictures, and shall find whether or not such picture or series of pictures comes within the prohibitory provisions of Section 1627. If a majority of said board decide that such picture or series of pictures is in violation of the prohibitory provisions of Section 1627, they shall so find in writing, specifying the portions of the said picture or series of pictures which are within the prohibitory provisions of said Section 1627. It shall thereupon be the duty of the general superintendent of police to refuse such permit in writing, giving the applicant a copy of the finding of said board of censors; otherwise it shall be his duty to grant such permit. The board of censors shall make its finding, and the general superintendent of police shall grant or refuse such permit within three days after application has been made.

Section 1627. No permit shall be granted for the showing or exhibition of any picture or series of pictures that is immoral or obscene, portrays riotous, disorderly or other unlawful scenes, or has a tendency to disturb the public peace. Provided that if in case of a refusal of a permit the applicant should have the question of fact whether or not the picture or series of pictures is immoral or obscene, portrays riotous, disorderly or other unlawful scenes, or has a tendency to disturb the public peace tried by a court of competent jurisdiction and the trial court upon final hearing finds that the picture or series of pictures does not come within the prohibitory provisions of this ordinance the general superintendent of police shall forthwith issue such permit.

Section 2. An ordinance passed July 2, 1914, amending Section 1627, providing for the issuance of special permits, and that portion of Section 1914 of the Chicago code of 1911, as amended December 30, 1912, making it the duty of the second deputy superintendent of police to censor moving pictures are hereby repealed.

American Still Releases Through Mutual.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., in an interview has stated that his organization has no connection with the Mutual Film Corporation save as the distributing medium for its product, and that the releases of American productions will continue to be made through Mutual. Mr. Hutchinson will soon leave for New York on a short business trip.

For Third Liberty Loan, $842,000.

When Peter J. Schaefer started out to work on the Third Liberty Loan Drive he had a quota of $500,000 to meet, this amount having been fixed for the persons engaged in amusements of all kinds in Chicago. The grand total reached $842,000, and of this sum $300,000 was secured by the Woman's State Relief Committee, of which Mrs. Fifield is chairman.

The women on this committee include many who are or have been prominent in theatrical circles. Among them are Anabell Whitford, Mrs. Mort Singer, Mabel McCane, Mrs. Harry Spingold, Mrs. Harry Powers and Mrs. Sam Levine. Too much praise can scarcely be given these patriotic women for the fine ardor and persistence shown throughout the entire drive period.

Mr. Schaefer was optimistic from the very outset, and predicted that the three-quarter million mark would be reached. The final amount would have been much larger—in fact would have gone over the million mark—had several large distributors and producers in Chicago sent in their subscriptions to Mr. Schaefer, instead of subscribing through other channels.

"The Blue Bird" at Orchestra Hall.

Paramount's Orchestra Hall season for Artcraft productions opened Monday evening, May 6, with the presentation of "The Blue Bird," adapted from the poetic story of Maurice Maeterlinck. The occasion was marked by a splendid attendance of Chicago's foremost citizens, the vast auditorium and all the boxes being filled by a delighted gathering.

The varied and beautiful fairy spectacles woven into the story of the search for the bluebird which confers lasting happiness on him or her who finds it keep the spectator in sweet oblivion of mortal surroundings, and time itself fails to find the tiniest nook amid the wondrous scenes through which the little brother and sister wander. It is really a dream of childhood, blissful and awesome at times, this pictured story of Maeterlinck's fairy fancy.

The accompanying music by the symphony orchestra, under Arthur Dunham's leadership, is in complete harmony with the scenes of the production and the action of the story. Indeed, at times, its influence was so sweet and commanding that one's spirit seemed to be borne on the waves of rapturous sound into the realms of the strange spirits that peopled the screen.

Every child and grown-up should see this picture. It means a new world for the young and a longer lease on life for their elders.

J. Hobart Hutchinson in France.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, received a letter Monday, May 6, from his son, J. Hobart Hutchinson, who is now somewhere in France with the First Army Headquarters regiment, interpreters division. Each of the 3,000 men in this regiment has been selected for special duty and about 60 per cent. of them are college men, J. Hobart Hutchinson being one of these. He has just reached his majority and is proficient in French, which he reads and writes and also speaks fluently. He volunteered for service, and before leaving for France designed and laid out the detention or quarantine camp at Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Hutchinson and his son, Hobart, were in France in August, 1914, when they visited many important points, Arras among them.

Parkway Reopened as Drury Lane.

The old Parkway theater, Division and North Clark streets, which has been closed for about five months, was reopened as the Drury Lane, Saturday, May 4, under the management of W. H. Riddle. Mr. Riddle is an old theatrical and vaudeville manager, who is also quite familiar with moving picture entertainment. He was much encouraged on the opening night by an overflowing attendance, and feels optimistic over the outlook. "Hearts or Diamonds," William Russell's latest production; a two-reel comedy, and the Drury Lane Screen Telegram formed the program.

Pictures Showing Boys in Illinois.

Luman C. Mann returned from Houston, Texas, Tuesday, May 7, having completed his film "With Luman C. Mann at Camp Logan." He took in all 7,000 feet, 6,000 of which will be released. While climbing on a bathhouse Friday, May 3, in order to secure some pictures, Mr. Mann slipped and fell eight feet, severely breaking his arm in two places, at the elbow, which has handicapped him greatly in finishing the pictures.

He has secured some very unusual views, among them being scenes showing First Lieutenant Marshall Field third, of Battery E, 122d Field Artillery (old First Cavalry), building a box in which to ship his effects "over there"; Colonel Abel Davis being notified that he has been placed in command of the 132d Infantry (old Second); Charles the Great, a trained monkey, interviewing Colonel Sanborn, commander of the 131st (Dandy First), and Lieutenant Charles Plamondon, of the 122d Field Artillery, whose mother and father lost their lives on the Lusitania, conducting inspection at reveille. This film will be released about May 20, through Owl Features, Inc., Chicago.

Off for Minneapolis Convention.

Joseph Hopp and William E. Burford, of this city, and H. A. Brink, of Grand Rapids, left Monday evening, May 6, for Minneapolis to attend the convention of northwestern exhibitors. On a later train C. C. Pettijohn, Frank Rembusch, Jacob Cooper and Louis H. Frank also left for the convention city. Lee Ochs, who arrived in the city Sunday, left the same evening to attend the convention.

"The Unbeliever" Closes at Auditorium.

"The Unbeliever" closed a successful run of seventeen days at the Auditorium Wednesday evening, May 8. This has been a notable run and many thousands of people will treasure up for years to come the stirring scenes and incidents which occurred at the Auditorium in the interest of the Third Liberty Loan. The story and scenes of the picture, of course, will also remain with them for a long time.

"Tarzan of the Apes" Succeeds Gerard Picture.

"My Four Years in Germany," owing to previous booking, will make way for "Tarzan of the Apes" at the Colonial, which will open a two weeks' run Monday, May 13. The Gerard picture will go to the Orpheum theater, on State street, for a week's run.

Lasky Company Returns from Cody, Wyo.

Marshall Neilan and the Lasky company who have been engaged in taking big outdoor scenes for "Jean of the Triple Chevron," at Cody, Wyo., passed through the city, en route to New York, Monday, May 6. The stopover was so brief that there wasn't even time to say "Howdy."

"My Own United States" at Playhouse.

"My Own United States" (Frohman Company) opened at the Playhouse last week and has been well received by a fine attendance. The photoplay critics of the dailies have commended it both for its display of good acting and its strong appeal. For review in this paper see issue of February 2, page 685.

HARRY LEONHARDT IN TOWN.

Harry Leonhardt, the well-known theatrical manager of Los Angeles and of New York for many years past, is making his ninth visit this year to New York. Mr. Leonhardt has the distinction of being one man who has been a pioneer in every evolutionary move that has been made in the amusement world. When the motion picture business started he entered it as a specializing manager and has been with some of the largest features which have been shown throughout the world. He was the western general manager for the Fox interests for a number of years.

In association with Fred A. Miller he is interested in Los Angeles in one of the most palatial theaters on the Pacific coast. It is the Miller theater and is the last word in modernity.

E. M. Newman Goes Abroad

Will Record for the Screen Social, Commercial and Civil Life Under War Conditions.

E. M. NEWMAN, lecturer and producer of the Newman Travel Pictures, is now touring the Allied countries as a commissioner of the Committee on Public Information of the United States Government for the study of industrial and social conditions behind the battle lines. He sailed from an Atlantic port about two weeks ago, with the members of his staff and a flock of motion picture and still cameras—the first of such equipment permitted to leave an American port of embarkation for non-military use in many months. News has just been received of his safe arrival on the other side by Charles Mercer, Mr. Newman's representative at the offices of the Educational Films Corporation of America, 729 Seventh avenue, which releases his pictures.

E. M. Newman.

"I am going abroad," said Mr. Newman on April 24, "to get illustrations of social, commercial and civil life under war conditions in Great Britain, France and Italy, with a view to America profiting by the Allies' experience. I hope particularly to illustrate the conservation of human power that makes possible the release of every able-bodied man to the war with the least disturbance to commerce. During Mr. Newman's absence the Educational Films Corporation of America will continue to release his Travel Pictures. Four of them have already been issued: "The Forbidden Isle," "Our Hawaiian Army," "Tidbits of Travel" and "Our Egypt of the Southwest." There are twenty-six more one-reelers in the forthcoming series, representing the product of seventeen years of travel and exploration.

It will take about five months for Mr. Newman to tour intensively the United Kingdom, France and Italy in the prosecution of his new work. On his return he will get into the lecture harness again, but he promises a general release of the new patriotic pictures by the Educational next winter.

Red Cross Founds Operators' School

Organized for the Benefit of Men Injured in the Service of the United States.

THE Precision Machine Company, Inc., 317 East Thirty-fourth street, New York City, has loaned a Simplex projector to the American Red Cross for its operators' school recently organized by Dr. John C. Farres, director of trade reconstruction for crippled soldiers. The school will occupy the whole of the top floor of the Red Cross building at 211 Fourth avenue, New York, and the instruction will be in charge of James R. Cameron, of the International Operating School, 1931 Broadway, New York City. He will be assisted by C. W. Johnson, chief operator of the Fox circuit of theaters, who has pledged his services in this patriotic work for three nights a week.

The period of instruction will cover six weeks, based upon the expectation that the men taking up the course will devote three hours a day to the work in the school. Upon the successful completion of the course by its soldier students the operators' school division of the Red Cross Institute will obtain license for the men, who will be put to work by the management of the Fox circuit in its theaters.

Mr. Cameron is now negotiating with other large motion picture interests and expects to be able to announce shortly that arrangements have been made for the employment of the graduates in practically all other big circuits of picture houses.

Lasky Studio Suffers $100,000 Loss by Fire

Spectacular Blaze Destroys Section of Big Paramount Plant —Company to Erect Large Building.

THE northeastern section of the great Lasky plant in Hollywood, bounded by Selma, Argyle, Vine streets and Sunset boulevard, was destroyed by a fire of unknown origin on the night of April 30, causing a damage estimated by the film company's officials at about $100,000.

The buildings used by the purchasing department, the stock room, the drapery room, dark stage, used for "vision" pictures, the tinting department, the color room and a large glass stage adjoining were gutted by the wall of flame that burst forth from the color department and ate its way with great rapidity, traveling east and west and destroying everything in its path.

Nearly a score of young women and men employed in the building where the fire first was discovered had a narrow escape. Several hundred telephones in the Hollywood district were put out of service.

So quick was the spread of the flames and so intense the heat developed by them in the first few minutes that hundreds of the Lasky employees who rushed to the scene were driven back in their efforts to fight the flames with their own equipment. The lack of pressure in the water main supplying the studio water lines was blamed by the volunteer fire fighters for the quick spread of the flames.

Employees carried out to safety wardrobes and film valued at more than $100,000, and saved the records and office equipment.

Clyde Ewing, one of the studio employees, who, with Charles Wells, Oliver Shot and William Engle, were stubbornly clinging to a narrow edge of the laboratory building in a successful effort to keep the flames from spreading to it, was caught by a flying loop of a hose and fell thirty feet through a burning skylight. He was saved by his fellow fire fighters and later removed to his home, not seriously injured.

According to the stories of some who were in the special color room at the time, the fire was started by a spark from a crossed wire, which ignited a rack of films and passed into the next building.

The fire was kept from spreading to the film vault and the laboratory, but anticipating the turn of the wind, Studio Manager Milton Hoffman and several assistants ordered the valuable films and chemicals removed to the streets.

At 5:30 the fire was practically out. At that time Jesse L. Lasky announced that work of rebuilding would be started at once. The output of the plant will not be delayed, it was announced. The destroyed buildings will be replaced by a huge three-story concrete structure, housing many departments, to cost $150,000.

Goldstein Is Sentenced to Ten Years

Producer of "The Spirit of '76" Is Sent to the Federal Penitentiary and Fined $5,000.

ROBERT GOLDSTEIN, producer and exhibitor of the film, "The Spirit of '76," who, on April 15, was convicted on two counts of a Federal indictment charging him with violation of the Espionage act, was sentenced by United States District Judge Bledsoe on Monday, April 29, to ten years in the Federal penitentiary at McNeil's Island and to pay a fine of $5,000 on the first count and two years at the same institution on the second count, with no fine. The sentences are to run concurrently.

Notice of an appeal to the United States Circuit Court was given by Goldstein's counsel, and a ten-day stay of execution was allowed by the court for counsel to prepare such an appeal.

When Goldstein stood up to hear the judgment of the court he shook as Judge Bledsoe verbally excoriated him for his unpatriotic conduct. Judge Bledsoe told Goldstein that he had not only lied on the stand when he testified in his own behalf, but that his conduct on that occasion was most despicable. He congratulated the prisoner that he had not committed his treasonable act in some other country where he would not have had the benefit of a trial before a jury of his countrymen.

Judge Bledsoe declared the film was one of the most potent German propagandas of which he had any knowledge, and asserted that he had no doubt it had been presented with that idea in view. It had been a "close case," the court stated, and the question was one largely of intent on the part of Goldstein—whether he wanted to arouse enmity against our ally, England, or whether he was after the almighty dollar, and neglected no effort to gather them in. The jury had found that Goldstein was guilty of a violation of the Espionage act in giving aid and comfort to the enemy, he continued, and in that judgment he was in hearty accord. Unusual pains had been taken by the court to see that the jury was free of prejudice, Judge Bledsoe declared.

The testimony, the court stated, showed that Goldstein had sought to arouse enmity against Great Britain by seeking to prove that one hundred years ago that nation had been guilty of the same class of atrocities as are now charged against the detestible Huns.

In this hour, Judge Bledsoe asserted, he was in favor of a common sense adjudication of our national statutes calculated to shut off our enemies at home. It was not a time for finespun theories, he stated, and judgments based on sentiment, but for a hewing to the line, and this the court proposed to do.

Judge Bledsoe went over the evidence bit by bit, and showed where in his opinion, the verdict of the jury was fully justified.

J. H. Ryckman, in his motion for a new trial, set out a number of grounds. He thought the indictment should have stated how close to Clune's Auditorium were members of the army and navy the night the picture was put on, November 28, 1917; he claimed that as they were all at Fort MacArthur they could not be influenced by the exhibition. Judge Bledsoe brushed that aside as without merit. Another reason argued for a new trial was that the film had not been shown with an orchestra at the Federal Building, the argument being that if there had been good music accompanying the presentation, patriotic people might have become enthusiastic and forgotten all about the vicious scenes in the picture, but that was denied by the court.

The mention of Franz Bopp and Ambassador Von Bernstorff's names were claimed to be prejudicial conduct on the part of the Government, and finally Assistant United States District Attorney Lawson was denounced for some alleged ill-tempered remarks he made in his address to the jury, when he said that the jury ought to "label" Goldstein, and place him either in the traitor or the patriot class. Another reason argued for a new trial was that C. L. Keep, special agent of the Department of Justice, had not been fully cross-examined by counsel for the defense.

The new trial was denied, and a motion in arrest of judgment was also turned down by the court. Then Le Compte Davis, who appeared in behalf of Goldstein for the first time, asked that he be allowed ten days to prepare an appeal to the higher court, and this was granted.

After sentence was imposed, Mr. Davis inquired if his client could be released pending the disposition of the appeal, and the court fixed the bond at $25,000. Goldstein has been in the County Jail since last November, in default of $10,000 bond.

Hayakawa Features to Be Made at Universal City.

The Hayakawa Productions, which are to be released through the Haworth Pictures Corporation, are to be made at the plant of the Universal Company, with which the Haworth company has entered into a leasing arrangement.

The new company's studio manager will be George Stout, who for a number of years served in the same capacity for Mack Sennett.

Mr. Hawkins, manager of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, said the company will later carry out its intention of erecting a studio.

The principal settings for the first of the Hayakawa Productions already have been built at Universal City.

Clara Kimball Young Raises $80,000 in Bond Drive.

Going "over the top" at a meeting attended by 15,000 persons, Clara Kimball Young, the Select star, won the honors in the first week of the motion picture stars Liberty Bond sales championship contest by disposing of $80,000 worth of securities at the exposition "tank" in Central Park on Saturday night, April 27.

Her efforts bring the total for the tank meetings, conducted exclusively by members of the South's motion picture colony, up to $220,000. This is within $30,000 of the goal originally fixed for these gatherings.

Several large subscriptions were announced by Miss Young's aids, among them one of $20,000 made by the star herself.

Other large subscriptions were: Harry I. Garson, $5,000; Milton Sills, leading man in the Young company, $2,000; Norman Selby (Kid McCoy), $1,000; and "Dad" Kimball, $1,000.

In addition to her original subscriptions Miss Young made the offer to her audience to duplicate any large purchases.

Henry Walthall with Griffith.

Henry Walthall, former Paralta star, has been engaged by D. W. Griffith to appear in his latest war drama.

This new picture will present an entirely different angle, we understand, from "Hearts of the World." It is rumored that Mr. Griffith doesn't intend to have a battle scene in the picture, but will merely use the world war as its background. Many of the scenes will be laid in France, and the cast will have in it the principal stars of "Hearts of the World," including Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Robert Harron and George Fawcett.

Jesse L. Lasky Returns to Los Angeles.

Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, returned from New York on Monday, April 29. Mr. Lasky is here on his customary six weeks' inspection trip of the big Hollywood plant. Several new stars will shortly commence work on the Lasky lot, including Ethel Clayton, Fred Stone and Shirley Mason.

Paul Conlon Marries Miss Mettler.

Paul (Scoop) Conlon, press representative for Roscoe Arbuckle, has joined the ranks of the benedicts. The bride is Miss Lillian Mettler, from Hollywood. It happened down in San Diego. Of course, Arbuckle was best man and gave the young couple a wedding dinner at the Hotel Del Coronado.

Tod Browning with Universal.

Tod Browning, formerly Griffith director and recently with the Metro Pictures Corporation, has been engaged as director by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

George Baker Goes to Hospital.

George D. Baker, production manager at the Metro studios, stricken with appendicitis, was rushed to the Good Samaritan Hospital, where an operation was performed and he is now out of danger.

Kohler Joins Photographic Corps.

Henry Kohler, one of the most experienced men in the Triangle camera department at Culver City, has secured his release from his district board and will enlist in the photographic department of the United States Army.

Naval Band Plays at Kinema.

The United States Naval Reserve Band of Los Angeles is being heard three times daily at the Kinema theatre during the engagement of "The Unbeliever." This band, augmented by its orchestra, is considered one of the best conducted by the United States Navy, and the management of the Kinema feels itself exceedingly fortunate in securing it in conjunction with the big military feature picture.

Gloria Hope with Griffith.

Gloria Hope, who has just finished a picture with the Clara Kimball Young Corporation, has been engaged by D. W. Griffith.

PRICE APPOINTED TRIANGLE REPRESENTATIVE.

C. B. Price has been appointed special representative for the Triangle Distributing Corporation. Dan Michalove succeeds him as New York branch manager.

Tom Moore of Goldwyn

THE popularity of Tom Moore with exhibitors and every class of the motion picture public is being proved daily. There is no surprise in this, in view of his long service on the screen. Cast to play parts for which he is fitted, with stars of the first rank and with everything done to enhance his appeal, it is only natural Tom Moore should "find" himself in "The Cinderella Man," "Dodging a Million," "The Floor Below" and "The Danger Game." Playing a diversity of characters in these successes, Mr. Moore portrays Anthony Quintard in the first named play with precisely the same easy perfection that he assumes the quizzical crookedness of Jimmie Gilpin in "The Danger Game."

Tom Moore.

Because he is a normal, wholesome young man in everyday life, he brings the same qualities to his characterizations. He is not too prepossessing to be real, nor is he without the finesse which marks the experienced artist. He is like some one every one knows and not at all like any one else familiar to the patrons of theaters where motion pictures are shown. Tom Moore is like a thousand young Americans who are not actors. He is a man of today.

Underlying his ease of manner Tom Moore's never failing sense of human nature is responsible for his success. He knows people and can project what he knows because he is one of them. Without being a type he is representative of all types, and is equally at home as a careless man of wealth as he is a denizen of the slums.

Away from his work he is equally appealing. Indifferent to his appearance, he plays golf when he finds the time for recreation or goes on long tramps in the country with a friend who knows more about the woods and fields than the intricacies of make-up or cutting a picture.

A suggestion of Tom Moore's Irish ancestry is ever present in his speech and his blue eyes, aglint with fun. Those who know him best deplore his popularity in the drama of silence because his quaint accent is lost to those who never hear him speak. They go so far as to foresee a career as the rival of any player of Celtic parts the American stage has ever seen should Tom Moore desert the screen for the stage. But as this is not likely, as in view of the demands made on his time by Goldwyn Tom Moore is likely to continue his work in motion pictures for a long time to come.

FRANK WILLEY JOINS Y. M. C. A.

Frank R. Willey, who has been connected with World-Pictures for some time as a news photographer, has resigned his position to accept the position of news photographer for the Y. M. C. A. in Europe. Mr. Willey will take "stills" and motion pictures of the Y. M. C. A. huts and other establishments and the photos he takes will be used in the forthcoming drive for additional funds with which to further the work of this organization.

MARIE DRESSLER DOES LOT OF ADDRESSING.

Marie Dressler has wired the home office of World Pictures as follows: "Finished drive in Sacramento Saturday night. Addressed one hundred forty-nine rallies in twenty-nine days, including seventy-six picture theaters." Miss Dressler resumed last week the making of her comedies, which are to be distributed on the World program.

Richardson Visits Chicago and St. Louis

Projection Expert Finds but Three First-Run Houses in Latter City of Eight Hundred Thousand Population.

CHICAGO, ILL.

OVER in the Windy City by the lakes I spent almost a week in fair imitation of a spinning top and even then was obliged to leave with quite a number of visits unmade. I found the Chicago office force of the Moving Picture World grinding along. If there is any "bacon" they don't bring home it will be through no fault of either Brother McQuade or Neighbor Hinz.

While in the city I called on a number of manufacturers of projection appliances, but inasmuch as those visits were largely given over to the inspection and description of appliances of various kinds their details will be set forth in the Projection Department. Among them were the Enterprise Optical Company, where I met General Manager O. F. Spahr. A. C. Roebuck, president of the company, was at the time confined to his home by a bad case of grippe. At the De Vry Corporation I met Mr. De Vry, president, and Mr. Gundlach, sales manager. Mr. De Vry and his able corps of assistants have worked hard to perfect the De Vry portable projector, which, I understand, is now being marketed under patents owned by the company.

Mr. Hinz and your humble servant took luncheon with Messrs. De Vry and Gundlach. At a table near our own I noticed a large mound of good-to-eat things, behind which showed the top of a familiar looking dome. Further investigation proved the consumer of the viands to be our old friend Carl Laemmle, whose smile and greeting were as cheerful and hearty as ever. Mr. Laemmle was on his way to the coast. I asked him if there was anything of interest for publication concerning his trip, to which he replied: "No, the New York boys got that before I left. Just tell 'em I'm on the job, working hard, and that I am happy." Mr. Laemmle certainly did look happy.

I called at the factory of the Acme Portable Projector Company and had a pleasant visit, full details of which will be set forth in the Projection Department. Out at the American Film Company plant my principal difficulty consisted of breaking loose from the bunch of good fellows who wanted to show me about everything—from the foundation stones to the top bricks in the chimney. At the United Theater Equipment Company's new quarters at 514 South Wabash avenue, E. E. Fulton was discerned in his short sleeves, surrounded by a cloud of dust, carpenters, painters and various loud noises. The United is doing a good business, and will have fine quarters right in the heart of the film district when the storeroom is completed. I was sorry, indeed, to be unable to meet R. H. Fulton, the manager. He was absent at the time of my call, and there was no opportunity for a return visit.

The E. E. Fulton Company has bought back from the United Theater Equipment Company the factory at the northwest corner of Carroll and Kedzie avenues, where the "Fulco" products are made. It was a matter of regret that lack of time prevented my visiting the factory. The buying back of the factory has nothing whatever to do with the connection with the U. T. E. It was simply that the U. T. E. did not care to continue in the manufacturing business. The Fulton boys are still in charge of the United Theater Equipment Corporation office of Chicago, and there is no intention on their part to leave that company.

I did not visit many theaters, but, of course, called on my old friend, Sam Levine, general manager for Jones, Linick & Schaefer. A visit to Chicago would not be complete unless I shook hands with Levine. He is one of the foundation stones of the business in Chicago, and a class A reg'lar feller.

I did visit the Crystal theater on North avenue. This is a new house, seating, so I am told, 2,000 on one floor. The auditorium is somewhat in the form of a triangle, spacious and handsome in appearance. There are several bright-lettered illuminated signs advertising future programs located on the wall not far from the screen, and that is not good practice. At the time of my entry the management was running ("running" is good) what was presumed to be a comedy in which there was a combination of under-camera speed and overprojector speed. The feature film which followed was run too fast, the figures in many instances moving with those queer little ridiculous jerks which are unhuman and almost anything else.

While in Chicago I visited Local Union No. 110, and had a talk with its president, Joseph Armstrong. Stories have been going over the country that Local 110 has again fallen by the wayside, and has committed about every crime imaginable. I did not believe it. I was convinced that, although any man may make a mistake, President Armstrong would not knowingly do or permit to be done a deliberate and intentional wrong.

And now let me take up and discuss the "charges" one at a time. In the first place it had been charged that Local 110 had sought to foist upon Chicago film exchanges an inspection proposition, the plan being that the local would put out an inspector who would see that machines and other equipment were kept in first-class shape and the film properly handled, the expense to be met by the payment of a nominal sum by each exchange weekly. If this scheme were carried out as formulated it would undoubtedly prove to be a good one. That is how it strikes me. I saw several letters addressed by Chicago film exchange managers to Local Union 110 in which the plan was approved. I am, therefore, somewhat at a loss to understand just why or where either the Chicago exchanges or exhibitors had any legitimate kick coming, particularly in view of the fact that Local 110 merely proposed the plan and made no effort to enforce it. It was a proposition advanced by the local for the benefit of all concerned.

The local also proposed to establish a repair department, the shop to adjoin the local offices, and, in fact, being a part thereof. This shop was to have been run by the local and to have been in charge of two of its members. This was, I think, a serious error of judgment. I do not believe the local acted wisely in attempting this, nor do I believe such a plan could or would work out successfully. In my opinion it would simply cause friction and endless trouble for the organization.

I want to reaffirm my confidence in and friendship for Joseph Armstrong, president of Local Union 110, with the notation that his failure to set forth his side of the matter in question was not doing quite the right thing by either Mr. McQuade, myself, or the Moving Picture World.

While in Chicago I attended the opening night performance of D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World." The picture itself is a great production, but its presentation left very much to be desired—very much, indeed.

Another objectionable feature was that seats to the rear of an entrance aisle running crosswise of the house were sold at $2 per; the management allowing a crowd of late comers to congregate in this aisle and stand there while waiting their turn to be seated, entirely blocking the view of the screen from those seated back of the aisle, thus causing them to miss several sub-titles and lose the thread of the story. That it was an opening night is no excuse. There was no reduction in the price on that account, I noticed, and we who paid top prices wanted what we paid for.

The name of the chief operator was set forth in the program as Benjamin Turner. If Mr. Turner was in charge the work was small credit to him. Passing up the fact that there were at least half a dozen misframes in the films, and that the picture did not start off in frame, the light was very badly discolored at the bottom five times, and once the picture was very nearly obliterated by what was nearly a lost arc; also at one point the show stopped entirely and the screen was dark for at least a full minute; trouble with the take-up, I learned later.

There could and can be no possible excuse for such utterly punk work as this. Who is responsible I do not know, but the Olympic theater was closed a week or more prior to the opening, hence there was ample time to get all projection apparatus in first-class shape. The party responsible for handing the operators a lot of films for a photoplay of that type containing all those misframes ought to be fired bodily. I don't care who he is. It seems to me the theater management, the operators, and the one responsible for the misframes all have considerable to answer for. When an audience pays $2 for a photoplay it does not expect, and has a perfect right not to expect crude work of the sort we saw in the Olympic that night.

During the last hours of my stay in Chicago I called at the offices of the Mid-West Theater Supply, the Exhibitors' Supply Company and the Amusement Supply Company just to shake hands, say hello and good-bye. Manager Williams of the first named concern was out, so I missed him. P. W. Plumber, manager of the Amusement Supply Company, was very busy, but stopped long enough to bid us welcome to his city and chat for a few moments on trade conditions in general. The company is doing a good business.

I also called on Mr. Faller, manager of the Bijou Dream, for whom I was operator about ten years ago. The Bijou Dream is on State street in the heart of the downtown section. Manager Faller tells me he runs most of his feature films two weeks. Last year he ran only twenty-three feature pictures, using all the Clara Kimball Young and all the Norma Talmadge productions; also some productions in which Alice Brady was star. His clientele is mostly of women, and Faller tells me that Miss Young and Miss Talmadge are the best pullers, these two being about equal in drawing power with his audiences. It was my intention to call on a number of the Chicago exchanges, but time did not permit.

RANTOUL, URBANA AND CHAMPAIGN.

WHILE in Cleveland I received an S O S call from Walter Johnson, operator at the Home theater, Rantoul, Ill., asking me to stop and address the theater men of Champaign, Urbana and Rantoul. Brother Johnson failed to note the fact that the address would be in Champaign. Always willing to heed the call of distress, I agreed to stop, and clambered down from one of Mr. Pullman's cars when the brakeman called "Rantoul," after the shades of night had fallen, to find a drizzle of rain soaking into everything, myself included.

There was one theater in the town and the rain-soaked sidewalk emitted steam from the friction of my flying footsteps as I sought the parlor of pleasure, the Home theater. Walter Coddington, proprietor, was to have been at the station to meet me, but friend watch stopped on him, or something like that.

The Home theater of Rantoul seats four hundred, and is really a nice little house for the size of the city. Due to the proximity of the Government Aviation Field, Brother Coddington is doing a land-office business. Walter Johnson, operator, is a wide-awake hustler. He has two Power's machines, using A. C. current through Compensarcs. Brother Johnson is putting a good picture on the screen, everything considered. In the morning we went over to Champaign, stopping at Urbana (population 8,000), where I called at the Princess theater, H. S. Freeman, manager; A. L. Spaulding, operator.

The Princess is a pretty house, seating 580. Admission is 5 and 10 cents. The auditorium floor is peculiar in that it is almost flat at the front end, rising at a sharp slope in the rear of the house, thus giving an excellent view of the screen. The operating room is small, but not badly crowded. It might, however, just as well have had two feet additional depth, front to back. A new motor-driven rewind has just been added, but Brother Spaulding has removed the motor because the rewind made too much noise. I told him that which he should already have known—and would have known had he read the Projective Department closely: that if he got some different pulleys and geared down the speed of the rewinder the noise would be done away with and the operation of the rewinder would be much more satisfactory. I also called at the Colonial, but it was closed.

Arriving in Champaign, we went to the place appointed, where the operators and theater managers were supposed to be assembled at 9.30 a. m., only to find an appalling vacancy. It later developed that Brother Johnson had interviewed the president of the local, of which he is a member. The president had promised to notify all operators and managers, but he failed to do so. It was regrettable, but very soon, however, one of the Champaign operators found I was there, and he, together with Brother Johnson, hustled around and got the operators together, though there was no time to get the managers. When they finally got together I was obliged to rush through my address without time to deal with matters comprehensively.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

THE trip to St. Louis was made primarily to examine into the chronometer balance and cylinder escapement of the Wagner converter, it having been quite some time since I gave that excellent device attention. I notified St. Louis Local Union 143 that I would be in the city, and was promptly informed that arrangements would be made for me to address a meeting of exhibitors, operators and exchange managers. The operators of the City of St. Louis are thoroughly organized, and conditions are, I am told, at least fairly satisfactory. St. Louis is, insofar as applies to the exhibiting end of things, a peculiar proposition. It is pre-eminently the city of the "old-timer." It is difficult for the newcomer to "break in." The old established theaters are those which make money, and they, being for the most part in the hands of ultra-conservatives, improvements are not always readily forthcoming. The St. Louis manager is, however, so Secretary Stone informs me, willing to provide necessary machine repairs, and in most instances, up-to-date projection equipment.

Later, in conversation with exchange men and others, I learned other peculiar things concerning the business in the Queen City of the Mississippi Valley. St. Louis has about 800,000 inhabitants and 84 theaters, 60 per cent. of which are five-cent houses. Out of the 84 there are just three first-run houses. There are sixteen film exchanges. Perhaps you, dear reader, can imagine a condition of that kind, but I couldn't have done so until I had seen St. Louis. A city of 800,000 people with only three first-run theaters, and 60 per cent. of the houses still chasing after nickels and the cheapest possible film service.

In the evening of the first day I dropped in at the Strand theater on Sixth street, being told that that was the best downtown moving picture theater. The Strand is of the storeroom type, though with a high ceiling. Admission to all parts of the house is ten cents. Right up against the screen, at the left, is one of those wretched abominations, a brilliantly illuminated white-faced clock; also the light to illuminate the clock face was smeared over a considerable section of the left-hand wall. In the orchestra pit, for the first thirty minutes I was there, was an organist, with light strewed around promiscuously pretty well all over the front of the organ; also during the first thirty minutes of my stay there was no pianist or violinist, still the lights at their music racks were burning, the rays glaring balefully back into the eyes of the audience from the sheet music. If all that light is necessary, then for the love of heaven get it, but get it intelligently—not in a way to butcher the eyes of the audience and, by reflex action in the eyes of the audience, kill the highlights of the picture.

The projection light was brilliant and well handled; also the picture, at times when a mechanically perfect piece of film went through, was rock steady, showing that the projectors were in A-1 condition. Between the films several slides were run advertising mercantile institutions, etc. I don't know how the rest of the audience felt about it, but I, personally, didn't pay admission to that theater for the privilege of being forced to read a lot of advertisements. The speed of projection was correct. The operating room was fairly well located, of goodly size, had black walls and good observation ports. There were two Simplex machines which have been in use projecting a continuous show twelve hours a day for four years with only one overhauling, which is some record. Of course, the operator has put in some parts himself, but the machines have had only one general overhauling in that time. H. C. Tong and W. E. Cook are the operators. Brother Tong was on duty at the time of my visit. He did not know I was in the theater, and his work during my entire stay (one and one-half hours) was excellent.

At the American theater I witnessed a presentation of "My Four Years in Germany." The American is managed by John S. Sweeney, who is considered as being one of St. Louis's live wire managers. The projection at the American is in charge of J. C. Rafferty, ex-president, and Mr. Klein, president of the St. Louis Motion Picture Operators' Union No. 171. The work was excellent. The light was brilliant and well handled. During the entire presentation there was not one discoloration on the screen.

On Sunday I visited the Orpheum, a vaudeville house, to see the "Immortal Sarah." The first thing on the program was a topical reel, which for fully two hundred feet was run out of frame. The operating room was in the first balcony and I do not believe the operator could see the top of the screen. However, that was no excuse for starting the picture out of frame, and continuing it for all that distance without rectifying the error. As for Mlle. Bernhardt no words of mine could begin to do justice to her performance, when one considers all the circumstances.

Monday, after a visit to the Wagner plant, details of which will appear in the Projection Department, I went out and gave Film Row a hasty "once over," shook hands with the following and talked things over briefly:

Floyd Lewis, manager of the New United Picture Theaters of America (an ambitious name, surely), which said office just at present consists of several large plate-glass windows, two desks, Mr. Lewis, and one perfectly "scrumptious" stenographer. Doubtless all that remaining vacancy will soon be filled, for friend Lewis is one hustler from Hustleville. He is secretary of the exchange men's organization.

D. E. Boswell, manager of Greater Vitagraph, was absent from the city. W. C. Wiethoff, who introduced himself as assistant manager, greeted us with all the wild enthusiasm of a misanthropic clam. He kept the office railing gate carefully between us, probably so that I would not bite him. We tarried a mighty short tarry.

Paul H. Bush, manager of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, is one live wire. He is on the job sixty minutes of every working hour. He reports good business.

A. N. Webster, manager of Triangle, is another whoop-er-up boy, reg'lar manager. Also he is an oldtimer. He started with the Pittsburgh Calcium Light Company at 200 Broadway, New York, in 1910, going over to the General Film Company in 1912. While in the Goldwyn office I met George T. Myer, manager of the Shaw theater, a 1,100-seater, situated at Thirty-ninth and Shaw streets. Friend Myer gasoline-buggied me around to the Grand Central Film Company's office, which is located in the Grand Central theater, one of St. Louis' best photoplay theaters. Both the firm company and theater are managed by William Sievers, who is an up-to-date exhibitor.

Chaplin's new comedy, "A Dog's Life," was having its first St. Louis showing in the Grand Central theater that day, and Mr. Myer and I went in and gave it the "once over." It is a good comedy and was well projected by Brother Jack Caruso. The Grand Central theater is spacious, well planned and beautifully decorated; also its auditorium lighting is excellent, or at least it was at the time of my visit, which was presumably the normal condition.

At the General Film I shook hands with Manager H. E. Elder; also I met F. J. Fegan, who is about to supersede Mr. Elder as manager of the St. Louis office, Mr. Elder taking charge of another office. Mr. Fegan has been with the Standard. At the Fox exchange I met Manager D. M. Thomas. Herman Robbins, the Fox general manager, was in the city that day, but I did not see him.

I also met Manager S. Warner of the United Exchange, and Charles J. Werner, manager of the Metro.

At midnight Monday a goodly number of St. Louis operators, a few exhibitors and a few exchange managers gathered at the F. M. A. rooms and for two hours listened attentively to an address on projection. Secretary Lewis of the exchange men's organization came up at the close of my address, shook hands and said: "I am ashamed of the exchange men of this city." He had good reason to be. Every one of them had been notified of and invited to the meeting, some of them two or three times. The exchange man who sits back and howls about damage done to his films, yet is too dead to the world to attend a meeting of that kind is deserving of scant sympathy. RICHARDSON.

Universal Institutes Traveling School

When Mutilated Film Is Returned to Exchange Experienced Operator Takes Up Matter with Offender.

OWNERS of motion picture theaters the operators of which do not appear to take ordinary care in the handling of film are being given personal demonstrations to show the condition in which prints should be when they are returned to the exchanges after having been used in the theaters.

President Carl Laemmle, of the Universal company, recently issued instructions that a traveling school of instruction be inaugurated as an experiment. The order was issued at the suggestion of E. H. Goldstein, general manager of the New York Exchange of Universal. Mr. Goldstein has been making a personal inspection of prints as returned by theaters with the result that he has found many of them to be badly mutilated. The exhibitor has invariably blamed the exchange for mutilation and the exchange has blamed the exhibitor.

As a result of the suggestion of Mr. Goldstein an experienced motion picture operator who received his early film education in the laboratory inspection room has been placed in charge of the New York exchange inspection department.

When the inspection room girls find mutilation of a reel they immediately report the damage to the operator in charge. Through a checking system the operator ascertains the identity of the theater owner from which the mutilated film had most recently been returned.

The next step in the educational program is a call upon the theater owner by the operator, who carries with him the mutilated reel. The ensuing conversation does not take the form of a rebuke from the exchangeman. On the other hand, it is strictly friendly, the head of the inspection department attempting to show the exhibitor the damage done to other exhibitors by the careless handling of the print.

While the plan has only been in force for a short time results already accomplished have justified its inauguration. Apparently every call has resulted in the suggestion by the exhibitor to his operator that better care of the prints be taken and that they be inspected even though the inspection does add a half hour to the working day of the operator.

Nor does the plan necessitate as many personal calls as would appear to be necessary on first consideration. Remarkably few calls have been necessary, as the unconscious mutilators of films have repeated the offence over and over, sometimes not realizing they have done anything out of the ordinary. The damage one careless operator can do may be realized if the house over which he presides over the machines has a daily change of program. If the daily program consists of a feature, a comedy and a scenic, it will be in the power of the operator to mutilate three pictures a day, or twenty-one a week.

Harry S. Northrup, Villain

HARRY S. NORTHRUP, who plays the role of "villain" in Harry I. Garson's latest production, "The Hushed Hour," now nearing completion at the Griffith studio, Hollywood, Cal., says his entree and subsequent career in motion picture crime is entirely up to D. W. Griffith, who gave him his first engagement in pictures eight years ago.

Harry S. Northrup.

"Surprising as it may seem," said Mr. Northrup, "I have never met Mr. Griffith during all these years until on the day I started work at the Griffith studio with Mr. Garson last week. I reminded him then of our first meeting and how he started me out in a villain role. I have been playing these roles ever since."

Mr. Northrup's first work on the stage was with T. Daniel Frawley in "Shenandoah," at the Columbia, San Francisco. A year and a half later he was playing villain for E. H. Sothern at Daly's theater, New York.

Since then Mr. Northrup has created many leading roles in the spoken drama, and has to his credit 209 pictures under the Metro, Vitagraph, Triangle, Famous Players and Fine Arts management. It is said that Mr. Northrup's excellent work in "The Hushed Hour" will add further laurels to his already long list of successes.

GOT THE NOISE IN CALGARY.

The Allen theater, Calgary, put over a good advertising stunt for the presentation of "The Blue Bird." A private trolley car was chartered for a Saturday morning, and through an advertisement in the newspapers children with strong voices were invited to take a ride in the car free of charge. On the sides of the car were long streamers advertising the coming of the feature. "We want some real strong lungs for these trips, and if you cannot make enough noise to suit we will help you out," the management announced. The noise was produced.

SUN PROJECTION MOVES TO CANDLER BUILDING.

The Sun Projection Room has moved to the Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street, tenth floor. Two projections rooms have been fitted up with latest model Simplex Machines. In connection with the projection theater a special cutting projecting room for cutters and directors has been outfitted with all the necessary cutting tables.

Unearth Conspiracy to Steal Films

Pittsburgh Authorities Make Arrests—Loss of Film Has Been Troubling Exchanges All Over the East.

FOR some time past there has been a consistent amount of film lost in the Pittsburgh exchanges every month. As long ago as last September single reels of weekly subjects and comedies began to find their way out of the exchanges or were lost in transit. There has been, all through the winter, an increasing number of such reels reported lost, with apparently no trace of them left, and every exchangeman in Pittsburgh has been trying to find a remedy for the situation, although there was no way apparently to check up on the losses or discover anybody implicated. Within the past few weeks the loss of more important subjects have been noted by various exchanges. Serials and large features like "The Crisis" have been taken. "The Crisis," which was lost by Harvey Day of the Premier Pictures Company, was a brand new print and was taken from the Exhibitors' Service Company on a Saturday night. The Exhibitors' Company handles the shipment of film to theaters in the vicinity of Pittsburgh, and is known as the messenger service.

With the arrest of three suspects by the local authorities it looks as though a silent investigation, which has been in progress for some weeks, and which was started by the Pathe Company in New York, has culminated in the discovery of a nation-wide conspiracy to steal film from Pittsburgh and other exchange centers and market it in various foreign countries. The investigation, which has just been made public, was centered in Pittsburgh the week of May 1, and the city, county and federal authorities, as well as private detective agencies, which have been brought into the case, are combing the nation for the members of a "ring" of most daring motion picture pirates and thieves.

The net result of their operations is said by the authorities to have netted this clique in the past three months in the neighborhood of a half million dollars from stolen film, which has been sold to agents operating in Mexico, Japan, Cuba, Indo-China and the various Latin-American countries. The extent of their international operations is not known as yet, but from contracts and letters which have been seized it is certain that the thievery in Pittsburgh alone has netted as much as a thousand dollars a week at times.

The greatest secrecy is being maintained by Captain Clyde Edeburn of the Pittsburgh detective bureau concerning the details of the affair, but it is certain from his conversation he regards the matter of the gravest import and is not a "piker" proposition of local interest only. He said that it is bigger than any one would imagine, and that it was international in scope. The band of pirates had agents in every principal city in America and Europe. They dealt in thousands of dollars' worth of stolen film weekly and enormous earnings were had from their illicit dealings. The entire force of detectives is hot on the trail of the ringleader of operations in Pittsburgh, who, after being tipped off, is said to have departed from town hurriedly. It is certain though that he will be apprehended in the near future, as all details are known about him.

A plan had been arranged by the New York Pathe auditor, L. S. Diamond, who has been working on the case from New York for some time, to catch the thieves with the goods by a frame-up turn-over of a certain film. However, the plan failed just at the crucial moment, and the ringleader thus knew of the deal and "ducked." The man who is alleged to have been the ringleader for this district is supposed to be a New Yorker. He has disappeared. Mr. Diamond said that Pathe and all the companies had been losing film continuously through the thieves' operations for some time, and that their method of operating was to advertise in foreign motion picture journals that they could supply various "high-class" films at ridiculously low prices. These films were then procured by the local representatives of the gang and dupes were made or the originals shipped where this was impossible. He said that it had become a most lucrative source of income.

The first arrest was made by city detectives. The man seized was William Keefe, commonly known as "Doc," who has worked in the inspection and shipping departments of Pathe and World and several other concerns. It is said it was with Keefe that the plan heretofore referred to had been arranged. A man giving the name of "Jack" Haupt was later taken into custody in a suite of fashionably appointed rooms at a downtown hotel. Later on a woman of twenty-one years, whose home is supposed to be Johnstown, and who was used, it is said, as a decoy or "bait" by the band, was arrested. In a hotel in the city a trunk was seized which contained an almost complete copy of the series of "Pearl of the Army." It is alleged that letters were found showing that arrangements were complete for shipping it to a foreign country.

The trio arrested are presumed to be the tools of the gang which has benefited to so great an extent by these depredations. They were given a hearing before Magistrate Sweeney this morning (Friday), and the girl, who gave her name as Clara Mowry of Johnstown, was discharged for lack of evidence apparently; but Keefe and Haupt were held over for conspiracy to steal films. They will be given a hearing shortly.

It is said that another tangent has been discovered in the work of the thieves. They are now being investigated on the charge of luring girls by tempting offers to "star" them in the pictures, etc. This angle is being given attention by the federal authorities. It is hoped by the local exchangemen that the investigation and climax will cause the loss of films to cease permanently in the district. Many more arrests are looked for shortly, and it is said that some surprising developments may be expected, both in the personnel of the gang and the extent of their local operations.

Montreal Police Catch Film Thief

Complaints Had Been Made That $25,000 of Local Motion Picture Property Had Been Stolen in April.

FILMS valued at $25,000 were stolen from the projection rooms of various Montreal theaters from time to time during the month of April, and the repeated thefts became a sensation in local film circles. Frequent reports of the thefts led the Montreal police to place a number of detectives on the case, with the result that Albert Petaux, 2007 Ontario street, was arrested in the projection room of the Passe Temps theater. A search of his home later revealed the presence of eleven reels of recent releases, which he had stolen. Other reels were recovered elsewhere, and a complete projection machine, which had been stolen from the Eagle Machine Company, was also recovered.

In court Petaux pleaded guilty to the charge of stealing the reels; but when it became known that the prosecution of the prisoner would necessitate the holding of the exhibits in court for an indefinite period President Ouimet of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Pathe distributors, requested Judge Choquet to release the prisoner on suspended sentence. This was done, and Petaux gained his freedom.

Petaux's plan was to represent himself as a salesman of Regal Films, Limited, thereby gaining access to all parts of a theater. Among the moving picture theaters victimized were the Imperial, Francais, Maple Leaf and Passe Temps. The man entered the projection room of each of these theaters and while the projection operator was busily engaged in his work walked out with any box of reels that was handy.

While Detectives Laberge and Pelletier were visiting several picture houses on Saturday, April 27, they learned that the suspected man was at the Passe Temps. When they arrived on the scene he was in the act of making a get-away with more films fr m the theater. He was arraigned on Monday, April 29, but was soon free because Mr. Ouimet preferred to have the use of the stolen films than press prosecution. Possibly the worst feature of the robberies was the confusion caused by the disappearance of the films during performances.

MISS GENTRY MEETS COAL OPERATORS.

Miss Caroline Gentry, co-author with William Addison Lathrop, of "The Romance of Coal," which the Educational Films Corporation of America is producing, was the guest on May 8 of the coal operators' convention held at Charleston, West Va. The meeting of the heads of the West Virginia coal associations was called by Governor John J. Cornwell with the idea not only of considering present problems, but of forming plans to extend and enlarge the export coal trade, particularly with South America, after the restoration of peace.

At a special meeting of the coal men Miss Gentry told them of the progress being made with her motion picture spectacle. She stated that Director Frederick A. Thomson would begin active work on it the second week in May and that his company expected to visit Charleston later in the month. A score of invitations to picturize famous coal camps were received by Miss Gentry at the conclusion of her talk, and these will be turned over to Mr. Thomson who, with the aid of panoramic views, will make his selection.

No Reason For Bitterness Over Publicity

By Nat S. Stronge

Head of Press Department Says Both Sides in Controversy Should Co-operate with Idea of Correcting Evils

JUSTIN FAIR'S story, under the caption "What Most Interests Movie Fans," as printed in the April 27 issue of the Moving Picture World, apparently has stirred up a hornet's nest. It certainly has created a controversy between the motion picture editors of daily newspapers on one side and the publicity directors and their assistants of the film companies on the other.

There is no reason for a continuance of the bitterness that has been injected into this controversy if individuals on both sides will view the problems and difficulties with an idea of correcting them rather than from a critical standpoint.

The publicity directors of the motion picture corporations have much with which to contend. Notwithstanding these difficulties, if their work is not of a high calibre and of value to the motion picture editors throughout the country it is largely their own fault. As one of the tribe of film publicity men I am at liberty to say that the great majority of us are simply jobholders, taking orders from the heads of our companies and executing these orders without protest if we know them to be wrong.

During my experience in the film industry I know of few publicity directors who have had the temerity to go counter to the orders of the heads of the companies by which they were employed. If those orders as transmitted were ridiculous from a publicity standpoint they were obeyed nevertheless. Very often it was a question of either obey them or resign. As a rule the men in charge of the destinies of the film companies have not wanted suggestions for the betterment of business if those suggestions ran counter to their personal aggrandizement.

The poor quality of publicity emanating from film companies is the fault of both the heads of those companies and of the publicity directors. The latter must share in the blame if they fear to lead their employers into the proper and prosperous channels. Failing to do this they become merely jobholders.

The hornet's nest stirred up by the present controversy is caused by a misunderstanding on the part of the newspaper men and the refusal of the publicity directors to look upon the matter from an impersonal stand.

The story by Mr. Fair, as it appeared in the April 27 issue of the Moving Picture World, was eminently just. He arrayed his facts from his experience as a moving picture editor on a daily newspaper.

Mr. Fair acknowledged that about half of the letters that came to his desk were requests for information regarding the private lives of popular screen players. To run his department successfully it was his duty to attempt to give satisfactory replies to those letters.

Had Mr. Fair investigated he would have learned that the publicity directors of film companies object strenuously to telling very much regarding the private lives of the players, and have orders not to do so. It is not good publicity. The reason is simple. The great majority of the female film stars are married. Some of them have families. They usually are screened as fair young maidens, and to tell the public that these fair young maidens are mothers with growing children might kill a great deal of their popularity. The same applies to the male film stars. They stand in the same position as matinee idols. A large part of their following consists of young women, who would lose interest in a male star if they knew that he was married and the father of a family.

Mr. Fair calls attention to the fact that many of the letters from fans ask for the home address of the players. This information will not be given by the film companies, as they realize that their stars are entitled to some home life and that the privacy of their homes should be guarded.

Finally Mr. Fair gives a list of questions, in the answers to which he estimates 40,000 people in Greater Newark are interested. As Mr. Fair apparently has made a careful study of the entire subject he should be acquainted with his field. Any film company publicity man who failed to realize this and who failed, in so far as he was able, to give Mr. Fair stories along the lines he desired certainly was not fulfilling his duties as a motion picture publicity director.

The next story in the controversy, "The Trouble With the Film Columnists," which appeared in the May 4 issue of the World, and which was written by a motion picture press agent, in my opinion, was uncalled for, ill-advised and was of such a nature as to cause a feeling of bitterness between motion picture publicity directors on one side and the men responsible for the motion picture departments of the daily newspapers on the other.

This motion picture press agent, whoever he may be, shows ignorance of conditions when he says, "If the worst came to the worst and the film columnists cut us out altogether I feel certain that we could still wiggle along and produce pictures and sell them at good prices to the exhibitors."

For the information of the gentleman I desire to say that the film industry would face a crisis if every daily newspaper decided to do away with its motion picture department. The industry would lose the daily power of suggestion now being placed before millions of people, and with the loss of this power of suggestion the motion picture theaters would lose hundreds of thousands of dollars in box office receipts.

If this motion picture press agent, writing anonymously, had taken the trouble to go into the matter as I purpose doing and explaining some of the difficulties of being a motion picture publicity man there would have been no occasion for the third story, which appeared in the May 18 issue of the Moving Picture World, and which was written by the managing editor of a daily newspaper in the Middle West.

I am sorry to see that this managing editor measures all of us with the same stick as he uses on the writer of the anonymous communication. There are some publicity men in the business who make every effort to be of real assistance to the motion picture editor. Their efforts, to be sure, are limited by numerous office regulations, and these regulations are so confining that it may look to the motion picture editors as if the publicity men deliberately refuse to be of assistance.

The managing editor certainly makes several pertinent comments. He also makes some mistakes. The first mistake he makes is that the average publicity director pounds out a tremendous amount of copy for the inspection of the boss, attempting to show quantity instead of quality. The boss seldom sees any story until after it appears in print.

The charge, however, by the managing editor that the average publicity director devotes his energy toward securing a showing in the newspapers and trade magazines that fall directly under the eye of his employer is true. Some of my compatriots may try to deny this statement, but if they are honest with themselves they will neglect the denial.

He also charges the publicity directors with lack of discrimination regarding the different newspapers. To an outsider this would appear to be true. To those of us that have had charge of publicity departments there are reasons why it cannot be otherwise. I will give those reasons later.

In charging the publicity directors with a failure to realize that the public is demanding more dignified, sensible, honest reading matter concerning motion pictures the managing editor contradicts himself by earlier acknowledging that there are several different varieties of a reading public. He says that the reading public has no desire to know what make of automobile a screen star drives. Previously he had said that we show lack of discrimination regarding the different stories desired by newspapers. As a matter of fact there are numerous motion picture editors who think the kind of an automobile a motion picture star drives will make interesting reading for their newspapers. I have before me now numerous requests for stories of this kind.

The managing editor hits the nail squarely on the head when he says: "Personality twaddle may please the president who likes to bask in the limelight, but it is worthless so far as the product is concerned and worthless, too, in the eyes of the editor and the public."

In order that the managing editor of this Middle West newspaper may understand the position of the publicity director I will cite a personal experience:

For some months I was publicity director for a large motion picture corporation. During my early tenure of office I was given a free hand, allowed to send stories out that my daily newspaper experience had taught me were of news value, with the result that I received from our clipping service an average of about 6,000 clippings a month.

One day I was called to the office of the president of the corporation and was informed that in the future every piece of publicity, every story that left my department, must contain his name. I protested, informing him that he would make himself ridiculous not only in the eyes of the trade, but also in the eyes of the general public, and that eventually such an order would come back as a boomerang. I told him that to incorporate his name in every story it would be necessary in many instances to drag it in by the bootstraps.

The answer I received to my protest was that if I would not find some manner by which his name would appear in every story I and the men in my department were incompetent.

The result was that in the following few weeks after the instructions had been issued when a five-line story left my department at least two lines of it were devoted to dragging in the name of the president of the corporation by the bootstraps. My clippings dropped from six thousand monthly to less than two thousand. The orders were still in force when I severed my connections with the corporation. Apparently they still are in force, judging from the publicity now emanating from that company.

I cite this as an instance so that the motion picture editors may know that the publicity directors are not footfree. The motion picture editors may see many foolish stories come to their desks because of this fact. They should not hold the publicity directors responsible for all of these foolish stories.

There are probably about five different angles that can be taken on motion picture publicity. In other words, the motion picture editors of five daily newspapers may hold views none of which are similar. To please all of these editors, therefore, it is necessary to provide them with stories along five different lines. As yet no motion picture outfit has attempted to do this. Some day the head of one of the large companies may realize the value of such procedure and obtain the services of a publicity director who knows what the individual newspapers want and who will serve them with that kind of material.

In conclusion, the difficulty appears to be that the heads of the motion picture corporations have failed to realize the vital value of publicity to their business. They appear to know in a general way that their company needs publicity. Their knowledge largely comes from the fact that a circus must advertise, theaters must have press agents and that the motion picture is a kindred industry.

When the leaders in the motion picture industry awaken to the fact that the publicity director is of just as great importance to them as is the sales manager; that the publicity department is more than just an unnecessary evil; that during a business depression it should be the last and not the first department to suffer from curtailment; that the public desires news of product and not stories for the personal aggrandizement of the head of the company, then, and not until then, will the publicity directors in the business be able to furnish the daily newspapers with the service these papers desire.

Trimble Engages Players for New Company

Director of Washington Motion Picture Corporation Selects Support for Tyrone Power.

SARAH TRUAX (Mrs. Charles S. Albert) has been engaged by the Washington Motion Picture Corporation to support Tyrone Power in the first subject to be made at the studios in Minnehaha Park, beginning May 15. Mrs. Albert and Mr. Power have played together on the speaking stage.

Mrs. Albert recently completed a New York engagement, where she was starred in "The Garden of Allah." She has done work in pictures in California. In the initial Power production in Spokane she will play the part of the wife.

C. J. Ward, general manager of the company, has received word from Larry Trimble, general director, now in New York, announcing that he has engaged Wellington Playter, Evelyn Brent and Duncan McRae. Mr. Power has closed his New York engagement and left for California en route for Spokane.

Dinner to N. J. Sennott a Big Event

Departing Business Manager of Paramount Exchange Honored by Sales Force and Friends at Healy's.

THE farewell dinner tendered by the sales force of the Paramount exchange and their friends to N. J. Sennott Saturday night, May 4, was a huge success. The affair was held in the Jumbo Room of Healy's Sixty-sixth street restaurant, where a special spread and a special cabaret performance was arranged by L. Rogers, formerly connected with Healy's and now sales manager at the Paramount office which Mr. Sennott is leaving.

The dinner was given on the occasion of Mr. Sennott's leaving the Famous Players-Lasky concern to become the general manager of the new enterprise which William L. Sherry has launched, with offices in the Godfrey Building. Mr. Sennott has been associated with Mr. Sherry, and consequently with the Paramount and Famous-Lasky concern since the inception of the feature business, when Mr. Sherry opened a small office in the Times Building. He has acted as general manager for Mr. Sherry throughout this time until recently, when he became business manager for the exchange, and now again general manager for Mr. Sherry in his new concern.

The dinner was a stag affair, and in addition to the excellent "feed" there was much wine and much speechmaking and story telling. It is related that the speeches were both serious and comic. Those present were: N. J. Sennott, L. Rogers, H. Danto, A. A. Corn, J. C. Clark, W. Roosevelt, F. A. Lappen, C. J. Fitch, F. W. Langtree, W. Conlin, J. Goetz, H. Malhardo, M. Nathien, A. G. Whyte and S. Friedman.

Sabbatarians Win Battle in Sherbrooke

Lord's Day Alliance Will Now Move on Montreal—Exhibitors Prepared to Put Up Real Fight.

THE moving picture theaters of Sherbrooke, Quebec, will hold no more shows on Sundays. In other words, the Lord's Day Alliance of Canada has won its case against the local exhibitors with comparative ease under a federal blue law which dates back several score of years. Judge Mulvena, the local magistrate, imposed fines of $20 and costs on the managers of the Casino and Princess theaters. This was the minimum fine under the statutes for the charge of desecrating the Sabbath. It is interesting to note that not until the very last, when the outcome was not in doubt, did the Lord's Day Alliance openly show its hand. Up to that time the action was apparently being pressed by a local citizen in his own name. The presence of the Alliance back of the move was easily guessed, however.

The next move of the Lord's Day Alliance will be to make an attack on the Montreal exhibitors, it is generally predicted. The real battle will be fought in the Montreal courts. The victories of the Alliance at Quebec, Three Rivers and Sherbrooke have been mere skirmishes, it is declared by Montreal exhibitors, who are organized for a struggle.

Montreal is practically the last spot in Canada where Sunday moving picture shows are given regularly.

James M. Sheldon in New York

New President of Mutual Film Corporation Makes Short Visit to Look Over the Ground—Important Announcements Later.

JAMES M. SHELDON, the newly elected president of the Mutual Film Corporation, arrived in New York on Wednesday, May 8, to look over the affairs of his company in this city. He remained about a week and returned to Chicago. Mr. Sheldon said that he was not prepared as yet to make any announcement of his plans, but expected to have some very interesting news to give out at an early date.

He said that the affairs of the Mutual were in good condition financially and he hoped that his plans would effect a general revival of business all along the line. He admitted that he was feeling fine and was keen to get some of his ideas working.

ENGINEERS WILL NOT MEET AT BOSTON.

Owing to an erroneous announcement in the official call for the National Exhibitors' convention at Boston, President Jenkins of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers wishes to advise all members of that organization that there will be no meeting at Boston, but that the annual meeting will take place at Cleveland, Ohio, in October.

Frederick to Release Through Goldwyn

Will Have Her Own Company Under Direction of Willard Mack, Who Also Will Supervise Goldwyn Scenarios.

FOLLOWING the publication in the east of telegraphic dispatches from Los Angeles giving Willard Mack as authority for the report that Pauline Frederick pictures shortly will be produced by the Pauline Frederick Feature Film Company and distributed through Goldwyn, Mr. Mack, who is Miss Frederick's husband, confirmed this statement when seen at his New York home.

Going still further Mr. Mack revealed that he had assumed personal charge of Goldwyn's scenario department, with his offices at the company's big studios in Fort Lee, N. J.

Mr. Mack's association with Goldwyn is not the first appearance of this nationally-known playwright in the field of motion picture production or editing, his affiliation with the screen having begun in the days of the Biograph Company and continued virtually without interruption since that time. While busily engaged during the last four years in writing some of the greatest theatrical hits of the past decade, such as "Kick In," "Broadway and Buttermilk," "King, Queen, Jack" and "Tiger Rose," Mr. Mack has constantly contributed stories to the screen. In 1917 alone twenty-seven of his screen plays were picturized and released.

"I should say that I am merely returning to the motion picture field in a newer and bigger environment," he said. "Further interest is added to the step I have taken by the fact that in the course of my work I have been able to select and secure for production the first three stories for Miss Pauline Frederick, who, as you know, is Mrs. Mack. Miss Frederick, at the termination of her contract with the Famous Players, will be starred by the Frederick Feature Film Company, recently formed, and her productions will be released through Goldwyn. When she begins work she will be under my personal direction.

"It is natural for me to take pride in the continued advancement of Miss Frederick through the newly formed company bearing her name and in the distribution of her pictures by Goldwyn."

First National Takes Larger Quarters

Circuit Officers Will Have an Entire Floor at 6 and 8 West Forty-eighth Street.

SOME time before June 1 the head offices of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit will be moved from 18 East Forty-first street, New York, to larger quarters, occupying the entire eighth floor of the new building at 6 and 8 West Forty-eighth street.

This change has been necessitated by the steady increase in the volume of business carried on by the circuit since its formation one year ago. With the release of the first of the Chaplin comedies and the taking over of "Tarzan of the Apes" and "My Four Years in Germany" for distribution throughout the United States and Canada the suite of offices on Forty-first street soon became too crowded for comfort or efficiency.

The new offices have been finished throughout in mahogany and laid out in such a way that every department will have plenty of light and air.

Spacious quarters have been reserved on the Forty-eighth street side of the building for the directors' meeting room and the executive offices of J. D. Williams and H. O. Schwalbe. The doors of these two administrators of the circuit's destiny will be found to open as readily in the future as they have in the past to any one with ideas that fit into the co-operative policy which is being applied so successfully to the task of film distribution.

POPULAR CHANGES ITS QUARTERS.

The Popular Pictures Corporation, formerly of 218 West Forty-second street, has moved its offices to 220 West Forty-second street, on the tenth floor. In connection with their elaborate offices they have also fixed up a fine projecting room.

The principal business of the Popular Pictures Corporation hereafter will be to purchase negatives, advance moneys to producers and to market films throughout the world.

The company also announces that the new picture with Florence Reed, Frank Mills and Jack Jackson, the boy actor who made such a remarkable impression for his portrayal of Abe Lincoln as a boy in the Paramount serial "The Son of Democracy," is now being completed and is as yet unnamed and will be handled by the Popular Pictures Corporation, of which A. J. Bimberg is general sales manager.

Poor Mutt Struts His Brief Hour on Stage

Famous Vagrant Canine, Co-Player With Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life," Dies from Grief.

A PALL of sorrow was thrown over the Chaplin studios last week by the death of Mutt, that now famous white mongrel pup, co-star with the inimitable Charlie in "A Dog's Life." After a siege of illness of four weeks' duration, with each day gradually drawing Mutt closer to the end, the petted idol of the comedian is in his final resting place. The veterinary, who watched over the dog with the same care that would have been given a child, found his skill no match for a broken heart.

Mutt's untimely end was hastened by self-starvation. Although succulent hamburgers, rich bowls of real milk and tempting dog biscuits were placed before him he would not partake. The absence of his master, who was touring the southern states on behalf of the third Liberty Loan, denied the animal the one thing he wanted—the loving attention of the master who rescued him from the realm of the down and outs.

As far as it is known Mutt came into the world friendless. He appeared at the Chaplin plant a cowering canine vagrant. Charlie befriended the pup, and it was not long before they were fast friends. There was no one excepting the comedian who seemed to interest Mutt. The dog was with the star from early morning until long after work was done for the day. Charlie always fed Mutt himself.

Mutt never could get used to Charlie's absence from the studio, and no one could make him understand that his master would be back some day. Every hour found the little animal anxiously waiting outside of the star's dressing room, and each day Mutt's refusal to accept the food that was offered him was the cause of the loss of more strength. Finally Mutt collapsed.

A little mound of earth, close to the spot where Mutt, in the character of Scraps, dug up the purse of money for his master in "A Dog's Life," is his resting place. The grave is surrounded by old cans, rags, bottles and other refuse. There are no floral tributes—just cans. That was the way Mutt lived. The tombstone is not of granite, but it is an old shoe, and on the sole is crudely scratched: "Mutt; died April 29th—A Broken Heart."

UNIVERSAL EMPLOYEES TO BUY AMBULANCE.

Universal Film Company employees have started a fund for the purpose of purchasing an automobile ambulance to be presented to the National Corps for American War Relief for use on the battlefront. Prices have been obtained which show that the ambulance, equipped according to Government regulations and including shipping charges to Europe, will cost approximately $1,000. This figure does not include any extras. It is the desire of the Universal employees to have their ambulance supplied with a complete set of extras, including four extra spare wheels with tires and a duplicate of all engine and motor parts. These extra parts will add 25 per cent. to the first cost.

According to advices received during the recent German drive the Allies lost a large number of ambulances, which must be replaced at the earliest possible moment.

POUCHER TOURING EASTERN EXCHANGES.

D. A. Poucher, of the home office staff of the Mutual Film Corporation, has left the executive offices, Chicago, on a visit to eastern branch offices in the capacity of special representative. The first stop on his trip was at the Buffalo exchange.

Harry Harvey, Director of "The Lion's Claw" Serial, and a Group of His Able Assistants.

Tom North Wins a Real Job

Popular and Able Film Man Appointed Pathe Division Manager with Jurisdiction in the East.

TOM NORTH, one of the best known and most popular men in the big Pathe organization, and editor of the company's official house organ, the Pathe Sun, has been appointed division manager with jurisdiction extending over the entire eastern district. Friends in the amusement world from coast to coast will learn with pleasure of Mr. North's promotion. The eastern district is assured of a live, wide-awake expert with boundless energy, a remarkable personality and a business man who is strong on the "square deal." Mr. North's appointment follows closely on those of Ralph O. Proctor for the middle western and W. S. Wessling for the southern districts, to work under the direction of Sales Manager F. C. Quimby.

Tom North.

For more than a score of years Tom North has been associated with successful ventures in the field of amusement. His first conection was with Price's floating operas, showing on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. Then he was with Jule Walters' old-time melodramas. He was with Gentry Brothers' show, with Charles Whittaker, and with Lincoln J. Carter. He also conducted dramatic shows for Arthur C. Hastings, and was the director of the Leffley-Bhattan company. He was press man for the Ringling Brothers' Circus for several years and booked and directed road attractions for Harry Askin for three years. In San Francisco, Mr. North organized and directed sixteen road companies at one time on five Kleine shows.

Later Mr. North was in charge of the V-L-S-E Seattle office. The movement for adequate advertising of motion pictures in the Seattle newspapers received its first impetus through him. Seattle still ranks foremost in the opinion of many as a result of the pioneer work done by Mr. North.

Tom North joined Pathe as manager of the super-feature department, handling special engagements of such features as "Les Miserables" and "The German Curse in Russia." When Tarleton Winchester took charge of all publicity Mr. North became editor of the Pathe Sun and has handled this branch of Pathe's exploitation work with marked ability and success. His appointment as division manager is in every way a reward of merit.

Mark Gates Opens Dayton Theater

Description of Beautiful Ohio House, Believed to Be Equal to the Best in the Country.

THAT the new Dayton theater, opened with impressive ceremonies on May 4 by Mark Gates, is a leader is the opinion of those high in amusement circles. It is claimed to be one of the four representative theaters of the United States, and Daytonians are proud of the work that has been accomplished in presenting motion pictures in a theater equal to any of the New York theaters. In size the new Dayton theater will be equal to any in the state and in equipment and furnishings will be second to none.

The entire building is fireproof throughout, and the question of safety has been kept constantly in mind during the construction of this new picture house. The entrance is through a broad lobby 35 feet wide, which leads to a foyer extending the whole width of the building. Wide stairways lead to the large balcony, where are also the loges, which have proved to be the most popular seats in the house. To the right of the downstairs foyer is a large checkroom, while to the left will be found several public telephones.

A feature which has received much favorable comment from laymen is the absence of posts or supports for the balcony, it being held up entirely by large cantilever trusses and girders of steel. The weight of the largest truss supporting the balcony is fifty-one tons, which will give an idea of the immense balcony. There are six exits from the first floor in addition to the entrance, which is composed of five double doors. The balcony also has six exits leading to fire escapes or cement landings. All of the exits are six feet wide. In order that proper illumination might be provided for the balcony aisles lights are set in each step so that patrons will not stumble in getting to their seats. They are so concealed that other patrons who are already seated will not be blinded by the lights.

The most beautiful part of the house is the large mezzanine floor. A large open well hole in the middle part of the mezzanine floor opens to the auditorium below. To the right and left of the mezzanine floor are the women's lounging room and the men's smoking rooms, which are furnished in line with the rest of the theater. Two aisles lead from the mezzanine to the balcony proper, and it is only a few steps to this part of the house from the lounging rooms.

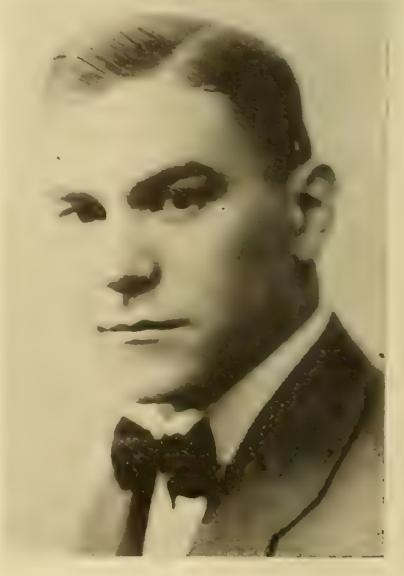
The ventilating system of the Dayton theater is the most costly yet attempted in theater construction in Ohio. The system will provide much more fresh air than is required by law. An idea of the power of the fans can be gained from the fact that two groups, which are of cast iron, weigh eighteen tons. Supply fans have also been placed on the roof to assist the ventilation during the summer months. During the winter months 52,000 cubic feet of warmed air per minute will be thrown into the auditorium and in the summer this will be increased to 290,000 cubic feet of fresh air with the help of the roof fans. There are no wall fans.

Another feature is the location of the picture machine booth in the space under the balcony floor in such a way that it is entirely concealed from the main floor as well as from the balcony. The projection openings are under the front rail of the balcony.

Leif Gihbsson

LEIF GIHBSSON, a partner of J. L. Nerlein, Ltd., Christiania, Norway, and the firm's American representative, with offices at 309 Broadway, New York City, who lately returned from abroad, is one of the most progressive of the younger men in the motion picture industry.

His company is the exclusive distributor in Norway, Sweden and Denmark for the Simplex Projector, manufactured by the Precision Machine Company, Inc., 317 East Thirty-fourth street, New York.



Leif Gihbsson.

Mr. Gihbsson has been connected with J. L. Nerlein, Ltd., for eight years. He first became associated with the company in its photographic supply department and some time later entered the film exchange in Christiania, where he remained for two years. The exchange was organized four years ago in a small way and now employs two hundred persons in various capacities. It handles the Pathe program and open market features. Mr. Gihbsson passes on all films personally and judges their suitability for Scandinavian audiences.

Mr. Gihbsson buys in the American market pictures, chemicals and apparatus for laboratories, as well as having in charge the import of projection machines, accessories and supplies for the Christiania house.

In 1917 he was admitted to membership in the firm, which was established in 1878 by J. L. Nerlein as a small supply house and is now doing business on an extensive scale. It is capitalized at $300,000. J. L. Nerlein was the first man to introduce Kodak goods in Norway.

Mr. Gihbsson, who is an expert photographer, organized in 1916 the photographic department of the aviation corps of the Norwegian army.

How It Is Done at the Strand

A Discussion of Methods Which Have Actually Been Worked Out Successfully.

By Harold Edel, Managing Director.

THE presentation of "My Four Years in Germany" at the Strand marked one of the most effective patriotic shows yet offered at this theater. The bill was prepared with the idea of tying it up to the Liberty Loan Drive, the gross receipts of the week being devoted to the purchase of Liberty Bonds.

The theater inside and out was dressed in patriotic garb. In the lobby, in addition to specially prepared paintings advertising the feature, was a collection of timely paintings by C. J. Leyendecker, the famous cover artist. A special electric sign advertising the feature was built over the lobby, in addition to the usual electric sign announcing the show. Another sign announcing the fact that the gross receipts of the week would be devoted to the purchase of Liberty Bonds was placed in front of the house. Flags were used extensively in the lobby and inside the theater around the boxes, etc. A registration booth and a Liberty Loan booth were placed in the lobby. On the opening night of the show Ambassador James W. Gerard was induced to appear in person to address the audience on the Liberty Loan. At other shows prominent members from the Women's Committee, through which our purchase of bonds was made, sold bonds.

The week's show was run in conjunction with the Women's Committee, and motion pictures of a committee from the Strand presenting the key of the theater to members of the Women's Liberty Loan organization were used.

The show opened with a short overture, "Pomp and Circumstance," which was just enough to serve as a prelude to the entertainment. Gradually darkening the stage, we parted the curtains on the screen, and the pictures showing the presentation of the key of the Strand to the Women's Committee, which included Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Mrs. W. R. Hearst, Mrs. J. W. Gerard, and other noted women, were displayed; an announcement that the receipts were to be used in buying bonds was then projected, immediately followed by Winsor McCay's graphic drawings on the sinking of the Lusitania.

A little bit which worked out effectively was presented when the picture showed the Lusitania sinking. From another projector we flashed on the screen the letters S O S, which started on one end of the screen and finished on the other, the letters being written in a jerky fashion, representing a flash of electricity snapping through the sky of the picture. These pictures, with suitable music, made a great impression upon the audience, the final disappearance under the water of the Lusitania being accompanied with "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

Immediately following these pictures was a title announcing that these kinds of acts would be stopped by—and then came pictures of submarine destroyers rushing through the water. Immediately the screen was raised on a camp night scene with four soldiers at a camp fire who sang "Tenting Tonight on the Old Camp Ground," "Keep the Home Fires Burning," "Smile, Smile, Smile, Smile," and "Over There" in rapid sequence. With the last few bars the faces of Washington, Lincoln and Wilson were flashed in the sky on the drop, the screen appeared and "My Four Years in Germany" was on for the remainder of the show, with the Liberty Loan speakers appearing upon the conclusion of that picture.

The entire bill went with a bang, and, as one critic stated, the audience was kept at such a high pitch of enthusiasm throughout and there was so much applause that one would expect the audience to have become tired long before the end. Each number closely followed upon the last, allowing hardly enough time, in several instances, to distinguish a break in the heavy applause. There were no intermissions of even an instant in the early part of the bill up until the feature appeared, which itself proved a big thriller and inciter of frequent patriotic applause.

In exhibiting "My Fours Years in Germany," because of its large footage it is necessary to condense the bill generally in order to get it into the usual running time. It took considerable experiment to get the above results which proved one of the most thrilling, rapid-fire shows we have presented at the Strand. Such a show is recommended as particularly effective for exhibitors who wish to have a patriotic week, or whatever number of days they run, with modifications for smaller theaters, of course. In place of Ambassador Gerard any local civic official could be invited to open such a patriotic bill.

Conditions in British Columbia Good

So Declares W. P. Dewees, General Manager of Vancouver's First National Exchange.

W. P. DEWEES, general manager of the First National Exhibitors' Exchange, Ltd., of Vancouver, British Columbia, is still a citizen of the United States despite the fact that he has made his home in Vancouver for the past eleven years.

On a recent visit to New York representatives of the trade press met Mr. Dewees and learned from him some interesting facts regarding the exhibition and distribution of films in the Canadian provinces of the Northwest.

W. P. Dewees.

"The co-operative idea behind the First National Exhibitors' Circuit has taken hold of our exhibitors in Western Canada strongly," said Mr. Dewees. "For a long while past the tendency has been toward the open market, which gives the exhibitor freedom of selection.

"The Rex is not one of the largest houses in the Dominion; seating, in fact, less than 1,400 people. But we have a loyal clientele, and by increasing the number of shows per day when occasion warrants we frequently play to 25 per cent. of the population of Vancouver during a week's run. In the case of both 'Tarzan' and 'A Dog's Life' I believe the percentage ran much higher."

When Mr. Dewees was asked why he did not build a house twice the size of his present theater he replied:

"You see Vancouver was laid out in such a way that all the blocks are much smaller than they are in most American cities, being about half the size of the square here in New York, and the result is it is extremely difficult to find a suitable piece of property on which to put up a really big house as they go in the United States.

"How has the war affected moving pictures in British Columbia? Well, during the first year or two business was undeniably hard hit, but conditions are now adjusting themselves, and people are patronizing the films more generously than ever. We are taxed from every possible angle, however, and have to take in considerably more money to make a reasonable profit. There are eight forms of taxation that strike us directly as business men and theater owners and two or three other indirect means of raising revenue that we know we have to conform to, although I could not for the life of me explain just how all the taxes are applied."

HOPPER JOINS METRO'S WESTERN FORCES.

E. Mason Hopper, one of the best-known directors on the Pacific coast, has joined the directing forces at Metro's studios in Hollywood. Mr. Hopper started to work at once, guiding Edith Storey in the picture drama "As the Sun Went Down," following "The Demon," which is being assembled, cut and titled.

Mr. Hopper is one of the young directors. He has served with the Paramount and K.-B.-Triangle forces, and held the megaphone with such players as Vivian Martin, Gail Kane, Alma Rubens, Wallace Reid and House Peters. He was the creator of the George Ade Fables as interpreted on the screen.

Before starting as a director, Mr. Hopper had been a newspaper man, cartoonist and a vaudeville headliner.

General in Midst of Big Year

Big Exchange Organization Now Handles Product of Thirty-one Separate Motion Picture Producers.

THE General Film Company is now releasing the product of thirty-one separate motion picture manufacturers, tripling its list of producing clients since last fall.

From an official of the General Film Company comes a statement reviewing the increase in activities of this organization, a statement that easily accounts for the recent shift of the headquarters to a more modern location at 25 West Forty-fourth street, New York; the removal of the New York exchange to the ninth floor of 729 Seventh avenue, formerly occupied by the Paramount exchange; the removal of the Chicago, Philadelphia, Washington and Montreal exchanges to more desirable quarters, and many other improvements which have been made known from time to time.

The most important phase of General Film's larger scope is the increase on its product lines. Everything from a huge program group of star releases down to a single-reel educational release of limited edition, the product handled by the company embraces every imaginable subject, and the distribution ranges from the whole of the United States and Canada down to one specified state.

"General Film Company is able to care for a multitude of accounts like this," said the official, "because its sole business is that of a service company. Any motion picture product of merit can find in General Film a route to its market. We are handling now a volume of business such as the company has not had in recent years. This does not show completely in regular weekly releases because not all of our clients produce on the traditional weekly schedule. In fact, isolated special releases of all lengths are now being routed through our exchanges that formerly were sold through state rights exchanges. The owners of these films are convinced that one statement a week from one responsible concern covering the whole field economically and intensively is just about the right thing.

"General Film did not start its service expansion at the easy end. It started with the biggest undertaking of its career—with the acceptance by Hodkinson Service of General Film as its medium for serving the country with Paralta Plays. Our company felt big enough to tackle this, and quickly proved itself to be in that our exchanges already have one and one-half million dollars' worth of business laid out on the product.

"General Film's plan for handling releases from many sources in one central organization has benefits that now are thoroughly understood. The chief of these benefits is the elimination of extravagant duplication in the physical distribution of film."

General Film states that a great deal more of new product is under negotiation at this time, and that future announcements may be expected of considerable trade interest.

THREE CHANGES IN GENERAL'S OFFICES.

Three changes in the management of its exchanges were announced during the week by General Film Company. H. K. Evans, well known in theatrical and moving picture circles, has assumed charge of the Minneapolis branch. He was formerly manager of the Pathe exchange at St. Louis and has had a wide selling experience.

Irving C. Jacocks, a former General Film employee, has returned to assume the management of the New Haven General Film office, succeeding W. V. Hart, who will in the future be attached to the New York City exchange.

H. E. Elder has been transferred from the St. Louis office, which he managed for a long time, and he now takes charge of the Washington office of General.

CRANDALL AUDITOR IN WAR SERVICE.

Henry O. Gartner, chief auditor of the Crandall Amusement Co., Washington, was called to the colors and with the rank of captain placed at the head of the disbursing section of the Ordnance Department of Baltimore City. Fritz Hoffmann, of Washington, has been engaged to fill this important position and entered upon his new duties May 6.

LOCKWOOD GOES INTO MOUNTAINS.

With his director, Fred J. Balshofer, and members of his supporting cast, Harold Lockwood has left Los Angeles and gone into the mountains back of Pine Crest, Cal., to make a number of scenes for Metro's "Lend Me Your Name," an adaptation by Mr. Balshofer and John B. Clymer, of Francis Perry Elliott's novel of that name.

Allen Promoted by Famous Players

Former Manager of San Francisco Office to Be Special Representative to Exchanges.

J. W. ALLEN, formerly manager of the San Francisco office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been promoted to the important position of special representative to exchanges, and has just arrived in New York to take up activities in connection with his new post. As has already been announced, Myron H. Lewis, formerly manager of the Los Angeles exchange, has been made manager of the San Francisco office, and J. J. Halstead, formerly assistant manager at Los Angeles, has been made manager of that office. Just prior to his departure, as the World has told, Mr. Allen was given a farewell dinner, attended by all the local exchangemen and leading exhibitors.

J. W. Allen.

Mr. Allen takes over his new duties after eleven years' association with the motion picture industry, during which time he was chiefly connected with the exchange business. He started at the bottom as an operator and later became an exhibitor, thus gaining actual experience in this branch of the industry, which proved a great assistance to him later in meeting and overcoming the problems confronting the exhibitors he served. Mr. Allen has been managing exchanges for the past seven years, his early experience in this field of the business having been gained as a booker and salesman. In fact, he has filled practically every position in the exhibiting and exchange fields and has a thorough knowledge of the business from the showman's viewpoint as well as from the distributor's angle.

For the past three years Mr. Allen has been manager of the San Francisco branch handling Paramount and Artcraft pictures under District Manager Herman Wobber. In 1915 his office won Paramount's first prize in the exchange contest for the greatest amount of business obtained in ninety days. In addition to the silver cup his office was given $1,000 from Paramount and $1,000 from Mr. Wobber to divide among the staff. In 1917 Mr. Allen made a trip to China, Japan and the Philippine Islands, covering a period of six months, during which time he placed the Paramount product in these countries. He is the first exchange manager to institute the direct-by-mail campaign to the theater patron in behalf of the exhibitor, which is now widely used throughout the country.

Mr. Allen's headquarters will be in New York.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

THE nifty little "dashes" we have been using to separate one endeavor from the other in our efforts to consume valuable space, have appeared with a purpose. We know that some day the necessity of emphasizing the value of Thrift and War Savings Stamps would be at hand—and here it is. What with a Liberty Loan and other cash requirements of the Government immediately pressing, War Savings Stamps have never been officially introduced. During the past week millions of them were sold in an effort to "start something."

Olga Petrova is doing a real "bit" on her tour of the country. She will make "personal appearance" at numerous theaters, exacting that the public shall then buy for every orchestra seat that is occupied one Thrift Stamp, and for every pair of balcony seats one Thift Stamp. Mr. and Mrs. Public will, of course, retain these stamps as their own and no one, unfortunately, will never be able to record the thousands of families who will start the game of saving Thrift Stamps because of Mme. Petrova's inspiringly patriotic purpose.

Long before she "went into pictures," or even played a dramatic role on the American stage, Mme. Petrova entertained millions of vaudeville devotees with her extremely artistic and effective "imitations." The Rambler has written, in his day, several miles of newspaper comment on theatrical personages, and Mme. Petrova inspired some few "stickfuls" through her cleverness. The motion picture exhibitor who has the good fortune to be honored (advisedly written) by a Petrova appearance, is going to have (take it from me) an attraction that will make a hit with his audiences—and boost the sale of Thrift Stamps.

Thrift Stamps are the best exemplification of "one thing after another" that ever was invented. After the first 25-cent stamp is pasted on a sheet that holds 16 the itch to fill the remaining 15 spaces becomes acute. When $4 is thus accumulated in 25-cent Thrift Stamps the game is played along by adding a stipulated sum (it's 17 cents for May) handed over in cash to any postmaster or authorized agent of the Government in return for which the purchaser receives a War Saving Stamp of $5 face value at maturity, January 1, 1923. Thus the game proceeds; every 16 Thrift Stamps pasted on a card is exchangeable for a War Savings Stamp—with the additional cash payment increasing at the rate of 1 cent each month that passes.

There is going to be another Liberty Loan and it would be mighty nice if those who buy War Savings Stamps could turn their cards in at face value ($4) either in full or as part payment for Liberty Bonds. Thus the Government would, meanwhile, be getting in the cash, and when the cards were surrendered the interest on the W. S. S. (which figures 4 per cent. compounded quarterly until 1923) would stop. This interest would then be converted and continued as the Liberty Bond "trailer" to be clipped in coupons by the citizenry.

Don't forget, in making a collection of Thrift and War Savings Stamps, that this is the first time in history that the Government has allowed commoners to purchase an interest in the greatest institution on earth—the United States of America. Government Bonds have always been matters of imagination with everybody except the super-rich. They have always been at a premium, with $1,000 the lowest denomination. It's a mighty fine feeling when you slap down 25 cents (that Johnny Walker used to get), to realize that you are buying an interest in a wonderful and glorious Government. If you never experienced that feeling you've missed a great little sensation.

Here's what it amounts to:
25 cents—1 Thrift Stamp.
16 Thrift Stamps—1 War Savings Stamp.
20 War Savings Stamps—1 War Savings Certificate.
1 War Savings Certificate—$100 in 1923.

Since last December, when Thrift Stamps were first placed on sale, the people of the United States have invested more than 193 million in the sticky little life savers and fortune builders, up to and including April 30.

The motion picture industry will immediately begin an organized effort to boost the sale of Thrift Stamps. Just now Chairman Adolph Zukor, of the special committee, is busy with the Red Cross drive; but the move to sell Thrift Stamps in copious quantities, as promoted by the National Association of the Motion Picture Inrustry, will accumulate momentum with every passing day. C. H. Farrell will be actively in charge, with his headquarters in the Times Building in the N. A. M. P. offices.

Probably there will be enough propaganda appealing to the patriotic side of human nature to allow for a word here addressed to the selfishness of mortal man.

Why should a man or woman or child be begged or coaxed and urged, almost bribed, to do something for THEMSELVES? (P. S.—Upper case press agents, please write.)

By and large the most selfish thing a person can do is to invest money, with the best interest ever paid for unquestioned security in something he has never before been able to buy.

The fact that the money loaned to his Government helps to keep the battleships of the Hun bottled up in safe harbor; that our own coast is thus freed from hellish assault, may be classified again as selfishness—if it will sell Thrift Stamps.

O, Look-ee! E Pluribus Fillum!

For the reader's lighter moments, an inside view of some three-cornered correspondence is given in a collection of letters given out by Terry Ramsaye, director of publicity for the Mutual Film Corporation. The letters are from T. E. Mortensen, of Amusements, a Minneapolis motion picture trade publication; F. H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and Mr. Ramsaye. Here follows the triangle:

Mr. Mortensen Wrote to Mr. Ramsaye.

"I am enclosing carbon copy of letter from F. H. Elliott, Secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which is self-explanatory; also enclosing copy of articles referred to.

"I would appreciate you writing me regarding this matter so that I could dwell intelligently upon the subject in an article for Amusements.

"Thanking you for giving this your immediate attention and with best personal wishes, I remain."

Mr. Elliott Wrote to Mr. Mortensen.

"Our attention has been called to an article which appears on page 6 of your April 27 issue setting forth the fact that 'To Terry Ramsaye, that hustling director of publicity of the Mutual Film Corporation, belongs the honors for having had introduced into Congress a bill authorizing the coinage of a 15-cent piece.'

"For your information we desire to advise that Mr. Ramsaye had nothing whatever to do with the introduction of this bill; he didn't even know it was going to be introduced; he doesn't even know the representative in Congress that introduced the bill. The idea of someone endeavoring to take credit for activity which they had nothing whatever to do with is pure bunk and it is about time some of the motion picture publications ascertain as to the authenticity of some of the press copies received by them from such fellows as Ramsaye.

"The bill was introduced at the suggestion of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, of which the Mutual Film Corporation is not even a member of. Will you kindly make this plain in your forthcoming issue so that credit will be given to the organization which is doing things for the industry and not by individuals who are talking about doing them."

—w s s—

Mr. Ramsaye Wrote to Mr. Mortensen.

"Anent yours of May 6 and enclosure from one F. H. Elliott:

"I conceived and planted the idea of a fifteen-cent coin. Mr. Elliott, if he had any function in the flowering of the idea into legislation, operated as fertilizer. May his aromatic fame increase.

"The article in your paper to which he objects was as you know written in your own office.

"Despite Mr. Elliott, it is a matter of common knowledge in the industry that the fifteen-cent piece was my idea and that I gave it national and international publicity something more than a year ago, long before others were interested in it. The files of any trade paper and most newspapers will prove that.

"Further, I gained support for the movement from John C. Shedd, of Marshall Field & Co., Chicago; the United Cigar Stores, the Perkins publications and a large number of big national interests, including I may add, a number of legislators. This is all substantiated by contemporary publication, and of dates prior to any interest expressed by Mr. Elliott.

"It is interesting to recall also that Mr. Elliott, while engaged in a campaign to force or decoy the Mutual Film Corporation into membership in his National Association, wrote a letter to John R. Freuler congratulating the Mutual Film Corporation on the fifteen-cent piece idea.

"The Mutual refused to join the National Association.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

"Meanwhile Mr. Elliott appropriated the 15-cent piece idea and sought to make capital of it. When the bill was introduced in congress—as he says quite without my knowledge—the Elliott publicity studiously avoided crediting me or my concern with the idea.

"Then along came a number of trade papers and ran stories about my part in the matter as father of the idea and movement. These stories were spontaneous and voluntary. They brought the matter to my attention and I did send out further stories about the origin of the idea, claiming nothing, however, concerning the bill in Congress. I did not and do not propose to let Mr. Elliott hide my light under his pint cup.

"I note that Mr. Elliott in his letter says: 'It is about time that some of the motion picture publications ascertain as to the authenticity of some of the press copies received by them from such fellows as Ramsaye.'

"I have not the honor of the acquaintance of Mr. Elliott, but I know 'such fellows' as he.

"I can leave to the open forum of opinion my repute in the film trade. I can leave to the same court judgment concerning attempts at piracy and mayhem.

"A salute to Mr. F. H. Elliott!"

Here is a rare sample of cameracraft—a still picture of Douglas Fairbanks in motion. Bennie Zeidman originated the idea and ground the crank. It will be observed that Mr. Fairbanks is doing this daring stunt while the train is at a standstill.

Perish the thought that all of his dashing deeds are accomplished under similar circumstances, with the hazard diminished in the taking and accentuated by trickery in completing the work for public inspection!

Then, too, comes the lingering suspicion that Mr. Fairbanks, in thus hurriedly diving into the steps of a standing passenger-coach, is trying to escape the pro-German propaganda said to be so relentlessly pursuing him. At all events doing a hand-stand on a hand-bag seems worth the space consumed in illustrating the trick.

Why not lump the whole lot and commemorate all at once: the first exhibitor, the first operator, the first statement from a film magnate to the trade press, the first reviewer, the first state right feature, the first co-operative plan, the first program, the first picture theater, the first Empy press agent, the first serial, the first educational, the first film inspector, and first aid to the injured?

Kann Gets Line on Thrift Stamps.

George E. Kann, of the executive staff of the Universal, has organized a "Stamp-a-Day" club among the employes of Universal for the purpose of disposing of the maximum amount of thrift stamps. More than ninety per cent. of the employes of the home office have joined the club and purchase at least one stamp a day from Mr. Kann, who acts as sales manager for the club.

The thrift stamp sales department is open one hour each day from 12 to 1 o'clock during which time the approach to Mr. Kann's office resembles the entrance to the Broadway theater. There is a line stretching all around the third floor of 1,600 Broadway awaiting turns to purchase a stamp.

A "conventionalized fandango" is promised by Viola Dana's publicists for her appearance in "The Only Road," a forthcoming Metro. As star of the new photoplay Miss Dana flings her toes about in thorough abandon atop a rough table in a Western saloon. The reason she calls her dance a conventionalized fandango is because it is a sort of rhythmic potpourri. It is part fandango, part tarantella, part cora de capello and part Hawaiian hula. In other words, Miss Dana doesn't do all of it with her feet.

There is something about railroad travel that makes moving picture magnates eager to talk for print. Some of the most important discussions of the war have issued from press departments of great film concerns just as the boss was about to start west or immediately after said boss had arrived in town from a train-journey beyond the Hudson.

The distance traveled seems to have an important influence upon the nature of the statement. Philadelphia and back runs about one column on palm oil and its influence upon missionary work in Zanzibar. Pittsburgh and back, by way of Washington, inspires a somewhat lengthier opinion on the usefulness of whales in combating Hell-Hun attacks upon French cathedrals.

Chicago limbers up the boss to four-column suppleness, with the opportunity for a special edition when he makes a round trip to Hollywood. In these transcontinental jaunts the entire war is stopped, the Balkan situation is untangled and the Rocky Mountains are sown to wheat.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

Viola Flees and Wins from Scratch.

In her newest picture for Metro, Viola Dana has a scene in which she makes a raid on the assorted clothing of half a dozen small boys who are frolicking in a swimming hole. She had bobbed her hair and attired herself as a youth.

One of the youngsters engaged for the scene was just all boy, with a face full of freckles and a yellow dog full of fleas. Miss Dana didn't know he had a dog until after she had worn the lad's jacket. Then came the rub—or rather, the scratch.

"A case of 'The Poor Little Itch Girl,'" remarked Director Frank Reicher, to whom Miss Dana brought her tale of woe. —Metro Publicity.

Smaller They Are Bigger They Buy.

It happened like this. Power's Publicity Purveyor Landon, with a party of three, attended a performance of "My Four Years in Germany" (not the Funkhouserized version), and being very diminutive in stature, he thought he was secure from observation. And he was until they started the Liberty Bond sale.

Then appeared Willa Holt Wakefield, who made a very earnest talk. Right in the middle of it she stopped and, pointing an accusing finger at a certain seat about ten rows back, she exclaimed:

"I see you, you Pleiades boy." Now "boy" and buy are nearly akin, and so he did, although he was then nearly bled white.

The saddle is of heavy black leather and is inlaid throughout with silver, while the bridle is a mass of silver and gold emblems. Mr. Farnum also bought a bucking saddle worth $300 and will use this in the scenes of bronco-busting and heavy riding.

Essanay Announces Second Set of Broncho Billys

THE second set of ten revivified Broncho Billy dramas are now offered by Essanay and are rapidly being booked. The first set of ten, which began March 1 with "Broncho Billy's Leap," and ended with "Broncho Billy's Last Deed," on May 3, are having such a run that it was decided to issue the second block beginning with May 10 and running to July 12.

These are all western dramas of the hills and plains and are fifteen minutes in length. New paper and new prints with exceptional photography by Essanay's new process add much to the pictures. A complete line of advertising material is being issued on the pictures. Special mailing cards in three colors also are being sent out to all exhibitors announcing the plays.

The Kleine exchanges, through which the pictures are being released, announce that already there have been an unusually large number of bookings for the second set and that there is a great demand among exhibitors for western dramas. The majority of exhibitors are booking the entire block, planning to run one each week on a certain night and advertising to this effect.

The next set of ten are: "Broncho Billy's Squareness," "Broncho Billy's Secret," "Broncho Billy and the Greaser," "Broncho Billy's Fatal Joke," "Broncho Billy's Grit," "Broncho Billy's True Love," "Broncho Billy and the Western Girls," "Broncho Billy Wins Out," "Broncho Billy Trapped" and "Broncho Billy Rewarded."

George Now a Fox Director.

William Fox announces the addition of Burton George to his directorial staff. Mr. George is a director of long standing, most of whose work has been done on the West Coast, but he will make his pictures for Mr. Fox in the East. The first will star George Walsh, and bears the tentative title of "The Sleepwalker."

Carl Harbaugh, under whose direction the last two Walsh subjects have been filmed, is to direct Peggy Hyland in her third Fox production, "Other Men's Daughters." The features Mr. Harbaugh has made include "The Scarlet Letter," "The Derelict," "The Broadway Sport," "When False Tongues Speak" "All for a Husband," "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal," and "Brave and Bold."

Both directors began screening the stories for their new charges last week in the studios at Fort Lee, N. J.

"Cynthiana" Is Second Wolfville.

"Cynthiana," the second of the two-part Wolfville Tales, a Broadway Star feature released this week by General Film Company, is an entertaining story of the West. Cynthiana rules Wolfville with a despot's will and captures a husband, "one of them human dificits," in the bargain. Patricia Palmer as Cynthiana gives a delightful interpretation of this Alfred Henry Lewis tale, which retains all of the charm and interest of the original narrative. The titles are taken directly from the story thus preserving a large measure of the droll western humor provided by the author.

Jack Dill, George Holt, Texas Allen, William Lester and Hattie Buskirk provide an excellent group of characterizations.

Following "Cynthiana," General Film will release an O. Henry story, "The Enchanted Profile," in which Agnes Ayres and Evart Overton play the leading roles.

Montana Greets Elsie Ferguson.

The Elsie Ferguson company has arrived in Browning, Mont., to begin the production of "Hearts of the Wilds," for Artcraft release, under the direction of Marshall Neilan. Advance notice of the arrival of the players had spread through the community, and the local band and hundreds of citizens awaited the train at the station. As the star stepped off the train she was greeted with rousing cheers and was escorted to the hotel by a delegation of the leading men of the city, led by the band.

The company has taken possession of a large ranch, and notwithstanding the shortage of labor in the west, but little difficulty has been experienced in securing the large ensembles of people required for the picture.

After the ranch scenes have been taken, the company will go into Yellowstone Park to film the scenes requiring the use of the soldiers and the military post.

Somme Film Now a Four-Reeler.

Pathe's official British war film, "The Battle of the Somme," released some time ago, has now been re-edited and condensed into a four-reel feature. Prints already have been sent to Dallas, St. Louis, Cleveland, New York and Seattle exchanges. Considerable demand is reported for the picture in this form, owing to developments at the front.

Lion Scaring Stage Heroes Slain by Heroic Stage Carpenter

THE last scenes in the spectacular Paramount picture starring Lina Cavalieri have been taken by Edward Jose at the Fort Lee studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, marking the completion of the biggest production thus far undertaken by this company in the east. Previously listed as "Gismonda," it will be released under the title of "Love's Conquest," the title symbolizing the power of love in leveling all barriers and establishing a plebian as the consort of the Duchess of Athens.

The taking of the sensational lion scene, in which Courtenay Foote as Almerio the huntsman, rescues the child of the Duchess from the lion's den, nearly resulted in a tragedy. The lion was a magnificent specimen, whose record of killing three trainers should have led to its execution, but its present owner and trainer, J. A. Cahill, believed he had controlled it sufficiently to hold its temper in check. A thrilling scene was enacted in which Foote succeeded in beating the lion off and scaling the walls with the child in his arms. The lion had become thoroughly enraged, and when the trainer sought to drive it back in its cage it leaped upon him and attacked him.

There were five hundred persons taking part in the scene, and pandemonium reigned. The lion picked up the form of Cahill and stood at bay, undaunted by the missiles which were hurled at it and the streams from fire extinguishers striking its face and eyes. In the studio John Abbott, Jr., a carpenter, heard the cries of the mob and the roars of the lion, and snatching up a fire axe rushed to the scene. He charged upon the beast and brought the axe down upon its head. Stunned, the lion dropped the trainer, and twice more Abbott swung his weapon upon the skull of the animal, killing him. Cahill will survive.

Report Heavy Bookings on "The Caillaux Case"

REPORTS from the offices of William Fox indicate that "The Caillaux Case," the film expose of the alleged pro-German plot of Bolo Pasha and the notorious "Caillaux ring" in France, has aroused the keenest interest among the exhibitors. This interest has been intensified by the recent execution of Bolo and by the trial in Paris of members of the staff of the notorious Bonnet Rouge, the pacifiist organ with which former Premier Caillaux was associated before his imprisonment.

Advance bookings are declared by Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, to exceed those of any other Standard picture.

The Fox organization bases this remarkable demand for bookings on the claim that the "Caillaux Case" is a most timely photoplay. Besides the great popularity of France and her people in America and the shattering by the United States Government of the Bolo-Caillaux conspiracy to betray her have added a patriotic interest to the picture which makes its appeal all the stronger.

"It is remarkable how the advance announcements of the Caillaux Case" have taken hold of the trade," said Mr. Fox last week. "We had no more than reported the completion of the picture than inquiries for prices and other information began to pour in from practically the whole country. It seems that fortunately we struck the iron just when it was hot and when the principals in the Caillaux affair were very much in the public eye."

Pelzman With American Standard.

S. D. Pelzman has been appointed manager of the New York exchange of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York. Sam Pelzman has had a successful career as an exchange man. Five years ago he joined the Universal, and was assigned the duty of handling such successes as "Traffic in Souls," "Samson," "Neptune's Daughter," "Where Are My Children," and many others whose names are well known to the exhibitor and the public. He is familiar with all angles of the business. In the New York exchange of the American Standard, Mr. Pelzman has a big proposition, which will become bigger when the policy of the company is revealed, but he is capable of handling it.

American Japanese Drama Heads Triangle May 19 Card

A DRAMA, "Who is to Blame?" featuring Jack Livingston and Maud Wayne, heads the Triangle program for May 19. A "rickshaw" driver, Taro Sam, is taken to America by his employer, Grant Barton. In the new land Taro Sam's loyalty is tested when it becomes necessary for him to sacrifice the respect and admiration of his benefactor that he may save Barton from a life of sorrow and regret.

This is a screen adaptation of the story by E. Magnus Ingleton. It was directed by Frank Borzage, and photographed by Pliney Horne. Jack Livingston has the part of the American lawyer, Grant Barton, and Maud Wayne will interpret her first dramatic part as Marion Craig. Jack Abbe will be seen as Taro Sam.

"Old Hartwell's Cub," featuring William Desmond, is the second release for the week of May 19. Mabel Richards wrote the story, while the continuity is by George E. Jenks. It relates the development of a young blacksmith whose only objects in life were the love and admiration for his drunken father. The play opens amid small town comedy and pathos, then jumps to the West, where the hero is rescued from a mob lynching as a horse thief.

William Desmond is Bill Hartwell, while Mary Warren will appear as Mary Lane. Walt Whitman and Edwin J. Brady also are in the cast. Thomas N. Heffron directed, and Alfred Gosden photographed.

The concluding release of the week is "Newspaper Clippings," a two-reel Keystone comedy formerly announced for release under date of May 12. Francis McDonald is a featured player. Claire Anderson has the leading role.

Good Screen Players in "Honor's Cross"

SCREEN players of unusual merit are in the cast of "Honor's Cross," a spectacular Selexart production distributed by Goldwyn. Rhea Mitchell, the star, gives a strong performance. In turn she is a cabaret dancer, a seamstress, and a waitress. Miss Mitchell has enjoyed a successful cinema career since foresaking the vaudeville stage. Her best screen work has been done in "The Three Musketeers," "Sealed Lips," "Gilded Youth," "Whither Thou Goest," and "On the Level."

To Herschel Mayall is intrusted the important role of Thomas Dolan, a corrupt politician. It is a part full of big opportunities, with Mayall equal to all of them. Edward Coxen is another screen player whose work in "Honor's Cross" is certain to win commendation. He has the role of Lee Stevens, a sturdy mountaineer lured to the city by Dolan.

Roy Laidlaw is admirable as "Gentleman Jim" Cabot, a former lightweight pugilist, but later a fighting heavyweight loafer. Adele Farrington as Marian Cabot, mother of Jane, does marked credit to a difficult role. Joseph J. Dowling is the typical mountaineer, the role he has.

Soldiers to See Goldwyn Pictures.

Goldwyn Pictures are to amuse and thrill American soldiers on their way to fight the foe in France. In an effort to make our boys' trip across the Atlantic as comfortable and as pleasant as possible the Community Motion Picture Bureau, acting for the Government, has arranged with Goldwyn to have six of its best productions shown for an indefinite period on transports bound for Europe.

Goldwyn Pictures have been enthusiastically received in nearly every camp throughout the country, and it is safe to predict they will prove a welcome addition to the amusement programs mapped out for the various transports.

A recent showing of a Goldwyn production at Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C., went so well that the print was kept four days. It was the same with another Goldwyn picture at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio. It was shown three days in all of the Y. M. C. A. huts.

The contract for showings on the transports provides that the films are not to be exhibited ashore.

All Metro Stars Are Preparing for an Active Summer

METRO is preparing for the busiest summer in its history. All stars and companies, both east and west, will be engaged on feature and special productions, and both New York and Hollywood studios are already buzzing with activity. The usual five-act all-star series pictures will be continued and, in addition, there will be several Screen Classics productions.

Ethel Barrymore will return to her screen endeavors in a few weeks, as soon as her season in dramatic repertoire at the Empire theater is completed, and Mme. Nazimova, who expects to bring her season of Ibsen revivals at the Plymouth theater to a close next month, will then return to the Metro studios. Emily Stevens already has returned, having completed her tour in Alan Dale's "A Woman of the Future." Miss Stevens' first picture this spring will be "A Man's World," a screen version of the play by Rachel Crothers which had a successful run on Broadway with Mary Mannering in the leading role. Herbert Blache is directing this feature production, his first since joining Metro's staff of directors de luxe.

Viola Dana, who has returned from a seven months' sojourn on the West coast, has already begun work in the New York studios on "Opportunity." John H. Collins is directing Miss Dana.

May Allison has completed production on "The Winning of Beatrice," the May Tully photoplay dealing with a society girl's success in business, and has begun work on "The Way to a Man's Heart."

Edith Storey will return from the California studios after her next production. She has just completed "The Demon" and is now making "As the Sun Went Down."

Albert Capellani is at Atlantic City preparing his script for a production with one of the screen's most celebrated players as star. Work will be begun on this at an early date.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will soon begin the interpretation of Corporal Luther A. Reed's photoplay, the working title of which is "Both Members." Charles J. Brabin will direct.

Harold Lockwood has completed the production of "Lend Me Your Name," which will have early release. It is a screen version of Francis Perry Elliott's novel of the same name, adapted and directed by Fred J. Balshofer.

Bert Lytell is remaining on the Hollywood location for "No Man's Land," which the star himself, with A. S. Le Vino, adapted from Louis Joseph Vance's delightful novel of that name. Will S. Davis is directing.

Emmy Wehlen is busily engaged on a new Katharine Kavanaugh photodrama, at present called "For Revenue Only."

Astra at Work on "Hands Up" Serial.

Word comes from Los Angeles, where Astra is hard at work on the first episodes of the new Pathe serial, "Hands Up," that it will be the best "action" serial Astra has turned out, Ruth Roland and George Chesebro playing the leads, the role created for Miss Roland in Gilson Willetts' fertile brain being better than any she has had.

Russian Atmosphere in Pearson Story.

A powerful production giving Virginia Pearson an opportunity for superb dramatic work in the character of a Russian princess who joins the revolt against the aristocrats is announced in "The Firebrand," the current special feature release from William Fox's Eastern studios.

Edmund Lawrence had charge of the direction—his second Fox play, and E. Lloyd Sheldon was the author of the scenario.

Victor Sutherland, who played opposite Miss Pearson in "Daredevil Kate," one of her greatest successes, appears in a similar capacity in her present vehicle. Mr. Sutherland appears as Julian Ross, an American in Petrograd on an important mission.

The rest of the cast includes Carleton Macy, Herbert Evans, Jane Courtney, Willard Cooley, and Nicholas Dunaew.

The drama is being described in advertising and publiicty matter, including the lithographs issued by Fox Film Corporation, as "the drama of a love that survived the fires of hate.'

Three Comedies Lead Universal for May 27

THREE comedies head the list of Universal Film Company releases for the week of May 27, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran as the chief laughmakers in a one-reeler entitled "A Ripping Time." In the Star comedies the two comedians divorce themselves from slap-stick, entirely depending upon ludicrous situations to keep their audiences in a happy frame of mind.

Alice Howell's contribution to the weekly release is the two-reeler, "Her Unmarried Life," in which the comedienne goes through two thousand feet of film at top speed.

The Nestor for the week consists of a mix-up in wives entitled "Who's Your Wife?" with Gale Henry taking the leading part.

"The Bull's Eye" will reach its seventeenth episode under the title of "In Irons."

"The Lion's Claws" is the other Universal serial running in its ninth episode in the first run houses.

The regular weekly releases also include the split reels consisting of the Universal Screen Magazine, Universal Current Events, and Universal Animated Weekly. One of the features of the screen magazine is a series of animated food conservation cartoons presented at the request of Government officials. Another feature is the picturization of trained animal acts of the speaking stage. One of the best along these lines is the picture of the trained seals.

Warm Days Suit Pathe Bathers.

Pearl White, Antonio Moreno and the supporting company in the big Pathe serial, "The House of Hate," were mighty glad to welcome the advent of warm weather, for Pearl and Tony have been enjoying (?) daily duckings at the base of the Palisades of the Hudson. The serial star and her leading man have been busy making the late episodes of this popular mystery serial on the banks of the Hudson, opposite New York, and the "water stuff" has been a bit ticklish—what with the cold wind and such.

Irene Castle Leads Strong Pathe Bill for May 19 Week

"THE MYSTERIOUS CLIENT," with Irene Castle, Episode 11 of the Pearl White serial, "The House of Hate," the second chapter of the "Britain's Bulwarks" series, Harold Lloyd in "Two-Gun Gussie" and Hearst-Pathe News Reels are included in the program releases of Pathe exchange, Inc., for the week of May 19.

Judging by advance announcements of "The Mysterious Client," Irene Castle has displayed fresh evidence of her acting talent, and this release, in which the star is supported by Milton Sills and Warner Oland, is said to be the most interesting picture that has been released with the dancing queen in a stellar role. It is an Astra production in five reels and was directed by Fred Wright. The plot is a consistently gripping one, and the feature has been beautifully mounted.

The eleventh episode of "The House of Hate" is called "Haunts of Evil," and the intrepid star of the serial, Pearl White, has thrills aplenty in this chapter. Pearl disguises herself as a woman of the underworld in this episode and camps on the trail of the Hooded Terror. There is a startling denouement guaranteed to make the twelfth episode a thing to wait for with expectancy.

Part II of "Britain's Bulwarks" is called "Messines and Its Irish Captors," and shows Messines and Wytschaete during the storming and capture by the North and South Irish regiments and Canadians. The picture shows the ruins of the villages, the indomitable Irish troops proudly carrying the trophies seized from the Huns, troops in action and resting up after one of the bloodiest battles in history, and is particularly interesting at this time.

"Two-Gun Gussie" is a one-reel comedy, produced by Rolin, with Harold Lloyd in the important role. It has to do with the youth who graduates from a musical conservatory to become a jazz lizard in the "Howling Poodle Tango Bar." He buys a book of rules on "How to be Tough" so that he may enter into the general gaiety of the place, and when he really begins to believe he can eat nails without getting indigestion the action becomes fast and furious.

Hearst-Pathe News No. 42 will be released Wednesday, May 22, and No. 43, on Saturday, May 25.

Fox Retains Name of Grey Novel on Film

ALTHOUGH it was believed at first at the William Fox offices that "Riders of the Purple Sage" would not be retained as the title of the big William Farnum De Luxe production now well in work in the West, Mr. Fox has definitely determined to keep the name of this famous Zane Grey novel for the picturized version. The chief reason for this decision, Mr. Fox says, is the desire to let exhibitors profit from the wide publicity and word-of-mouth advertising that Mr. Grey's book received.

"There are undoubtedly thousands of persons throughout the country," Mr. Fox declares, "who will welcome the opportunity of seeing the story in film form, although they never read the novel itself. They have heard of its power, and were the title changed they probably would not recognize from billboard advertising that the production is really a faithful transcript of the book.

"The temptation was strong to call it 'Lassiter,' after the name of the vigorous and virile character that Mr. Farnum is impersonating. Mr. Farnum, himself, however, was one of those who protested against any change from the original title.

"Consequently, we are using what is one of the longest titles that has ever graced any of our photoplays. We have been particularly careful in titling pictures that we did not employ many or lengthy words. Rarely have we exceeded three short words. In the majority of cases we run to two-word titles because they lend themselves so well to display on electric signs and on lithographs and in newspaper advertising."

Pathe Predicts Triumph for "The Yellow Ticket"

FANNIE WARD and the distinguished supporting company, which includes Walter Oland, Milton Sills, J. H. Gilmour, Helen Chadwick, Nicholas Dunaew, and other favorites of the screen, will register a genuine triumph in the screen version of "The Yellow Ticket" when it is released on June 2, according to statements from exchange cities where the big film is being given advance views.

"The Yellow Ticket," it will be recalled, was one of the greatest stage successes of the past decade when produced by A. H. Woods, and it ran up a record of more than 400 consecutive performances in New York. Powerful and vital as was this production, the screen version is distinctly of greater conviction, for Pathe has made use of appropriate surroundings, has augmented the cast by the addition of scores of Russian actors, and with costly interiors, each of which more than equals those in the stage production. "The Yellow Ticket" comes to the screen endorsed by Pathe as "our greatest box office and artistic triumph."

Goldwyn Making "The Service Star."

Madge Kennedy is busy at the Goldwyn Studios in Fort Lee on her newest production, an original photodrama by Charles A. Logue called "The Service Star." Despite its title, this is not a war story. The only part the great world conflict plays in the production is to serve as a sketchy background for a thrilling, intensely modern drama enacted right here at home.

Briefly, "The Service Star" tells the story of the scion of an old and respected family made a slacker by a fear which has come to him through his mother. As the heroine, Miss Kennedy becomes involved in his affairs through an innocent deception she herself originates, and as a result of which she finds herself obliged to become part of a much graver one that he is practicing.

A capable cast surrounds Miss Kennedy in this new production, which is being directed by Charles Miller.

Berman of Jewel Makes Strong Claims for "The Kaiser"

THE general manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., H. M. Berman, has issued the unique challenge to every producer and distributor of motion pictures to show a single production that has made as much money for exhibitors as has the Jewel Productions, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin."

In voicing his challenge Mr. Berman says for years it has been the habit of producers and distributors to boast of the number of bookings prior to the release date of a picture or make the claim within a few days after the release date.

"The number of bookings of a production before it has been shown," said Mr. Berman, "usually only is a proof of the efficiency of the sales force. These advance bookings are no criterion in proving the value of a picture from a box office angle.

"There have been numerous pictures that have been booked in thousands of theaters throughout the country as a result of circus advertising methods and intensive sales campaigns. The promoters of these pictures with great glee have told the exhibitors through the trade press of the tremendous booking success of the pictures. Naturally, when these productions have failed to make money for the first-run exhibitors, as a result of this fact the second, third and fourth-run exhibitors have cancelled the bookings. Nothing, however, has been said of the cancellations by the producers and distributors who pointed with such pride to the advance bookings.

"As an example of just exactly what I mean we might go back twenty months in the motion picture industry. A year ago last summer the United States was flooded with birth-control pictures. Most of these pictures offered wonderful opportunity for exploitation. The result was that they were exploited at the expense of the producers in pre-release run theaters in the largest cities, and by spending thousands of dollars in advertising these birth-control pictures they were booked in hundreds of other theaters in territory adjacent to the large cities.

"What was the result? The smaller theater owners found that birth-control pictures were put across only by the expenditure of large sums of money for exploitation. The sum that was necessary to expend in most cases was so large that there was nothing left for the exhibitor even though he played to capacity business.

"The final result was that many of these theater owners ascertained that there was a non-cancellation clause in their booking contracts, but rather than run the birth-control pictures they paid the rental demanded and put the print on the shelves.

"This situation explains my point when I say that the claim of tremendous bookings on a feature in the final analysis means very little to the individual exhibitor. Of course there are some exceptions to the rule, but they are few.

"I now challenge any distributor of motion pictures to open his books, check his film rentals on his most popular production with the receipts of the theaters that presented the production and produce one single instance where a picture has made as much money for the exhibitors of the country as has 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin.'

"The picture had a pre-release showing in Boston on March 15, where it ran for five weeks at the Globe theater. From March 15 until the present it has been shown constantly all over the country, and I have kept in touch with the box office receipts of every theater that has presented it. Out of thousands of presentations but one exhibitor failed to make money, and that man has acknowledged the failure was his fault and not the fault of the picture.

"In making this claim for 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin,' I don't even except 'The Birth of a Nation,' which is acknowledged to have played to greater receipts than any other feature photoplay, but 'The Birth of a Nation' until very recently was not presented along regular film rental lines. It was put out as a regular theatrical enterprise, played on a percentage basis.

"Present indications lead me to believe that in the near future I may be able to make the statement that 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin' was re-booked for repeat presentations in more moving picture houses than any other production. I do not make this claim, however, at this time because the picture has been released for less than two months, and it is a little early to make such claims, but the requests for repeat bookings are so large that indications are that I will be able to make and prove such a claim."

Bessie Love Has Surprise for Friends.

Reports from the West Coast indicate that when Bessie Love's next Pathe feature, "A Little Sister of Everybody" is released (in June) admirers of this captivating little star will have a surprise. For not only does Bessie Love develop a new strain in comedy-making, but she rises to a striking emotional climax

"A Dog's Life" Going Strong.

Although it is now five weeks since Charlie Chaplin returned to the screen in "A Dog's Life," his initial comedy released by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is still in such demand that thirty-three theaters played in it Greater New York during the week of May 5.

Diamond Making Initial Release.

Attractive New Orleans locations are utilized in "Way Up in Society," the first of the Diamond comedies featuring Diana Allen, General Film Company reports. The interior scenes were staged in the beautiful mansion of the late W. P. Brown, the "Cotton King" whose bullish market tendencies in a spectacular campaign forced up the price of cotton. This is said to be the handsomest residence in New Orleans, and it provided settings of unrivaled beauty for the filming of the comedy in which the former "Follies" star appears with Lou Marks, Oom Paul and Irving Browning. A number of the exterior scenes in this picture were photographed under the historic Audobon oaks in Audobon Park.

"Way Up in Society" will be released shortly by General Film Company.

Hodkinson Gets Replies From Fourth Circular

THE results obtained from the campaign of propaganda literature which the Hodkinson Corporation has been spreading broadcast over the country has been amazing, it is claimed by the department in charge of this work.

The fourth circular of the series of eight contained a return postcard, the idea being to get some idea of the manner in which the exhibitors were reading and digesting the material that was being put forth.

Officials of the company state that the number of replies received to this fourth circular has surprised them considerably, and the general tone of the answers received by the company suggests that the exhibitors are widely awake to the possibilities and possible benefits of the Hodkinson plan if it is successful in its complete development.

Commenting on the basic ideas underlying the campaign, officials of the company stated the first purpose was to prove to the exhibitor that the Hodkinson plan is based upon business principles and laws of commercial enterprise that have hitherto been absolutely ignored by the motion picture industry.

Secondly, it is planned to show how the Hodkinson Corporation stood absolutely independent in the unique position of being free from control alike from exhibitor and producer.

And also to convince the exhibitor that Mr. Hodkinson is the type of man in whom the exhibitors can have a confidence of results to be obtained and promises fulfilled.

The last circular of the group to be sent out is a specific and detailed explanation of the plan itself and contains one of the typical Hodkinson charts, which shows the manner in which the exhibitors ought to be tied up, one to another and all together, in the combination of local exchange organizations interwoven and supported by the central body.

"O'Garry Rides Alone" Is Released.

"O'Garry Rides Alone," the second "O'Garry" release of the Blue Ridge Dramas, and the fourth of the series, is now current. It provides a wealth of dramatic and heart interest, according to General Film. Ned Finley as the Northwest Mounted Police officer and Marion Henry play the leading roles.

Director O'Brien Lauds "Street of Seven Stars."

THE Street of Seven Stars," the first feature to be made by Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., will soon be ready for private showing. Miss Kenyon's director, John B. O'Brien, finished the cutting and assembling of the picture May 8. The illustrated titles are now being made.

Mr. O'Brien, who directed a number of the Mary Pickford productions, declares "The Street of Seven Stars" is his best picture. "Miss Kenyon is one of the cleverest screen actresses of the time," said Mr. O'Brien. "In 'The Street of Seven Stars' she has a vehicle in which she has full opportunity to demonstrate her great talent. No expense has been spared in providing a lavish production, while the story is unquestionably the most beautiful of Mrs. Rinehart's many successes."

"Hearts Or Diamonds?" Pulling.

The increasing popularity of William Russell is reflected in the first-run bookings of "Hearts or Diamonds?" the first production of his own company, the William Russell Productions, Inc. "Fighting Bill's" strenuous type of rapid-fire action in such productions as "The Midnight Trail," "In Bad," and "New York Luck" has made him solid with exhibitors.

Among the prominent theaters which have booked this exciting drama of mystery for first-run are the Stanley, New York; Liberty, Seattle; the T & D, San Francisco; Tom Moore, Washington; Strand, Denver; Butterfly, Milwaukee; Green Mill, Dallas; Rialto, Indianapolis; Park, St. Louis, and Strand, Cleveland.

The Woodlawn theater and the Drury Lane theater, new high class neighborhood houses in Chicago, both opened with "Hearts or Diamonds?" and reported sold-out houses and enthusiastic comments.

Constance Talmadge Presents Prototype.

IT is seldom that a motion picture star has the opportunity to visualize on the screen her real ideals and theories of life. Fortune has ever smiled upon Constance Talmadge, the youthful Select star, however, and so she has had the chance to show her admirers just the kind of girl she would be. For "Connie" is sturdy, self-reliant and independent as well as highly artistic, and the resulting combination is a practical idealism which comes to the fore in every one of the many activities in which this young charmer is interested. This fact is strikingly illustrated in "The Lesson," Miss Talmadge's latest Select Picture in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick. The heroine of "The Lesson" is a "regular" American girl —pretty, vivacious, independent.

Julius Steger Completes "Cecilia of the Pink Roses"

JULIUS STEGER, who forsook the boards for filmdom, where he has gained distinction as a producer, has just completed the making of a film version of Katherine Haviland Taylor's popular book, "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," with Marion Davies playing the title role.

Miss Davies, who is known to celebrity as a stage beauty through her association with Ziegfeld, Dillingham and Hitchcock and Goetz productions of the musical comedy stage, has definitely abandoned that form of entertainment to devote herself exclusively to film creations. As the spiritual heroine of Miss Taylor's novel she has a role far removed from anything she has ever done on the legitimate stage, and she is said to have interpreted the sympathetic character of Cecilia in a manner that gives promise of a most successful motion picture career.

Miss Davies was surrounded with a strong cast. Willette Kershawe, a favorite Broadway leading woman, who created all the feminine leads of the Princess Players repertoire when that organization shocked New Yorkers at the Princess theater; George Le Guere, late of "Business Before Pleasure"; Harry Benham, of "The Rainbow Girl"; Edward O'Connor, of "Sick-a-Bed"; Charles Jackson, who gained fame as a boy actor in the Abraham Lincoln photoplay, "A Son of Democracy"; Eva Campbell, of vampire notoriety, and John Charles and Joseph Burke, also familiar to film fans.

"Cecilia of the Pink Roses" will be exhibited at a leading New York theater early in June and simultaneously released throughout the country. Meanwhile, Miss Davies' management is busily engaged in a search for suitable material to start at once upon a second production.

Alice Howell Release To Be Issued Monthly

ALICE HOWELL, the "funny woman of the screen," will appear once a month hereafter on the Universal program, her picture every fourth week taking the place of the L-Ko comedy, which has been a weekly release feature heretofore.

The first Howell release under the Century brand under the new order of procedure will appear during the week of May 27, and will be entitled "Her Unmarried Life." It is a clever comedy portrayal of a spinster anxious to obtain a helpmate, but foiled in every effort.

In the notice sent to exhibitors who have contracted for an L-Ko every week, Universal explains that every fourth week a Century, with Alice Howell, will be substituted for the L-Ko. The exhibitors also receive the guarantee that the Howell comedies will have a drawing power equal to that of the L-Ko, and that no Howell comedy will be released that does not receive the unanimous indorsement of the Universal executive board.

Viola Dana at Work in New York.

Viola Dana has returned to Metro's New York studios and has started work in a screen version of "Opportunity," a story by Edgar Franklyn, a magazine serial. John H. Collins, who has guided the little star in most of her pictures, is both the adaptor and director of this production, and John Arnold is the photographer.

It is the second of Miss Dana's series of screen comedy dramas, the first of which, "The Only Road," was completed just before she left California.

Interstate to Portray Life of President.

With the sale of the territorial right to "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21" under way the Interstate Film Company announces it has commenced work on a production, the title of which will be announced at a later date, and which will be a historical chronology of the life of President Wilson.

Jewel Tries Experiment of Plainly Marking Product

JEWEL Productions, Inc., has had the temerity to send out an announcement in which it has given unchangeable film rental prices. This is claimed to be the first time any company has adopted the well known business method of price-marking its product in plain figures so that all may read.

While the new departure has not as yet taken in current releases of Jewel Productions it does take in all of their well known recent successes. This simply is a step toward the time when current releases also will be plainly price-marked. In the announcement to the exhibitors throughout the country Jewel Productions say:

"Our entire group of productions, starting with 'Come Through,' with Herbert Rawlinson; 'Pay Me,' with Dorothy Phillips; 'Sirens of the Sea,' with Louise Lovely and Jack Mulhall; 'The Co-Respondent,' with Elaine Hammerstein; 'The Man Without a Country,' with Florence La Badie, and 'The Price of a Good Time,' with Mildred Harris, are offered in combination at a cost that will allow you to make a profit on each production, give prestige to your house and present to your public a series of rare treats at a popular price that heretofore, on the single picture booking plan, seemed to you utterly impossible.

"The details of the plan are first, in all suburban theaters where we have already shown these six Jewel productions to first, second and third run we will book these six pictures for $100 with $25 allowed for advertising. Each picture is for a one-day booking only.

"Second, in all cities from 1,000 to 5,000 population, where these Jewel productions are first run, we will book the entire group of six pictures for $90 with $15 allowed for advertising. Each picture for one-day booking only.

"Third, in cities of from 6,000 to 10,000 population where these Jewel productions are first run we will book the entire group of six for $120 with $20 allowed for advertising. One day only.

"Fourth, in cities of from 11,000 to 15,000 population where these Jewel productions are first run we will book the entire group for $150 with $25 allowed for advertising. One day only.

Fifth, in cities of from 25,000 to 50,000 population where Jewel productions are first run we will sell the entire group of pictures on a two-day run basis for $270 with $45 allowed for advertising.

"Sixth, in cities of from 25,000 to 50,000 population where the Jewel productions are first run we will book the entire group on a two-day booking for $300 with $50 allowed for advertising.

"The advertising allowed on each individual plan will be spent in newspaper advertising before the first Jewel production is exhibited, and will carry the list of pictures as they are to be shown. It is understood that the exhibitor will use the entire group of six pictures within six weeks from the date of the signing of the contract, and the pictures will be used in order of their release dates. 'The Price of a Good Time' is to be the final presentation."

Jewel Productions will prepare and furnish without cost to exhibitors all advertising cuts, publicity stories, and necessary figures for newspaper reproductions. Leader strips from the different pictures will be furnished them to be used each week preceding the showing of the picture scheduled for presentation the following week.

If the exhibitors like the plan and support the company by booking its pictures the one price plan will be enlarged upon, and will be followed on every opportunity.

Universal Portrays War Problem.

What will happen after the close of the present war when social conditions in the belligerent countries are turned topsy-turvy by the outcomes of the ravages of the Hun hordes on the women of the invaded lands is forcefully painted in a Bluebird photodrama now being made under the title of "The Spawn." Joseph De Grasse is directing the production from the scenario by Harvey Gates, adapted from a story by Kingsley Benedict.

Grace Cunard is seen as an opera singer who had sacrificed all to a Teuton officer in order to save the life of the man she loved. Edward Cecil has the leading masculine role, Herbert Prior plays the German officer, and Dora Rogers is seen as the officer's wife.

War Influencing Against Long Pictures, Says Tourneur

MAURICE TOURNEUR, now at work on his initial independent picture, "Sporting Life," which is to be a companion picture to his successful production, "The Whip," believes that the world war is creating a trend toward shorter picture dramas.

"The movement, as I see it, is distinctly away from the full evening photoplay," declares Mr. Tourneur. "This is psychological in its cause. The world war, with its attendant excitement, sacrifices and worry, is playing upon the nervous system of the world. Whether we know or realize it the war has keyed up our nerves to a high pitch. We are keenly restless, high-strung, unable to concentrate for any length of time upon anything but the world's tragedy.

"This nervous reaction is reflecting itself in every walk of life. Short stories requiring but fifteen minutes or so to read were never so popular as now. Poetry, which is after all but the drama of life condensed into more or less beautiful particles, is tremendously popular, too. So it is coming to be with pictures.

"I am, of course, a steady patron of the film houses. It is part of my business to watch the progress of my fellow-workers. I have come to note a marked unrest in audiences when a drama runs longer than six reels, or six thousand feet. Six reels requires about an hour and a half for adequate presentation.

"I had a curious example of this nervous reaction presented to me the other night when once again I witnessed 'The Birth of a Nation.' This beautiful drama —a classic of the screen—did not seem overlong when first presented, but the audience of today reflects the war-time reaction. A man who sat just ahead of me remarked to a friend, 'It's beautiful—but just a little too long.'

"For my part, I do not intend to run my productions over six reels, or seven at the very most, for the duration of the war. We must meet conditions as they are.

"Another interesting reaction I have noted in war-time audience," continues Mr. Tourneur, "is the steadily growing spiritual note. We are all turning more and more to religious support in these grim days. You can observe this in the way audiences respond to the spiritual element in pictures. People are coming to think profoundly of the problem of life."

Toto Puts on "Cleopatsy."

Following the release on May 26 of "The Junkman," a two-reel Toto comedy, the funmaker will be seen in "Cleopatsy," which is expected to prove the knockout of all Rolin comedies. The settings are elaborate, and this picture will go over especially well as a burlesque of "Cleopatra." There are desert scenes and heavy pretentious Egyptian palace sets employed in "Cleopatsy," and there are a lot of laughs. Camels and hundreds of extra people correctly costumed are employed to good advantage. In this film Toto is surrounded by a big company of stars, and the absurd story works out naturally and gets many laughs on the business that has been injected.

"A Broadway Scandal" for Bluebird.

Carmel Myers in the role of a sparkling, vivacious French girl stars in the Bluebird release of May 27, a five-reel feature entitled "A Broadway Scandal." As Nenette Bisson the Bluebird star appears as the chief assistant to her father, the owner of a French restaurant in the Longacre district of New York City. When she is not serving the patrons she entertains them with her dancing.

Miss Myers has the support of an evenly balanced cast consisting of W. H. Bainbridge, Edwin August, Lon Chaney, Andrew Robson, S. K. Shilling, and Frederick Gamble. The picture was directed by Joseph De Grasse from a scenario by Harvey Gates.

Julia Faye, Who Appears in Cecil B. De Mille's Artcraft Picture, "Old Wives For New."

Fox Names Two Final May Fisher Cartoons

THE next two Bud Fisher animated cartoons that William Fox will release will be "Superintendents" and "Tonsorial Artists," in both of which Mutt and Jeff pen-and-ink their way to triumph as janitors and then as barbers.

"Superintendents," released May 19, shows the trials of Mutt and Jeff in trying to quiet a noisy pianola pumped incessantly by a woman of generous proportions, but with a small ear for music. She has one roll that she plays half the day to the annoyance of all the other tenants. Mutt and Jeff, in their capacity as joint-janitors, go upstairs to stop this. Mutt comes down quickly via the dumbwaiter shaft. Jeff proves more diplomatic, and the means he uses to win victory are said to provoke many laughs.

"Tonsorial Artists" will be the last Mutt and Jeff issue in May, and treats of the tribulations that the partners have when they buy a barber shop in a district where the only residents are inmates of the old sailors' home. There whiskers are an institution in themselves. The men have no use for barbers, and Mutt and Jeff decoy them to the shop by installing a blonde manicurist. While the latter does a rushing business the barber chair sill remains empty, but a great idea results in its being filled.

Emily Stevens at Work on "A Man's World"

EMILY STEVENS has begun work on a screen version of Rachel Crothers' powerful problem play, "A Man's World." June Mathis picturized the drama, and Herbert Blache, assisted by Leander de Cordova, is directing the production, which pleads for an equalization of unjust standards and social laws.

"A Man's World" offers Miss Stevens exceptional acting opportunities. She plays Frank Ware, a novelist, who is an ardent advocate of the double standard of morality and bitterly decries the existence of "A Man's World," where the single standard applies to women.

Rachel Crothers' play was presented by the Shuberts at the Comedy theater about eight years ago, with Mary Mannering in the role of the novelist, and Charles Richman and John Sainpolis in her support. The play proved a capacity attraction both in New York and on the road, creating much comment wherever it was presented.

Get Ready for Mabel Normand in "The Venus Model"

GOLDWYN announces Mabel Normand in the successor of "Joan of Plattsburg." It is "The Venus Model," written by H. R. Durant. Written expressly for the sparkling comedienne; her peculiar gifts are exploited to their utmost in the manner made noteworthy by Goldwyn. This means that no expense has been spared to invest the production with richness and beauty, and to surround Miss Normand with a strong cast.

"The Venus Model" recalls Mabel Normand's happiest adventures on the screen, and provides many moments of laughter, suspense, and charm. It is being directed by Clarence G. Badger.

The title of the play is derived from a bathing suit created by Kitty O'Brien (Mabel Normand), who is employed in the factory of Braddock & Company. The business is going to the dogs by reason of the old fashioned methods of business prevailing, which means that the bathing suits manufactured by Braddock & Company are without the snap and style demanded by alert buyers, of whom Bergman (Alfred Hickman) is the most exacting. And Braddock (Alec B. Francis), the head of the firm, has other troubles. His health is failing for one thing, and his son, Paul (Rodrique LaRoque), is wasting his time at college on associates who can do him no good. Hattie Fanshawe (Una Trevelyn) is the chief parasite.

Kitty has her troubles too. Dimples Briggs (Nadia Gary) is in imminent danger of being taken from the warm-hearted factory girl. "Dimples" is a child whose scapegrace father turns up at intervals to wring money from Kitty by threatening to take "Dimples" from her. Briggs (Edward Boulden) makes the lives of both a burden, but Kitty is helpless to her love for the little girl.

But when Braddock goes away for his health the resourceful Kitty determines to straighten out his tangled affairs. She designs a smart bathing dress which she calls "The Venus Model," and against the opposition of the manager, Bagley (Edward Elkas), the model is made up, and creates a sensation among the buyers. Kitty is promoted to the exalted post of chief designer, and business takes an upward spurt.

The foregoing ought to provide a basis for an interesting story.

Elaborate Sets for De Mille's Artcraft

INTEREST centered last week at the Famous Players-Lasky Hollywood studio on the big hotel roof garden set for Cecil B. DeMille's Artcraft picture, "We Can't Have Everything." It occupies half of one of the big glass stages and ascends to the diffusers. A special troupe of ballet dancers was engaged for the scenes, with two orchestras and hundreds of extras. Among the leading players in the cast are Kathlyn Williams, Elliott Dexter, Alma Francis, Sylvia Breamer and Thurston Hall.

"Less Than Kin" is the picture in which Wallace Reid is being starred, with Ann Little again appearing as his leading woman. Donald Crisp is directing. The picture is located in Central America to a large extent. Raymond Hatton, Gustav Seyffertitz, Noah Beery, James Neill, Charles Ogle, Jane Wolff, James Cruze, Guy Oliver and Clarence Geldert appear in support.

"Missing," J. Stuart Blackton's Paramount picture from the novel by Mrs. Humphry Ward, is militant in character and has to do with women's part in the big war.

Ranchos to Alternate With Blue Ridge Dramas

THE vigorous western releases known as Rancho Dramas, produced by the National Film Corporation of Denver, are being dated on alternate weeks with the Blue Ridge Dramas produced by Ned Finley, according to General Film.

This will enable exhibitors to book a continuous weekly succession of two-reel outdoor photoplays of the type that has already been demonstrated a big commercial success. In accordance with this arrangement of two-reel subjects, the current Blue Ridge drama will be followed by a Rancho story providing an unusual number of thrills and suspenseful moments, and so on.

Similarly the O. Henry releases, through General Film, are now dated every other week to alternate with a Wolfville Tale by Alfred Henry Lewis, providing a succession of comedy-drama of high literary caliber—the O. Henry subjects dealing with urbane life and the Lewis tales with the unharnessed West.

"Yosemite in Winter" New Pathe Scenic

What should prove a wonderful interlude for any program, in a month or six weeks, say, when the justly celebrated summer sun is broiling the earth, is a new Pathe scenic "Yosemite in Winter" soon to be released. The photography is sharp and picks out the marvelous detail of America's most famous natural garden spot clothed in ice and snow.

"Toys of Fate" Is Nazimova's Latest Metro Production

NAZIMOVA'S latest photodrama, "Toys of Fate," which has been declared to surpass "Revelation," her first picture for Screen Classics, Inc., had its premiere performance at the Strand theater, New York on Sunday, May 11. George D. Baker, who guided the star in "Revelation," also directed her in "Toys of Fate."

Nazimova has the greatest acting opportunities of her notable career, and she more than fulfills requirements. The Russian actress plays the part of a gypsy princess, with the fiery, untrammeled nature of that picturesque race. Love and hate are almost equally developed in the gypsy girl, Azah, who is made the instrument of fate to bring justice to Bruce Griswold, who deceived her mother, Hagar. Nazimova also plays the mother, Hagar. Azah's life in the gysy encampment, and in the caravan of her tribe, is depicted in a fascinating manner, and gypsy rites and customs are reproduced.

In "Toys of Fate" there are one hundred and fifty art titles which greatly enhance the artistic beauty of the subject. These illustrated titles are the invention of Ferdinand Earle, Metro's art director, and are a part of his process, known as motion painting.

Charles Bryant, who played opposite Nazimova in "Revelation," appears as her leading man in the role of Henry Livingston. He has supported the star in "War Brides," both on the stage and screen, and also in Ibsen repertoire on the legitimate. Irving Cummings is cast as Greggo, the gypsy lover; Dodson Mitchell essays the role of Bruce Griswold.

Griffin Goes to Russia With Y. M. C. A.

Herbert Griffin, who has been a selling representative of the Nicholas Power Company for a number of years, has temporarily severed his connection with that concern, and has gone to Russia with the Y. M. C. A. commission.

Mr. Griffin has had a wide experience in motion picture matters, and is an expert in projection. His experience and ability will prove of great value in this field.

Bill Farnum in War Charity Makes Stage Appearance

FOR the first time in years, William Farnum made his reappearance on the speaking stage recently. The occasion was the launching of the Los Angeles branch of the Stage Women's War Relief at the Morosco theater. The event packed the theater with a distinguished gathering representative of the stage and screen.

Mr. Farnum "came back" to the footlights and scored an unmistakable success when he gave a masterful rearrangement of lines from various Shakespearean plays that are applicable to the Kaiser. He delivered this in such a telling way that he was recalled several times.

Miss Bertha Mann, leading woman of the Morosco, who had the chief role in "The Blindness of Divorce," the propaganda film that Frank Lloyd directed for William Fox, made a plea for old kid gloves for aviators jackets. Miss Mann wore a demonstration jacket that was a silent but highly effective means of getting responses.

Mr. Farnum came to the affair direct from the Fox studios in Hollywood, where he has been busily engaged in finishing the interior scenes of "Riders of the Purple Sage," the Zane Grey novel which Director Lloyd is picturizing.

On Tuesday, May 7, these early episodes were completed, and the large company was ready to begin work on the exteriors, which will form the chief part of the action in the production. The cast left at once, with a number of technical men, for "location" work in Arizona.

After a great deal of "desert stuff" has been filmed, Director Lloyd and Mr. Farnum will lead the company into Grand Canyon for what should prove some of the most beautiful, as well as stirring, scenes in photoplay. The principals in the production besides the star are William Scott, Marc Robbins, Murdock MacQuarrie, Nancy Caswell, and J. Holmes. Katherine Adams is Mr. Farnum's leading woman in the picture, as she will characterize Bess, the masked rider.

Farnum Loan Film Makes Hit in Nation's Capital

TREMENDOUS applause from leaders in governmental officialdom, including President Wilson, greeted the exhibition at Keith's Washington theater of William Farnum's Liberty Loan boosting film. The picture was made at the William Fox studios on the Coast under the direction of Frank Lloyd in spare moments.

The celluloid playlet carried a stirring appeal to everyone to do his utmost in putting the third loan strongly and solidly over the top. And aside from its purely patriotic aspect it was a highly interesting featurette in itself.

The drama was shown at Keith's on a Wednesday, always a day noted for the number of diplomats and statesmen who attend the show. President Wilson was there with a party in the box he uses practically every week. At the first flash on the screen of the cinema playlet there was loud applause. Throughout the time that the feature was being unreeled the applause remained practically continuous. At the end of the film there could be doubt that the audience was a unit in approving the sentiments expressed.

In accordance with the request of the Treasury Department, 120 prints were made of the little patriotic drama for distribution throughout the country. Mr. Farnum also toured Nevada and California on behalf of the loan, and subscribed to $88,000 himself.

"Venus" to Make Its Debut.

Miss Betty Lee, star of "The Triumph of Venus," the Victory film classic distributed by General Film Company, has gone to Atlanta, her home city, to witness the local opening of the photoplay feature, an event of the near future. Reports received by General Film from Atlanta indicate that the greater part of the city is keenly interested in the event.

Arrangements are now being completed for the release of "The Triumph of Venus" in New York, Atlanta and Boston at an early date, following which formal openings will be held in other large cities. The chief swimmer is Phylis Beveridge, who is also cast as the goddess Diana. William Sherwood is also one of the chief performers, his floating down a series of waterfalls while simulating death being something never before recorded.

Lawrence to Stage Pearson Film.

Edmund Lawrence, who had charge of Virginia Pearson's drama, "The Firebrand," the current William Fox special feature, will begin the work of directing this week a powerful play by George Scarborough to be released under title of "For Gold." Miss Pearson will be the star of this production.

Mr. Lawrence made his directorial debut with the Fox forces in the production of "A Daughter of France," which is said to have proved an immensely popular vehicle for Miss Pearson, although Mr. Lawrence screened most of the picture under the handicap of illness. Probably no director in the industry is more popular with his technical staff and actors than Mr. Lawrence.

General Distributing Rancho Series.

General Film Company has begun the distribution of a new brand of Western stories, the Rancho series, which are being produced at the Denver studios of the National Film Corporation, of which O. D. Woodward is president. The Rancho stories are released every other week. "When the Sun Sets Red," the second of the series, is a tensely dramatic story of a romance in which a returned nurse and a young American who has "gone over the top" play the leading parts. They meet again in the West while recuperating, and almost immediately become involved in a series of adventures which hold the fan in suspense until the last flash.

"The Battle Royal" (Sennett).

In "The Battle Royal," the Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedy released May 20, Ben Turpin is introduced as a victim of financial depression. His inability to pay his landlady results in being forcibly cast out in the street, wrapped up in his steamer trunk. That's when Charles Lynn and Polly Moran take pity on him. The picture was directed by Richard Jones, who staged the action in a fast and furious manner.

Miss Clark Doubles as Little Eva and Topsy

INCREASED interest is added to the big production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a Paramount picture by the fact that Marguerite Clark is playing the dual roles of Topsy and Little Eva, two dissimilar characters which will demonstrate the versatility of the star.

The amusing antics of the colored pickaninny provide scenes wherein Miss Clark can utilize the comedy talents which she displayed on the speaking stage, and as Little Eva, the pathetic incidents draws upon her well known dramatic ability. The make-up and rags of Topsy completely disguise Miss Clark in this part, which will be found in strong contrast to the opposite role, and the illusion is strengthened further by a number of scenes in which the two characters appear simultaneously.

The supporting cast includes J. W. Johnston as Haley, the employer of Simon Legree. Florence Carpenter is Eliza and Walter Lewis Simon Legree. Frank Losee is Uncle Tom. Phil Ryley is Marks, the lawyer; Henry Stamford is St. Clair, and Harry Lee is Jeff, the poor negro. J. Searle Dawley is directing the production, and H. Lyman Broening is in charge of the photographic work.

Parke and Cushing Collaborate.

Having completed the production of "The Yellow Ticket," starring Fannie Ward, William Parke, director of a number of Pathe successes, has returned to New York after a trip to Atlantic City, in the course of which he and Tom Cushing, who wrote the scenario for "The Yellow Ticket," have worked out a number of stories which they have had in mind for some time. They make a strong team. Mr. Parke decided not to accept the offer of the Astra company that he produce their next serial, as he wants to stick to features.

A Genuine Screen Beauty—Peggy Hyland, Fox Star.

Over 600 Theaters Have Booked Parsons Comedies

SMILING BILL PARSONS, who is making comedy features for distribution through Goldwyn, is hard at work on the ninth comedy production of the twenty-six he will make this year. Already, with but two weeks elapsed since release date, over six hundred theaters, including Jones, Linick, and Schaefer houses; Asher Brother circuit; Marcus Loew's theaters, the Mastbaum, McGurk, and Sablowsky theaters in Philadelphia, and A. H. Blanck and Thomas Saxe houses throughout the Northwest, have booked the entire series, while Miller's theater, Los Angeles, billed Parsons like a circus last week and featured his "Bill's Baby" as big as their dramatic feature.

Billy Rhodes is seen opposite the smiling comedian in "Bill's Baby" and "Bill's Predicament." Molly Malone, formerly featured with Universal, supports Bill in "Matching Bill" and "Birds of a Feather."

Teddy Sampson will be Parsons' principal support in two releases already completed, but as yet unnamed; while May Agnew s now working opposite him in "Bill Bulls the Market," and has been engaged for another picture.

That high class comedies, sans slapstick and burlesque have an opulent market is attested by the offers the sales forces of the National Film Corporation have received for foreign rights to the Capitol pictures.

Through the Goldwyn foreign department offers have been received from Scandanavia, Australia, France, Italy, Spain, and Portugal; while Harry Reichenbach, the company's general sales and business manager, has received offers of outright purchases or franchise sales from Walturdaw and Jury's, Ltd., of London; Williamson and Australasian for Australia; from Di Luggo and Antemorra for Italy, Portugal, Spain, and the Balkan states, and from Howells, of the Orient.

No arrangements have been concluded for the foreign territories as yet. Mr. Reichenbach will leave for Europe early in June, and contemplates handling the sales for all European countries from a London connection.

Francis Ford Leaves For Coast.

Francis Ford's stay in New York following the completion of his first release entitled "Berlin via America" came to an end on May 9, when he departed for California accompanied by Miss Elsie Van Name, the author of the first two of the Fordart Productions; his leading woman, Miss Edna Emerson, and her mother, Mrs. Victor H. Emerson, and other members of his company.

All future productions will be made at Mr. Ford's studio in Los Angeles. Arrangements have been consummated which will permit of immediate activity upon his arrival, and assures the release of his second picture not later than July 1. "A Man of Today" is the title selected for this release, and it is claimed that it incorporates a big, timely theme with a strong and convincing appeal to our own Allied governments.

The reception accorded "Berlin via America" has been most gratifying to Mr. Ford, the more especially as Ernest Shipman was able to hand him a check, the amount of which represented an outright sale of 75 per cent. of the territory, and accomplished during a sales campaign of less than two weeks.

Film Fires in Screen Telegram.

The destruction of two big motion picture plants by fire are shown in Screen Telegram No. 21, scheduled for release May 12 by Mutual. The blaze at Waukegan, Ill., which wiped out a dozen Government warehouses and destroyed the clearing house of the Mutual, with the destruction of 40,000,000 feet of retired film, was caught by Screen Telegram cameraman.

The fire which destroyed the studios of the Lasky Company at Hollywood also is pictured in the same reel.

Official French War Pictures show scenes from the great world war taken in the Alps. An interesting picture in this section shows the mountain dogs hauling munitions and troops traveling on skis through the mountains.

Other pictures from France showing methods adopted by Allies to guard against German aerial attacks and the operation of aircraft guns are shown in Screen Telegram No. 20.

Other war scenes in this release show the wreckage caused by the bombardment of the Huns in a village in Lorraine, France, and the people returning after the bombardment to hunt for homes.

More Prints of "Over There."

Select's patriotic photodrama, "Over There," is in such great demand in these stirring days that, in order to be able to accommodate demands for showing of this picture, the Select Pictures Corporation has been forced to reprint the subjects. A large number of prints on "Over There" are being made on a rush order and shipped as fast as ready to the territories most in need of extra prints. This reprinting of the feature is not in order to replace worn out prints, but is due solely to a steadily mounting demand for the feature. The first prints finished are being rushed to New Orleans, Pittsburgh, Seattle, Omaha and Denver, the five cities where the need for extra prints is most pressing at the present.

New Boy City Stories Coming.

A new block of Judge Brown stories is promised for early release through General Film Company by the Boy City Film Corporation. These four additional subjects have been completed: "Love of Bob," "Dog vs. Dog," "A Boy Built City" and "The Case of Bennie." Boy City lads who have appeared in the first ten productions will be the featured players in this new list of subjects. Ruth Hampton, the leading woman of the Judge Brown Stories will continue to appear.

The first ten Boy City Films have established themselves as most successful short length features, the bookings having exceeded all expectations.

Fairbanks in Role of Reporter.

The next Douglas Fairbanks production is "Say, Young Fellow." In this subject the energetic Douglas appears as a "cub" reporter employed in a small city, who wins distinction by interviewing a millionaire who not only has never been interviewed before, but who announced that he never would submit to reportorial inquisition. How Fairbanks, known as "the young fellow," gets to the millionaire and obtains the story he is after, is said to be a highly interesting development new to modern motion pictures.

Clover Puts On "Love's Lucky Day."

Another swift Clover Comedy, "Love's Lucky Day," is released this week by General Film. "Bud" Duncan, "Dot" Farley and "Kewpie" Morgan, the three stars of the series, demonstrate their funmaking ability in this subject. Following this will come 'Oh, the Woman," another subject in which "Dot" Farley's burlesque vampire role provides a large measure of the laughs, and "Bud" Duncan romps about in entirely new characterization.

Baby Marie Pulls Tom Mix Stuff.

Baby Marie Osborne appears as a diminutive cowgirl in her new Pathe play, "A Daughter of the West," and rides her own little Shetland, which animal, by the way, has been induced in some mysterious manner to do quite a little "bucking" in one scene. This part of the new play will register a hit with the juvenile admirers of Baby Marie.

Over 6,000 Days' Bookings for "Tarzan of the Apes"

THE First National Exhibitors' Circuit has closed bookings on "Tarzan of the Apes" up to May 10 totaling 6,009 days. These figures are claimed to top anything on record in moving picture annals, when the fact is taken into consideration that "Tarzan" was released barely two months ago.

Realizing the sure-fire box office possibilities of the film many of the leading exhibitors have preferred to play it on a percentage basis, and have cashed in in proportion to the brains and energy they have invested in its promotion. Whenever a flat rental price has been paid by a big house the amount has been worthy of comment. In Los Angeles, for instance, T. L. Talley, who holds the First National franchise for southern California, closed a cash contract with Emil Kehrlein, Jr., proprietor of the Kinema theater, for $3,500 for a two weeks' run.

New York Showing for Douglas Color Picture

Motion picture patrons of Los Angeles were treated to a genuine surprise a few weeks ago when the Kinema theater made its usual announcement in the form of a three-color advertisement.

The reason for the color was the fact that the Kinema theater had secured sole rights of Los Angeles to exhibit the new Douglas color pictures which are being distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

W. W. Hodkinson has announced to his home office that he is so impressed with the quality of the Douglas color pictures that instead of commencing immediate bookings in the various exchanges he has decided to bring the latest production, "Cupid Angling" to New York for a large trade showing and public exhibition, so that the quality of these pictures may be appreciated by both trade and public.

Next Barriscale Picture Is a Grace Miller White

A BRAND new characterization is promised by Bessie Barriscale in her seven-act adaptation of Grace Miller White's novel, "Rose o' Paradise," her Paralta Play released May 13.

"Rose o' Paradise" was recognized among the "best sellers" upon its publication several years ago. It is one of those tales that holds the interest from the start.

The story concerns the adventures of a little optimist, Jinny Singleton, rightful heiress to a fortune left by her mother, but made victim of a chain of unpleasant circumstances by her scheming uncle.

In the role of Jinny, Bessie Barriscale has added another triumph to her already long list of screen successes. The part offers her opportunities to score heavily not alone with her emotional powers, but with her personality as well.

Billie Rhodes Comedy Helps a Tobacco Fund

THE Mutual-Strand comedy scheduled for release by Mutual, May 21, "My Lady Nicotine," is, in addition to being a clever, thoroughly funny Billy Rhodes subject, a happy piece of propaganda for "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund."

The story is built around the efforts of a young wife to break her husband of smoking. Persuasion failing she tries patent tobacco cures, with serious and laughable results.

Fox Announces a Well Balanced Program for June

FIVE productions from the Eastern and Western studios are to be released as special features next month by William Fox, according to the June schedule, which has just been announced. This is the order in which the pictures will be issued:

June 2.—June Caprice in "Blue-Eyed Mary," a girl's sprightly adventures in the field of love. Staged by Harry Millarde from the story by Frances Crowley.

June 9.—Tom Mix in "Ace High," a tale of adventure in the service of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police. Written and directed by Lynn Reynolds.

June 16.—Jane and Katherine Lee in "We Should Worry!" an impish, stormy comedy-drama written and staged by Kenean Buel.

June 23.—Gladys Brockwell in "The Scarlet Road," the drama of a woman's triumph over the wolves of society. Directed by Edward J. LeSaint from the story and scenario of Charles Kenyon.

June 30.—George Walsh in "The Kid Is Clever," a surprise photoplay built on an original dramatic structure.

The first of the announced films, "Blue-Eyed Mary," shows June Caprice in one of the most appealing parts she has yet had. The supporting company consists of Helen Tracy, Blanche Hines, Bernard Randall, Thomas Fallon, Jack McLean, Henry Hallam, and Florence Ashbrooke.

"Ace High" is said to be a perfect vehicle for the fast-riding star, Tom Mix. Those who are at all acquainted with the type of work that Mix does need no assurance that he makes an excellent figure as one of the Canadian Northwest Mounted. In the production are Kathleen Connors, Lawrence Peyton, James O'Neil, Jay Morley, Golda Madden, Pat Chrisman, Lloyd Perl, Virginia Lee Corbin, and Lewis Sargent.

"We Should Worry!" is the most expensive film Jane and Katherine Lee have had. An unusually big cast was taken South for all the exterior scenes.

Supporting Gladys Brockwell in "The Scarlet Road" is Charles Clary, Betty Schade, L. C. Shumway, and William Scott.

In "The Kid Is Clever," George Walsh is provided with another of the action and "stunt" productions which have won him such high favor.

The first of the Sunshine comedy releases in June will be "Wild Women and Tame Lions," in which several kings of the forest and ascore of pretty girls combine to produce a record-making laughbringer under Henry Lehrman's direction.

Goldwyn Makes Release Change on Marsh Subject

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation announces the substitution of "All Woman," a story by F. Lloyd Sheldon, as its Mae Marsh release for June 2 in place of "The Glorious Adventure." The last-named production will be the subsequent Marsh release.

Hobart Henley, who directed Mae Marsh's successful picture, "The Face in the Dark," directed "All Woman." He has provided for it the same quality of snap and punch that made the former vehicle.

The new production gives Mae Marsh a stronger dramatic role than any she has had. "All Woman" tells the story of Susan Kildare, "the good girl who tamed a bad town." Every inch a woman—a real woman—is Susan, though the beginning of the story finds her a New York factory girl.

Cohen Enthusiastic Over Trade Conditions in South

THREE big theaters in the South, heretofore opposed to giving their houses over to week runs, have set custom aside and booked Screen Classics' "Revelation," starring Nazimova, for a solid week's engagement. Harry J. Cohen, of Metro, who has just returned from a whirlwind tour of that section of the country in the interests of Screen Classics productions, cites the Strand, in New Orleans, and the Queen and Liberty, in Dallas and Houston, respectively, as examples of the new policy houses.

Mr. Cohen made his swing around the South in ten weeks, but in spite of his limited time he found opportunities to make several speeches in aid of the Liberty Loan.

Mr. Cohen returned from his trip enthusiastic about business conditions in the picture industry in the South. They are surprisingly good, he declares, and promise to be even better within the next twelve months. This is particularly true of Texas, he says, where he found people waiting in line as early as 9 o'clock in the morning for seats at the bigger theaters.

Mr. Cohen leaves for the Middle West within a week to visit exhibitors in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Kansas City, Mo., Des Moines, Minneapolis, Milwaukee and Chicago who have sought bookings for Screen Classics, Inc., big features.

Pathe to Inaugurate Another Travel Series

BY VIRTUE of an important deal just consummated between Pathe and the Post Film Company, release throughout the country of a new travel series will be made by that distributing company in conjunction with leading daily newspapers.

Forty important papers are parties to the contract, and as each film is shown in each city, a travel article corresponding appears in each newspaper. The subjects are in single-reel form. Most important of all, the countries covered by the touring cinematographers are those with which most Americans are totally unfamiliar.

The first release will be on June 16 and affords a striking and comprehensive picture of life in St. Thomas, in the Virgin Islands, bought from Denmark by the United States last year.

These travel pictures do not confine themselves to beautiful scenery, fine harbors, grand mountains and other scenes that might be described as "still life" or ordinary "scenics." They are actual and real travel pictures. The manners and customs of the people of the country are faithfully and accurately reproduced; the things that would most interest the traveler are visualized upon the screen for the beholder in the auditorium.

Universal Makes Change in Serials.

The Universal Film Company will have but one serial running after June 3 instead of two serial releases a week as heretofore. During the week of June 3 the eighteenth episode of "The Bull's Eye," with Eddie Polo, will be released, after which "The Lion's Claws," with Marie Walcamp, will continue to be released weekly until July 29.

Under the original plans immediately upon the release of the eighteenth, the final episode of "The Bull's Eye," the first episode of "The Brass Bullet," featuring Juanita Hansen, was scheduled for release. The release date for "The Brass Bullet" has been postponed until the first week in August, when it will follow the final episode of "The Lion's Claws."

To take the place of the second serial, Universal will reissue several of its former serials in the shape of complete shows to be run in either three or four episodes at a time, according to the best judgment of the exhibitors.

Shipman Will Release Fifty-Two Pictures Per Year

Including Shorty Hamilton and Francis Ford Features, Binney Comedies and Others—Announces Large Territory Sales on These Productions.

ERNEST SHIPMAN'S spring announcement covers thirty-two pictures for the current year which include twelve from the W. H. Clifford Co., featuring Shorty Hamilton in his new five-reel comedies; six from the Francis Ford Producing Co., which has already released "Berlin Via America"; twelve from the Josh Binney Co., featuring Funny Fatty Filbert in a series of two-reel comedies; "A Nugget in the Rough," a five-reel Western comedy drama; "Trooper 44," featuring the State Police of Pennsylvania; "The Tiger of the Sea," a timely seven-reel production written by Nell Shipman, and six features from the Titan Feature Photoplay Co., of Spokane, Wash.

But twenty more pictures are necessary to reach the announced output of fifty-two pictures per year, and contracts now executed and other plans in the making gives Mr. Shipman assurance of exceeding this number.

With the exceptions of "The Tiger of the Sea" and the forthcoming productions of the Titan Company, territory has been disposed of on all of the pictures in hand, and in some cases almost sold out.

Mr. Shipman calls attention to the fact that prominent buyers of the United States and Canada are doing business with him on a cash basis for most of his output, and that some of these buyers are men new to the industry, while others have been transacting business with him for a period of years, and states that a system which brings the selling value of the picture to a mutually satisfactory basis and guarantees to the buyer a strict fulfillment of all contracts, enables him to dispose of most of his territory without the necessity of screening the pictures.

Thirty-four states have been contracted for on the Francis Ford feature, and with the exception of three buyers all are said to have bought on the strength of Mr. Ford's reputation and trade paper reviews, and those who exploit the first Ford feature having the option on his other productions.

Mr. Shipman aims to represent Independent producers in the open market, and states he will only handle products which appeals to the active class of exhibitors and meets with the approval of the Government authorities at Washington.

The territory which has been disposed of by Mr. Shipman is as follows:

"Shorty Hamilton" series of five-reel features (four now ready)—California, Arizona and Nevada, to Sol Lesser, San Francisco. Texas, to Specialty Film Company, Dallas. Oklahoma, to T. E. Larson, Oklahoma City. Michigan, to State Film Company, Detroit. Georgia, Alabama, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina, to R. M. Savini, Atlanta. New England, to Globe Feature Film Corporation, Boston. Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, to Quality Film Co., Pittsburgh, Pa. Indiana, Missouri and Kansas, to V. H. Hodupp, Inc., Indianapolis. Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota and South Dakota, to Associated Theaters, Minneapolis.

Francis Ford in "Berlin Via America" (six reels)—Greater New York, to Elk Feature Film Co., 126 West 46th street, New York. Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia and Florida, to Special Features Co., Knoxville, Tenn. Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina, to Otto Haas, Ottoway Theater Co., Charlotte, N. C. Texas, Oklahoma and Arizona, to T. E. Larson, Oklahoma City. Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska, to Independent Film Exchange Co., Omaha. Utah, Colorado, New Mexico, Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, Washington, Alaska, Oregon, California, Nevada, Arizona, Mississippi and Louisiana, to Favorite Feature Company, Oklahoma.

"Josh Binney" Comedies, two-reelers, monthly release, to R. M. Savini, Atlanta, Ga., who has purchased rights to North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, Florida and Tennessee. Contracts are about to be closed for twelve additional states, and particulars will be announced later.

Loew Books International Cartoons.

The International Film Co. reports great success in booking their black and white cartoon comedies featuring the Katzenjammer Kids and Happy Hooligan, in the best class of theaters throughout the country, the latest addition being for the entire circuit of theaters controlled by Marcus Loew, where they will be shown each Saturday and Sunday.

In speaking of the popularity of this brand, an official of the company stated: "Prominent photoplay managers all over the country, with their fingers always on the public pulse, have felt it incessantly beating out the word 'comedy.' Every normal, healthy human being has in his make-up a 'crying' need for laughter, and at the present moment, with the big shadow hanging over the world, laughter is at a premium and not as easily created as formerly. More subtle humor, much funnier situations are necessary, and that these cartoon comedies are supplying this need is apparent by the bookings that are daily piling into the Educational Film Corporation offices.

Western Exchange Adopts New Name.

In view of the fact that they have purchased rights to several other productions, the names of the "Mid-West Civilization Company" has been changed to "Mid-West Greater Features Company." Among the features recently secured by this company, which is located in the Gas and Electric Building, Denver, are William N. Selig's "Garden of Allah" and the General Enterprise feature "The Warrior," starring Maciste. Excellent business is reported for all of these pictures, "Civilization" and "The Warrior" enjoying second and third runs, while "Garden of Allah" is being booked for first and second runs.

IVAN ABRAMSON, director general of the Graphic Film Corporation, has finished the interior scenes for "When Men Betray" and has left for Lakewood, N. J., where the exteriors are to be made on the well-known Gould estate, one of the show places of the country.

Mr. Abramson expressed his satisfaction with the work insofar as it has progressed, and states "the theme is a strong one and deals with conditions of life that are known to exist but which have not, so far, been portrayed on the screen, forcefully bringing out the truth that small transgressions often lead to disastrous results. The characters are not mere puppets of an author's imagination, but are all types I have known and carefully studied."

Gail Kane is the star, and she is said to have a role which affords opportunities for extraordinary pathos and appeal and also shows her as a dominating figure in tense situations and smashing climaxes.

In addition, the cast includes Robert Elliott, Stuart Holmes, Sally Crute, Gertrude Braun, Jack McLean, Reed Hamilton, Dora Mills Adams, Tallulah Bankhead, Hazel Washburn, Lillian Berse and Julienne Moore.

S. L. Rothapfel Books Two Additional Petrova Pictures

Says Polish Star's First Two Production Rank Second and Third in Box Office Value at Rialto Theater, New York.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Petrova Picture Company that Madame Olga Petrova's two productions, "The Life Mask" and "Tempered Steel," will be seen at the Rialto and Rivoli theaters. "The Life Mask," the third special vehicle in which Madame Petrova appears, has been booked by the managing director, S. L. Rothapfel, for the Rialto commencing the week of Sunday, May 12. The picture is a film version of the novel of the same name by the celebrated, though anonymous author of "To L. M. G."

"Tempered Steel," Madame Petrova's fourth special feature, designed as a screen medium for her by George Middleton, author of "Polly with a Past," and directed by Ralph Ince, will be presented at either the Rialto or Rivoli during the early part of June.

Frederick L. Collins, president of Petrova Picture Company, was recently in receipt of the following letter from Mr. Rothapfel: "Since our recent talk, I have been looking over my Rialto attendance records again and find that the Petrova figures are even better than I told you.

"During the four months I have played two Petrova Pictures, 'Daughter of Destiny' and 'The Light Within,' the former played to more money than any other picture, save one, which has appeared at the Rialto during the period; and the latter played to more money than any other picture, except 'Daughter of Destiny' and the one picture referred to above. In other words, your two pictures rank second and third in point of box-office value, over a period of eighteen weeks.

"These facts, together with my great admiration for Madame Petrova as an artist, lead me to accept with pleasure, your very kind offer to allow my theaters to continue presenting Petrova Pictures, notwithstanding the severance of my relations with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit."

Adopts World's Suggestion in Advertising Chaplins

W. H. Productions to Carry Announcements in Trade Papers for Benefit of Exhibitors Who Have Bought Rights to Series, and Exhibitors.

ALTHOUGH W. H. Productions Company considers it unnecessary to place advertising in the trade papers to promote the sale to the State Rights buyers of the series of twenty-six one and two-reel Charlie Chaplin subjects which they will reissue, most of the territory in the United States being sold within a period of two weeks, being anxious to assist exchangemen to book this series they announce they will take an advanced step in the development of the State Rights market by inaugurating with the current issue of several of the trade papers an advertising campaign to the exhibitor for the purpose of aiding exchanges to secure a maximum amount of bookings.

The Moving Picture World in issue of March 30, made a very strong plea for this kind of service, and W. H. Productions Company is to be commended for this new inauguration in service and advertising help to enhance the value of their product with the exchangemen and thus materially assist them to secure maximum results.

The first three subjects of the Chaplin series will be two-reelers and are entitled: "The Jazz Waiter," adapted from "Caught in a Cabaret"; "His Dare-Devil Queen," adapted from "Mabel at the Wheel," and "The Roustabout," adapted from "The Property Man."

The entire series are being re-edited, retitled and reconstructed, with an advertising display of exceptional one, three and six sheets for the two-reelers and one and three sheets for the single reelers; also a lobby display of attractive 8x10 photographs on each subject.

Sales of the Week

"Wrong Flat" Makes Fine Record.

Jester Comedy Company announces that "The Wrong Flat," the May release, has exceeded predictions for bookings from all parts of the country. Following its showing in New York, it was booked solid for the Loew circuit of theaters, and enthusiastic reports are being received from other points.

"'Men' Has Distinction" Says Foursquare Official

Bacon-Backer Production Also Contains Other Elements Which Go to Make Up a Successful Photoplay.

AN official of Foursquare Pictures, which is distributing the U. S. Exhibitors' feature production "Men," made by Bacon-Backer Film Company, in speaking of this picture states that it has the elements appreciated by exhibitors; that is, heart interest, "pep," "punch" and distinction.

"Distinction," he further states, "is the element which every motion picture producer aims constantly to put into his photoplays. It isn't easily secured, as it is attested by the infrequency of its appearance. But ever so often the quality of distinction is reflected in some feature, and then the public enthuses over that particular picture and the exhibitor makes money with it.

"'Men,' the Bacon-Backer six-reel photoplay, has this ingredient, which runs through the entire photoplay; in the atmosphere of the production; in the settings; in the cast and the acting. The story itself, which was written by the celebrated playwright Harry S. Sheldon, from his admirable play ('Men'), has distinction. No set of producers can make a good feature picture out of a story that 'isn't there.' So the fountain, it would appear, is the story.

"'Men' in this fundamental respect, is fortunate and has the salient elements without which no story really is one. Preliminaries were begun in the Bacon-Becker studio in West Thirty-eighth street—in the heart of New York, a block away from the Metropolitan Opera house. Exhibitors visiting New York, who are welcome to drop in at this studio, will discover wherein it offers exceptional opportunities for motion picture making.

"In that studio the plans were formulated, with enough deliberation to give to every detail the attention necessary to creating something which would prompt exhibitors and the public to exclaim 'That's a picture!'

"George Backer, an experienced builder, supervised personally the designs for the sets and furnishings. As a consequence the many scenes which represent the interiors of the houses of smart New Yorkers are correct to the letter. They form a very considerable element in the appeal of 'Men,' because they contribute atmosphere to the situations.

"Made to fit a particular need, 'Men' was created with care by a corps of experts. There was no definite set release date.

Foursquare Will Distribute Hadley's "Cinema Symphony"

George Backer Secures Controlling Interest in "The Lost Chord" Based on Song with Same Title.

HOPP HADLEY announces that after a private showing, George Backer took over the controlling interest in his first "Cinema-Symphony" and arrangements are being completed for its early release through Foursquare exchanges. It is stated that this deal was made on the strength of the story, production, and value as a novelty, as on account of important changes in the musical setting it was impossible to have the production screened for Mr. Backer in conjunction with the symphony.

This cinema symphony is based on Sir Arthur Sullivan's "The Lost Chord"; it is in five reels and is said to tell a story with considerable heart interest, written around the hero of the song. A love story leads up to a climax as the organist strikes the chord "like the sound of the great amen." A tragedy interrupts this, and the chord is lost and later found through an act of self-sacrifice.

Sol P. Levy and M. Winkler, who are working on the musical arrangement, are enthusiastic over the possibilities in the development of this idea, and Mr. Backer sees in it an excellent opportunity for theater managers to show their patrons the strenuous efforts they are making to give them musical programs in keeping with the elaborate productions, and to advertise their musicians in connection with the pictures and awaken a new interest in their efforts to supply music of quality.

"Increased Demand For Special Pictures," Says Hall

President of United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation Declares Theaters Desire Them to Hold Patrons' Interest and Attract New Business.

WITH the completion of preparations for the immediate release of the two new U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation productions, "Men" and "The Crucible of Life," Frank Hall is again keeping his committee of selection busy with a view to finding, at the earliest possible moment, another picture that measures up to his standards.

Starting with Tom Ince's "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," Mr. Hall's first choice for release under the U. S. banner, and taking into account the business done by "Those Who Pay," "The Belgian" and "Just a Woman," the demand for pictures with special advertising angles is, according to Mr. Hall, much greater than the supply.

"The theaters need, and must have, big special productions at frequent intervals," said Mr. Hall. "There is no business in the world which can as little afford to fall into ruts as the show business, and experienced theater managers are constantly on the alert to find something out of the ordinary to give them an excuse to make the kind of a noise that will attract unusual attention to their theaters. They know that there is no such thing as a fixed amount of box-office business independent of the attractions. They also know that when business is not building it is falling off. Big special pictures are necessary not only to draw new business, but also to keep their regular patrons from losing interest. Extra efforts to attract new patrons are imperative and it is up to us, as distributors, to give them exceptional pictures as often as possible."

Both "The Crucible of Life" and "Men" were produced under special conditions with a view to making them exceptional productions. Captain Harry Lambert staged the former for the Authors' Film Company, while the latter is the initial offering of the new Bacon-Backer studios.

Drummond Buys Rights On Several Productions

A PROMINENT out-of-town buyer who visited New York during the past week was W. E. Drummond, president of the Special Features Company, Knoxville, Tenn., operating one of the largest and most successful state-right exchanges in the Southern states.

Mr. Drummond's trip was for the purpose of securing additional pictures to add to the already large list he is offering in his territory, and he reports the following purchases: From Ernest Shipman, "Berlin Via America," the Francis Ford production, for Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia and Florida; from Pioneer Film Corporation, "The Still Alarm," for Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida and South Carolina; from Arrow Film Corporation, the Randolph Film Corporation's six-reel feature "The Million Dollar Mystery," based on the successful serial of the same title, for Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina; from the Sunset Film Corporation, "A Lion of the Hills," featuring William S. Hart, for Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida and South Carolina; from W. H. Productions Co., twenty-eight Keystone comedy reissues, and twenty-six Charlie Chaplin comedy reissues for Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina.

Mr. Drummond reports that conditions are very promising in the South, and that since the beginning of Spring, the business of the moving picture houses has been steadily on the increase, and he looks for a very prosperous summer.

Gay Life of Broadway Shown in "Devil's Playground"

CONFINING itself to the gay life of Broadway, "The Devil's Playground" is said to be unique, in that its characters are prosperous men and women respected in their various communities, while the dark side of life with its underworld characters has no place in the drama.

Harry McRae Webster, who directed the production and collaborated with Dallas Tyler in writing the story, saw in the gay life of the wealthy who flock to Broadway from all parts of the world, an excellent opportunity for a strong drama with exceptional spectacular features. The brilliantly lighted cabarets crowded with merrymakers and the gorgeously furnished tea dansants with their beautifully gowned patrons of modern dancing furnished backgrounds suited to the action of a strong drama of New York life, and he is said to have made good use of them and to have produced in "The Devil's Playground" a picture of unusual interest not only to New Yorkers, but to theater patrons throughout the world.

Vera Michelena, the star, is surrounded with a strong cast including Harry Springler, William H. Tooker, George S. Trimble, Robert Cummings and Lillian Cook.

Whartons Complete "The Eagle's Eye"

Finish Nineteenth and Twentieth Episodes at Their Ithaca Studios This Week.

THE Whartons completed the filming of the nineteenth and twentieth episodes of "The Eagle's Eye" at their Ithaca studios this week. The twentieth episode shows the events which immediately preceded the declaration of war on Germany by the United States.

First-run houses have reached the twelfth episode, which depicts the attempt to blow up the locks of the Welland Canal, and The Whartons announce that reports indicate it is increasing patronage as it progresses. Bookings on the serial for second, third, fourth and fifth runs are record breaking, according to M. H. Hoffman, the manager of Foursquare.

Many exhibitors are making special arrangements for the showing of the thirteenth and fourteenth episodes. The thirteenth episode, "The Reign of Terror," shows activities of Franz von Bopp, the German Consul General in San Francisco, recently convicted for having fomented a rebellion in the British East Indies, and the fourteenth episode, "The Infantile Paralysis Epidemic," shows incidents in connection with the activities of Imperial German spies in America which are said to raise a grave question as to whether the Kaiser's agents should not be blamed for the various epidemics which have had such disastrous effects in the last three years.

Webster Taken Ill Justas "Reclaimed" Is Finished

Says Scenario of This Production Is Most Consistent and Well Constructed He Ever Directed and Work of Cast Excellent.

HARRY McRAE WEBSTER, who has just completed his seven-reel feature, "Reclaimed; the Struggle for a Soul Between Love and Hate," the work of Richard Field Carroll, is at present confined to his home, having been stricken with a serious ailment just after the last reel was assembled.

Mabel Julienne Scott.

Mr. Webster just before he was taken ill, stated that the story of "Reclaimed," while not a wonderful one, was the most consistent and well constructed scenario he had ever directed. He further remarked that the photography of this picture was 100 per cent., for which he gives credit to Harry Forbes.

Mr. Webster also states that the acting of not only the stars, Miss Mabel Juliene Scott and Niles Welch, but their leading support, Anders Randolf and the others, including Mabel Wright, Frederic W. Peters, Warren Cook, Sidney Bracy and last, but not least, Bobby Connelly, equals anything he has been associated with in his long and varied career as a motion picture director.

"Reclaimed," he added, "will not only please the public, but will satisfy the exhibitor, and I miss my guess if it is not one of the most consistent long, lasting sellers that has been seen in many a day."

It is said to be the opinion of those privileged to see "Reclaimed" that the artistic achievement of Mabel Julienne Scott is superior to anything she has heretofore accomplished.

This is very gratifying to producer Webster, who has been successful in the development of many now famous stars, including Leonore Ulrich, Dorothy Phillips, Gerda Holmes, Ruth Stonehouse and Sallie Crute, who received their first instructions in photodrama and began their climb to fame with him.

In No Hurry to Announce Release Plans for "Mickey"

IN commenting upon the method of distribution for "Mickey," featuring Mabel Normand, a Western Import Company official makes the following statement:

"We are in no hurry to release 'Mickey' until everything has been properly done to make it possible to give 'Mickey' a most thorough foundation for a successful showing in every part of the world.

"'Mickey' will be just as valuable as a box-office asset two years from now as it is today. It is not a war picture or a propaganda picture. It is a picture that the public will clamor for, a picture that will make them forget their worries and hardships, their sorrow and anxiety. It will thrill them, entertain them, please and satisfy them, and they will be glad they saw "Mickey" and will want to see it again.

"'Mickey' is gaining in value every day, and when it is released, in our opinion, it will be the greatest theater-filler that has ever been put out."

Interesting Subjects in Gaumont News and Graphic

Fighting Aeroplanes, French Aces, Arrival of Blue Devils, Record Breaking Launching of Freighter "Tuckahoe" and Other Timely Topics.

THE current issues of Gaumont "News" and "Graphic" are filled with well photographed news events from all parts of the United States, South America and Europe.

Gaumont Graphic No. 6 has a baker's dozen of subjects. One of the most interesting shows the fighting aeroplanes and some of the most prominent French "Aces," including Adjutant Garaud, a mere boy in appearance, who has 12 victories to his credit, and Lieutenant Madon, who has brought down 26 German flyers. Other French subjects show the arrival of Secretary of War Baker in Paris, and some French war dolls which have been created by wounded soldiers.

War activities in the United States are shown, including intensive work in trench warfare, the entertainment of the marines on their weekly half-holiday, and the training of college boys as reserve officers to be used in case of later emergency.

The reception tendered the "Blue Devils of France," at City Hall, New York, is also shown. These famous fighters, all of whom wear two or more crosses of honor awarded for distinguished bravery, were sent to this country to aid in the Third Liberty Loan campaign.

The reception in Washington by President Wilson of Viscount Ishii, the new Japanese Envoy; the dislodging by dynamite of 250,000 tons of stone for highway building; the inspection by Army officers of alligator hide, to take the place of leather for many war purposes, are also pictured.

In Gaumont News No. 7 is shown the record-breaking launching of the 5,548-ton steel freighter, "Tuckahoe," in 27 days after the keel was laid.

The 18 Shropshire sheep which President Wilson has purchased are shown grazing on the White House lawn; also "Raisin Day" pageant in Fresno, California, which developed into a patriotic demonstration, and the annual marathon, from Bronx to City Hall, in New York City.

Foreign subjects show the review and decoration of troops by King Victor Emmanuel III, of Italy; the inspection by Secretary of War Baker and General Pershing of a Red Cross Rest Station; the transportation of war supplies over the snow-clad mountains of Europe by Alaskan "huskies," these dogs seeming as much at home in the Alps as they were in their native country. The reception which New York City tendered the "Anzacs," Britain's famous fighters from Australia and New Zealand, who were sent to the United States to aid in the Third Liberty Loan campaign, closes the reel.

Zaretsky Secures Several Bookings.

Among the recent visitors to the film district of New York was Joe Levy, who is in charge of the Bee-Hive Exchange, St. Louis, handling Billy West King Bee Comedies.

During Mr. Levy's absence, Joe Zaretsky was in charge of the exchange, and reports that he closed six new contracts with moving picture theaters for this popular brand of comedies.

Selling Campaign Begun on Rialto-De Luxe Picture

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that on account of the numerous inquiries and pressing demands for an early release of "The Unchastened Woman," the Rialto-DeLuxe production adapted for the screen from Oliver Morosco's successful play of the same title, it has been decided to initiate a territorial selling campaign without further delay.

Grace Valentine, who is starred in "The Unchastened Woman," will be seen throughout the country on the stage during the summer and early fall in one of Oliver Morosco's productions, and the suggestion is made that the fact of exploiting the double publicity may have been in some respects the cause of the demand for an early release, as Miss Valentine's success in recent pictures in which she was featured is said to have been coincident with her appearance in San Francisco, Los Angeles, and other western cities, her tour terminating in Chicago.

A unique feature in connection with this production is that it affords Miss Valentine an opportunity to find out what theatergoers think of her work in diametrically opposite roles; for, while in the stage production "Lombardi, Ltd.," Morosco's comedy success, in which she will tour the country, she is seen in light and frivolous comedy work; in "The Unchastened Woman" she is called upon to enact an intensely dramatic role.

Scene from "The Unchastened Woman" (Rialto-De Luxe).

Flynn Serial Popular With Canadian Theaters

REPORTS from Superfeatures Limited indicate that since the United States troops were placed in first line trenches and are assisting in holding back the Huns, that American propaganda pictures are popular with patrons of Canadian motion picture theaters, who desire information regarding the attitude of residents of this country toward the war.

In line with this, "The Eagle's Eye" is said to be in extraordinary demand, and a number of Canadian exhibitors have adopted the slogan in connection with this serial, "Twenty reasons why America went to war."

The release date in Canada is six weeks later than in the United States, and the premier showing was held in the Brant theater, Brantford, a city of less than 25,000 inhabitants, where the first episode played for three days to record-breaking audiences.

Similar records were also made in the houses controlled by the Griffins Amusement Company, seven of their houses in Ontario, located in towns of less than 20,000 population having booked the serial for three-day runs; the theaters being located at Kingston, St. Catherine's, Belleville, Welland, Chatham, Woodstock and Guelph.

Bell Brings Business.

W. H. Bell, head of the new Bee-Hive Exchange, with offices at the Ozark Building, Kansas City, is said to have one of the finest suites of offices in the Middle West, and is meeting with great success in selling the Billy West King-Bee Comedies.

Mr. Bell was formerly connected with the Williams Film Corporation of Australia, Select and Paramount companies.

Twede Dan Completes Eighth Jester.

Following the completion of the eighth Jester Comedy, Twede Dan, the star, is taking a much needed vacation, which he feels will put him in fine shape to start on the next four productions which will conclude the first year's release of twelve. He is four releases ahead of schedule and feels that he is entitled to a rest.

W. H. Official Speaks Regarding Market Conditions

Answers Article by Prominent Producer—Says Independent Field Is in Healthy Condition and Points to Sales Record of This Company.

IN commenting upon an article in the trade papers during the past week, from a prominent state rights producer, to the effect that the state rights market is becoming of less importance, an official of W. H. Productions Company made the following statement:

"The point emphasized was that the state rights buyers were not anxious to acquire the rights to independent productions on account of the fact that they could not be booked in a majority of the first-run houses. This is true to a certain extent. However, the independent market is in just as healthy a condition today as it ever was, but there is a difference in the market valuation of features exploited independently.

"Although the great number of the first-run houses are practically tied up, as this producer states, still a state rights buyer will invest his money now as before in exceptional special features because the majority of the first-run houses will lay their regular feature on the shelf as soon as they realize they can secure an exceptional box-office feature to take its place. A production of this nature still retains its high value on the market and can be readily disposed of, not only to the state rights buyer, but also from the state rights buyer to the exhibitor, the method of exploitation, of course, being taken into consideration. On the other hand a fair or average production released independently can also be sold to state rights buyers provided the price for the rights is gauged according to the possible revenue a state rights man can take in, allowing a fair profit.

"There are, therefore, these two distinct types of productions that can be sold easily and quickly on the state rights market today, for the reasons above mentioned.

"W. H. Productions Company has been in business since December, and has disposed of practically its entire output on a cash basis to state rights buyers—a million dollars worth of cash business during this time, through the independent market. It has sold the entire country on all of the William S. Hart reissues, the series of twenty-eight two-reel Mack Sennett Keystone comedies, most of the country on the Bessie Barriscale Series and the Shorty Hamiltons, and upon deciding to release the series of twenty-six one and two-reel Charlie Chaplins, about two weeks ago, before being able to place our advertising matter, we have by sending wires to various state rights buyers been able to dispose of practically the entire country on this series.

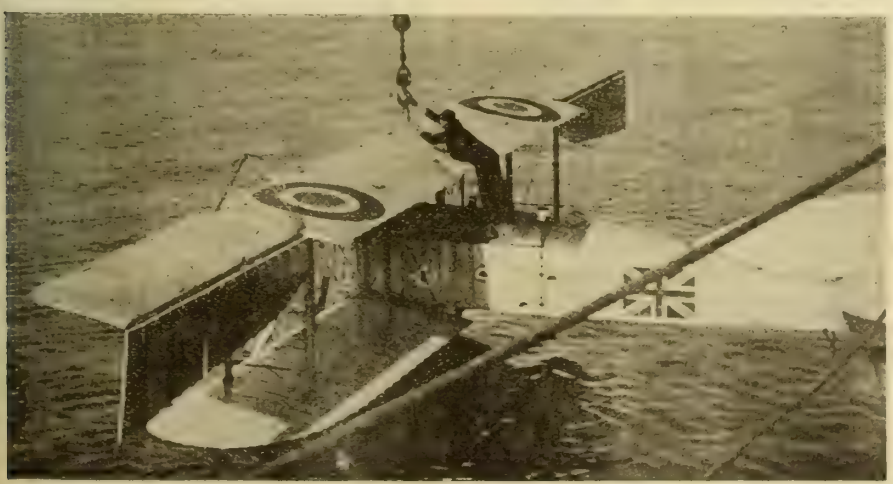
"All of our business was done without the solicitation of salesmen, which we attribute to the fact that we have made it a point to buy productions that are box-office successes, good stories with prominent stars, so that we can satisfy not only the clamor for stars, but at the same time give quality productions that back up these stars. For instance, our William S. Hart and our Bessie Barriscale features, our Keystones and Chaplins have proven themselves of double value. We have been able to sell them on the strength of the names of the stars, and because of the success of our first release have been able to resell rapidly to the same buyers other subjects of equal value.

"We are fortunately blessed with being able to pick box-office pictures. We buy with the thought of disposition, at the same time purchasing only those productions which we know the various exchanges and exhibitors will want and will buy. In addition we have given these productions an entire new dress, being re-edited, retitled and reconstructed, and exploited with thorough advertising and service helps. Every one of the exchanges throughout the country handling W. H. Productions' output has been obliged to order additional prints on nearly all of the various subjects, due to the successful showings to date.

"W. H. Productions Company attributes the success of its output to the fact that not only have the pictures been put out properly but that the advertising matter was of a practical nature which enabled the exhibitors to display the productions to the best advantage and secure maximum returns. And these W. H. productions subjects, no doubt, will be the means of a great number of exhibitors throughout the country keeping their theaters filled during the hot summer months."

Will State Right "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21"

THE Interstate Film Company announces that in spite of flattering offers from two large distributing companies for the outright purchase of "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21," they have decided to state-right the production. An official of this company said that immediately after the recent trade showing so many requests from state-right buyers were received that a sale of the production by state rights was imperative. He continued: "Although the film is to be issued as a two-reeler, it must be remembered that every foot is replete with startling revelations and thrills depicting for the first time on any screen the Zeppelin L-21 raiding London and its subsequent destruction. In photographing the production enough film was taken to make a ten-reel picture, but we have sacrificed quantity for quality, and in its present form 'The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21" should top the list in its entertaining and educational value and patriotic and box-office appeal."



Scene from "Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21" (Interstate).

Fourth Petrova Picture a Thrilling Melodrama

A RADICAL departure from the type of role which she has usually portrayed, will be found in Madame Petrova's fourth special production "Tempered Steel." Written for her by the well-known playwright, George Middleton, author of one of the season's stage successes, "Polly with a Past," it is said to be an out-and-out melodramatic thriller. Incidentally, it is the first of the series which Ralph Ince is to direct for Madame Petrova, and is said to have the "punch" elements for which he is well known.

The role of Lucille Caruthers, which Madame Petrova depicts, is that of a young and stage-struck southern society girl who suddenly finds herself involved in the mad whirl of theatrical life in New York. Through a chain of peculiar circumstances she finds herself guilty of murder in the eyes of the law, and it is anounced that in working out the dramatic situations and melodramatic emotions which abound throughout the production, audiences will find a unique and surprising versatility displayed by a star whose forte was usually thought to be of an entirely different character.

This production will be distributed through the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and will follow "The Life Mask" on Petrova's calendar of releases.

Boston Film Trade Letter Week of May 5

Notes from the Exchanges—Sales Force Shake-Up at the Pathe—Changes in Theater Ownership—Personal Notes.

By Robert N. Howe, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

Mutual Notes from Boston.

BOSTON, MASS.—Manager Joseph Roth, of the Mutual Film, announces that the "Screen Telegram" is receiving heavy bookings. Two are released each week, one on Tuesday and Wednesday.

A private showing of William Russell in "Hearts of Diamonds" was held at the run-off room of the Mutual Exchange.

The Boston office of the Mutual must have gone "over the top" from the announcement of Manager Roth that every employee purchased a Liberty Bond.

Hiram Abrams Visits Boston.

Hiram Abrams, former president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, who is now chief of the Bureau of Administration of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was visiting Boston this week.

He left Saturday, May 4, after spending a pleasant two weeks—visiting the theaters in Greater Boston.

Lee Rodinger Buys the Happy Owl.

Lee Rodinger, a well-known film man in Concord, New Hampshire, owner of three theaters in Concord, has bought the Happy Owl theater in Rockland, Mass. The theater at present is without a manager and is under the personal direction of Mr. Rodinger.

Buxbaum Pleased with Boston Office.

Henry Buxbaum, district manager of the Pathe offices, left Boston Saturday, May 4, very well satisfied with the Boston office, which is now under the management of Stanley W. Hand. Together the men reorganized the sales force and reapportioned the following territory: Mr. Plame and Mr. Rogers will cover the city territory; Mr. Jennings will handle New Hampshire and Essex county, Mass.; Mr. Corbett is taking Western Massachusetts; Mr. Dodge is assigned to Connecticut and Handen counties, Mass.; Mr. Masse will cover Rhode Island and the Cape; Mr. Walters will cover Maine.

Manager S. D. Hand, succeeding Charles W. Perry, was given a rousing welcome and presented with a beautiful basket of flowers by the exchangemen of Boston.

Walter S. Goodwin, for many years a traveling salesman in the film business, has been added to the sales force of the Pathe to handle throughout the New England territory such big productions as "Moral Suicide."

"The Unbeliever" in Allentown.

R. Berger, manager of the Perfection Pictures, announces that "The Unbeliever" has been booked for a solid week at the Hippodrome in Allentown, Pa., by George Bennethum, and will be presented beginning Monday, May 27, which will be the first time any production has been run for this length of time in this theater.

Takes Over Atlantic City Theater.

The Stanley Company announces that it has secured control of the new Nixon theater in Atlantic City. After extensive rebuilding and redecorating of the interior the theater will have a formal opening about the latter part of July under the new name of the Globe theater. Attractions booked through the Shubert offices will be shown exclusively. Other theaters controlled by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company, are the Colonial and the Virginia, showing photoplays.

Grand and Jackson Change Hands.

The Grand and Jackson, two moving picture theaters of Philadelphia, together assessed at $65,000, were conveyed recently by Margaret Donahue to the Grand Amusement Company for a nominal sum. The first, a two-story brick building, is on the west side of 7th street and Snyder avenue. It is assessed at $50,000. The other is on a lot at 519 to 531 Jackson street, a two-story building constructed of brick.

Court Permits Griffith Film to Show.

The Common Pleas Court, of Philadelphia, decided in favor of D. W. Griffith's film spectacle, "Hearts of the World," on last Friday, and allowed the opening presentation to be given the next day at the Garrick theater.

Rita Jolivet Stirs Shamokin.

Robert J. Lynch accompanied Rita Jolivet to Shamokin, Pa., last week, where the star in the Metro production, "Lest We Forget," made her appearance before 5,000 people on Thursday, May 2, in the Victoria theater. The writer has it direct from Shamokin that never in its history has a more capable, soul-stirring, patriotic woman speaker been heard here.

W. J. Hagerty Did Splendid Work.

W. J. Hagerty, manager of the Triangle exchange in Philadelphia, secured during the Liberty Loan campaign which just closed over $75,000 worth of subscriptions in the downtown section of the city for the South Philadelphia Branch of the Women's Liberty Loan Motion Picture Committee.

Pittsburgh and West Pennsylvania Letter

Official French Aero War Films in the Smoky City—New Managers at the Kleine and the General Exchanges—Theater Notes.

By Edward J. McGurty, 455 Union Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—One of the finest exhibitions is in full swing here this week at the Hotel Schenley. Lieutenant Henri Favre is giving an exhibition of aerial battle paintings, which is a most beautiful collection of French art, and in connection with the exhibition there are two moving picture performances daily at 2.30 and 8.30 giving a vivid presentation of the French aviation service in action. The title of the moving pictures is "The Official French Aero War Films." The admission charge is 50 cents and the exhibition and pictures were shown from May 4 to May 11. The proceeds are devoted to "the children of French aviators killed in action."

Draft of Young Men Being Felt.

The draft is still making inroads on the exchange and exhibition ends of the business here. The younger men are being rapidly taken, and it is the opinion of some of the managers here that June will see a large delegation in the draft from the theaters and exchanges. There are now more than 200 operators and film exchange salesmen and inside men who have gone, in one branch of the service or another.

Dennison in Charge of General.

The local office of the General Film has changed managers. Mr. Dennison having taken the position which has been held by Mr. Kinson. Both men are well known in the territory, Mr. Dennison having been the personal representative of Mr. Jas. Steels in the Famous Players' organization for a number of years. Mr. Kinson has been in the territory for years, having held the managership of General in its early period here.

H. E. Nichols Becomes Kleine Manager.

The George Kleine System's local branch lost its manager, Mr. Oldfield, but Uncle Sam has gained a recruit. Mr. Oldfield has been manager for Kleine in Cleveland and Pittsburgh, and has joined the Marines at Boston. The new manager is H. E. Nichols, who has been in Pittsburgh in the film business for many years, having been successively connected with General, Mutual, Paramount and Kleine.

Three Theaters Building.

A new theater is about to be built in Brookville, Pa., the estimated cost being in the neighborhood of $60,000. This is an exceptionally good town for an up-to-date picture theater as it is the county seat of a flourishing agricultural county.

Clearfield, Pa., a town in the north central part of the state, has a new theater under construction which will have from 850 to 900 seats, and which it is expected will be completed about August 15. The theater will be equipped and appointed in the best of style. It is being built by S. L. Driggs, an exhibitor there for years. His present house seats about 400. About two years ago the Opera House burned down in Clearfield and the town has had but one show since, with the exception of a small airdome summer venture last year. Mr. Driggs has had the construction of the house in mind for some time, but awaited an opportune time to build.

A new theater has been built at Blair Station, Pa., by Mr. Joe Capristo, who has installed a gold-fibre screen and two of the new model machines. This is a small place, but needs a picture theater badly.

Kansas City News Letter

K. C. Feature Transfers Two Men.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—R. O. Allison, formerly of the paper department of the Kansas City Feature Film Company at Kansas City, has been sent to the St. Louis office of the company to take charge of the paper department there. James Donahue, also of the paper department at Kansas City, has been sent to the Omaha office of the company to take over the management of the paper department there.

Mutual Signs J. H. Hill As Salesman.

J. H. Hill, formerly a traveling salesman for the St. Louis Pathe office, has been made a member of the sales force of the Kansas City Mutual office. He succeeds William Parsons, who has been called by the draft. Mr. Hill will cover a territory in northern Missouri and northern Kansas. He formerly worked the eastern half of Missouri.

E. J. Peskay to Travel for Camp Bell.

E. J. Peskay, formerly a traveler for the Kansas City Select office, and also for the Old Midwest Photoplay Corporation, has been made city sales manager for the Camp Bell Company, which has recently opened an office in Kansas City.

Sam Sherman Covering Kansas.

Sam Sherman has been added to the sales force of the Kansas City Feature Film Company. He will travel in Kansas.

The Camp Bell Office Gets Busy.

The Camp Bell Company has been installed in their new offices at 211 Ozark building, Kansas City, Mo., and the exchange presents a decidedly pleasing appearance. The persons interested in the new company are M. Campbell, a leading business man of Kansas City, and W. H. Bell, formerly of the Kansas City Select Corporation, of which office he was manager. He was also organizer and general manager of the old Midwest Photoplay Corporation, and district manager for the General Film Company in this territory. Before entering the Kansas City territory, Mr. Bell spent many years specializing in distribution in different parts of the world; namely, New Zealand and Australia. The office is now open for business, and has already had considerable success in the independent field. It is the fourth independent exchange in the city.

Claremore, Okla.—The Electric theater will be opened under the management of Fred Harvey.

Kioawa, Okla.—The People's theater will again open its doors to the public under the management of Messrs. Cecil Rowley, Guy Henderson, and Clifford Jones.

World Pictures Gets Employees' Views.

For the purpose of getting a comprehensive slant on the wants of exhibitors during war times, World Pictures asked all of its salesmen to give their honest opinion of just what the World should do in the way of productions while the war continues. As the result of this conference and a careful survey of picture conditions in England, France and Italy, World Pictures has determined to increase its output by the addition of the Fay Tincher and Marie Dressler comedies, and to produce pleasing pictures of civil life reflecting hope, optimism, and uplift instead of the sordid and tragic phases of life. Of course there will be occasional war pictures depicting the tense dramatic phases of the war, but these will not be morbid or depressing.

Oklahoma Theaters Praised by McAdoo

Quick Response in Picture Houses to President's Small Bond Challenge—Newspapers and the Theaters—Films Making Records.

By H. W. Smith, Liberty Theater Bldg., Oklahoma City, Okla.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.—Exchanges here report unusually good business the past two weeks, and theaters appear to have recovered from the slight slump occasioned by the Third Liberty Loan drive in the state. Oklahoma exhibitors feel justly pleased with this state's showing in the third loan campaign. Oklahoma was one of the first "over the top" with its quota. The cooperation of exhibitors with leaders in the loan campaign was unremitting. Secretary McAdoo, a visitor in Oklahoma City, April 27, congratulated the city on the practical patriotism of its showmen.

Following within twelve hours (the news was printed in the morning dailies) an account of President Wilson's extra subscription to the Third Liberty Loan an appeal was made from the stages of two-thirds of the theaters in the state to accept the President's challenge and buy "one more" bond. In one small town of Oklahoma $8,500 was subscribed in one night. Four Minute men in Oklahoma City from the stage of the theaters here raised $20,000 in response to President Wilson's declaration as made in a Washington playhouse.

Reverting to conditions of the film industry in this territory the best evidence of growing demand for big pictures is the fact that the Universal exchange has ordered its fourth print of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," and reports that it is booked one month ahead, while the other three prints are booked for three months in advance. The reception accorded Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" at the Overholser theater, where it was shown for one week at a top price of $1, is regarded by the First National office here as assurance of demand in excess of print supply. William Russell in "Hearts or Diamonds" is booking fast, and Nazimova's "Revelation" is leading sales in this territory for the Metro exchange. Pathe's leaders in this territory recently are "The German Curse in Russia," Fannie Ward's "Yellow Ticket," and the serial, "The House of Hate."

The disposition of newspapers here and over the state to take cognizance of the importance of motion pictures at this time is apparent. The Daily Oklahoman, the leading paper of the state, has, from no mention at all of the motion picture programs six months ago, opened its columns so that now it devotes two pages of its Sunday edition to amusement and amusement advertising. Exchanges here are paying more attention to the matter of supplying all daily papers and some of the weeklies in the state newsy material about motion pictures.

Jack Wahl has been engaged indefinitely as press representative in Oklahoma for "My Four Years in Germany."

Chaplin Film Fills Theater Many Times.

"A Dog's Life," the Chaplin picture, played to 6,700 admissions Saturday, May 4, at the Empress theater here. Of this number 1,501 were children's tickets. The Empress seating capacity is 1,000. T. H. Boland, manager, arranged an ideal children's program for the day, showing Jack Pickford in "Tom Sawyer" as the feature along with the Chaplin comedy. The Empress was the first theater in the state to become a link in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. There are three prints of the Chaplin comedy working out of the Oklahoma City office at present, and 41 theaters in the state are now members of the circuit. Every one of the 41 have spoken for a return date of "A Dog's Life."

Exhibitors at the Exchanges.

W. T. Yoder, formerly with Universal, will represent Pathe out of Oklahoma City exchange, traveling the northeast part of the state. Yoder has a new automobile in which he will cover his territory.

Business Conditions in Canada Favorable

Reports from Returning Film Salesmen Show Prospects Bright in Both West and East—Theaters Exhibit Patriotic Spirit.

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONT.—"The feeling all over the Canadian West is very optimistic," reports A. W. Wootton, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, Western Canadian representative of the Vitagraph, after making a number of lengthy trips through his territory during the past few weeks.

According to Mr. Wootton the smaller towns are now rather quiet because the farmers have been so busy with seeding operations that they have not had the opportunity for diversions, but the immediate prospects everywhere are very good. Exchanges are not getting so high prices for big features as they were a short time ago, generally speaking, but there is a god demand for special attractions and other pictures everywhere.

Vincent McCabe, representing the Fox Film Corporation in Canada, also reports that the outlook for the film business in Quebec is very bright generally. He found a great improvement in the theaters themselves, and there was a satisfactory state of affairs in business throughout the Province. Quebec exhibitors had been very generous in donating their theaters and portions of receipts for patriotic causes, and they deserved more credit than they had been receiving.

"Conditions in the city of Montreal are excellent at present," said Mr. McCabe. "Of course Sunday opening has a great deal to do with the volume of business done, and considerable interest has been aroused over the possible attempt to force Sunday closing there. Conditions had been more or less unsettled, but the situation now is stable."

R. Kershaw Retires from Wonderland.

R. Kershaw, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, has announced his retirement as manager of the Wonderland theater, Winnipeg, to take effect on April 30. Mr. Kershaw recently donated one day's receipts at the Wonderland theater to the Canadian Red Cross Society when the attraction was Jack Pickford in "The Spirit of '17."

Had a Good Time in New York.

Judging by his own accounts of experiences, Manager George Swanwick, of the Princess theater, Hamilton, Ontario, must have had a very enjoyable time on his recent visit to New York City. For a portion of the time Swanwick was a guest of the Greater Vitagraph, and he spent considerable time at the studio, where he met a number of stars. He also tells of a visit at the Lambs' Club.

New Theater at Hamilton Pleases.

The Regent theater, Hamilton, Ontario, has got away to a fine start. This is a brand new house located in a purely residential section in the southwest portion of the city. It has seven hundred seats and boasts a three-piece orchestra. Admissions charged are 15c and 10c. The theater was built by McKay Bros., local contractors, who are also operating the house. They are using Paramount attractions.

Another Loew Theater Serves Tea.

Following the success made at Loew's theater, Montreal, in serving afternoon tea in the foyer at all matinee performances except on Saturdays, the new Loew theater at Hamilton, Ontario, has adopted the same feature. Tea and cake are served from "tea wagons" by young ladies on the mezzanine floor.

New House in Peterboro.

Snider Bros., jewellers of Peterboro, Ontario, have decided to build a brand new moving pictuer theater to seat 600 people. The Sniders recently acquired the Strand theater, Peterboro, which seats only 200, and this has been operated with good success. When the new theater is ready the Strand will be closed permanently, it is announced.

B. Harris Will Manage Garden Theater.

B. Harris, of Regal Films, Ltd., Toronto, has been appointed manager of the Garden theater, College street. This theater, which is one of the best known neighborhood houses in Toronto, was recently purchased by Regal Films.

"War Gardens" a New Canadian Film.

Canadian exhibitors did a timely bit of boosting starting with the week of April 29 when they presented an official one-reel subject, "War Gardens," which is being supplied by the Motion Picture Committee of the Canadian Food Controller's office. This committee is composed of Jules and J. J. Allen, of the Famous Players' Film Service, and Clair Hague, president of the Canadian Universal.

Theater's Brilliant Anniversary.

The Imperial theater, Montreal, celebrated its fifth anniversary by the staging of special shows during the week of April 21. For the first three days the attraction was "One More American," starring George Beban, while the feature during the last half was "Love Me," with Dorothy Dalton. Manager Conover ran special advertising in the newspapers.

The week wound up with an extra matinee on Saturday morning for the children when the attraction was "Daddy's Girl," starring Baby Marie Osborne. The wives and children of a number of overseas soldiers were the guests of the management on this occasion. An orchestral concert, under the direction of J. J. Goullet, was held in connection with the regular Saturday matinee.

Manager Conover has arranged for the presentation of a series of British War Office news reels, which show the scenes in various countries of various important incidents of the war. This series is being handled in Canada by the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., Canadian Pathe distributors.

Organizes Screen Club in Montreal.

John Smythe, of Regal Films, Ltd., Montreal, has organized a Screen Club for Montreal and has arranged to open headquarters at 319 University street. Membership in the club will be open to all who are associated with the moving picture business, including exhibitors, exchange managers, salesmen and theater owners. Mr. English is slated for the presidency.

Independent Announces New Features.

George F. Perkins, general manager of the Independent Film Company, Montreal, announces that his company has acquired the Canadian rights for a number of features, including "The Public Defender," "The Master Crook," "The Other Girl" and "The Modern Lorelei."

Theater Starts Disastrous Fire.

Trois Rivieres, Quebec, known in English as Three Rivers, was visited by a disastrous fire on May 3 when a blaze started in the projection room of the Victoria theater, Bonaventure street, the main business thoroughfare. The whole theater was quickly in flames and the fire soon consumed many stores and houses in the block. There was no one in the theater at the time and the cause is unknown. The loss to the Victoria theater interests is placed at $40,000. Poor water pressure was responsible for the spread of the flames.

Newspaper That Wants No Movie Ads.

Moving picture exhibitors of Montreal, Quebec, are up in the air because they have received notification from the Montreal Star, the chief English newspaper of the city, that the amusement advertising rate had been boosted to twenty-one cents per line, a prohibitive price. A meeting of the local exhibitors' association was held at which the matter was freely discussed. It was pointed out that the picture theaters received little or no attention from the newspaper reviewers although the legitimate houses received lots of space.

Two Griffith Films Called Back.

Winnipeg, Manitoba, is seeing "The Birth of a Nation" and 'Intolerance" once more. Both of these special productions were scheduled for presentation at the Walker theater, Winnipeg, during the week of May 13, including large orchestra, choir and sound effects. The first named is down for the first half of the week, while Intolerance' 'is scheduled for the last half of the week.

Buffalo Trade Letter

Elmira Exhibitor Talks of Business.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—"When we took over this theater a year ago our daily receipts were sometimes as low as $10, but now, on Saturdays, for instance, we often cater to 2,000 persons," said F. J. Schweppe, manager of the Columbia moving picture theater, Elmira, who was a Buffalo visitor. "The reason for our expansion is that we apply business principles to the moving picture game. We have trained traveling film men, so that they know better than to offer a picture at a high price and then expect us to waste time trying to reduce it. The moving picture game must be played on a solid foundation or the exhibitor will be a failure. Film must be sold like potatoes and eggs. If there is no public demand for a picture there is no profit for the theater. In catering to the public it is first necessary to find out just what they want and then give it to them.

"When we buy a picture we want it on time so as not to disappoint our patrons," continued Mr. Schweppe. "When we advertise a picture in the newspapers and with slides for a certain day, and on that date the picture fails to arrive, all our investment in advertising is lost. We have to acknowledge to our people that we haven't the picture and must show something else. The fault is that the exchanges book up too close."

The Colonial is owned by the Syndicate Amusement Co., Inc. The admission, including war tax, is eleven cents. Elmira is thriving, especially because several of its factories are working overtime on war orders. Elmirans therefore have plenty of picture show money.

Mutual Exchange Notes.

W. A. Mack, manager of the Mutual, Buffalo, has been appointed chairman of the moving picture division of the advertising and publicity division of the second Red Cross drive in ths city. Plans have been prepared for the complete remodeling of the Mutual exchange, this city. The entire quarters will be on the ground floor. All departments will be separated. G. B. Svenson, construction engineer of Chicago, has prepared the plans.

General Film Exchange Moves.

The General Film Co. exchange, managed by Fred Flarity, has been moved to 160 Pearl street. Mr. Flarity's private office is richly rugged and the walls are adorned with oil paintings of some of the General stars. David Levy, cashier, has the honor of being the oldest employe in point of service at the General. He knows every exhibitor in the Buffalo territory by his first name. S. R. Banks and J. F. Kirsch, General salesmen, have resigned. George Ferguson, booker for the General, is now with the George Kleine System, Buffalo. C. E. Shurtleff, sales manager for W. W. Hodkinson Corp., called at the General this city.

H. Lorence Now a Corporal.

H. Lorence, former Mutual traveling representative, Buffalo, who enlisted in Uncle Sam's forces, is now a corporal at Camp Upton. A picture of Mr. Lorence appears herewith. The lively spirit which this young man displayed as a film salesman will be a valuable asset to him when he arrives shortly in France.

James Allen Goes to Atlanta.

James Allen, assistant manager of the George Kleine System, Buffalo, has been appointed manager of that company's exchange in Atlanta, Ga.

Charles Taylor, manager of the Pathe, Buffalo, has appointed Beals Brady, Rochester representative of the company.

Pathe Buffalo Jottings.

James W. Bengough, formerly of the Pathe office force, is now in Co. D, 311th Infantry, Camp Dix.

Charles J. Rose, city salesman for the Pathe, is a patriot. Impressed with the government's appeal for conserving gasoline, Mr. Rose has dispensed with the use of an auto or motorcycle in covering the town. He has decided to use a bicycle.

Louis D. Diamond, Pathe auditor, was a Buffalo caller.

Ben H. Dittrich is meeting with success as the new manager of the Ideal moving picture theater, Endicott, N. Y.

World Pictures Makes Changes.

J. E. Kimberley, manager of the World Pictures, Buffalo, has appointed Lee Crandall, of Washington, D. C., his Western New York representative, and J. C. Bullwinkel, of Boston, eastern representative of the Buffalo office. N. A. Thompson, World auditor, was a caller. John Child, former World salesman here, is now in France. He is with Co. E, 308th Regiment. On May 27 the World office, Buffalo, will release two-reel comedies by Fay Tincher and Marie Dressler.

Worked Hard and Had Dinner.

Buffalo's subscriptions in the Third Liberty Loan totaled $38,214,500. The theatrical section, of which John R. Oishei was chairman, went far "over the top." Mr. Oishei's section included the moving picture theaters. He and his co-workers attended a jollification dinner of all the loan committees at the Iroquois Hotel. At this banquet special tribute was paid to the theatrical men for their good work.

Ohio Exhibitors Film Exchange Started

Affiliates with the C. C. Pettijohn Organization and Begins Booking Cleveland Theaters—Officers Chosen to Head Company.

By M. A. Malaney, 607 Belmont Building, Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—With the incorporation of the Ohio Exhibitors' Film Exchange, at Columbia, last week, actual organization of the exhibitors of Cleveland into a booking circuit has started.

This corporation will be affiliated with the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, being promoted by C. C. Pettijohn and others. Mr. Pettijohn was in Cleveland a short time ago, explained his proposition in detail, and the local company was organized immediately.

The Ohio Exhibitors' Film Exchange was incorporated for $5,000. The officers are H. H. Lustig, president of the Cleveland Exhibitors' League; David Schumann, vice-president; M. B. Horwitz, secretary, and W. J. Slimm, treasurer. Max Schachtel also is one of the incorporators, and all are bona fide exhibitors.

Under the plan, this is a unit of the New York organization. It will control its own finances. The pictures to be bought will be shipped to the headquarters in Cleveland without any cash payment. The money received from exhibitors as they use a picture is sent on to New York to apply on account, and when the price of that picture is covered the balance of the rentals received from exhibitors is divided equally between the Ohio organization and the parent concern in New York.

"For the present," said Secretary Horwitz, "we will work Cleveland thoroughly and line up all the members we can get. Then we intend to go to Cincinnati and other large cities. However, we would like to hear from exhibitors everywhere in the state. They can reach us by addressing me care the Buckeye Poster Co., Sincere Bldg., Cleveland."

Interesting Film Trade Notes.

Paul C. Mooney, district manager for Fox, has returned to the job in Cleveland after two weeks spent at French Lick Springs. He is feeling fine.

Paul C. Mooney.

Sandusky.—A. W. Reed has leased the opera house at Upper Sandusky. He will make several improvements. Mr. Reed formerly was located in Bellefontaine.

Cleveland.—J. N. Roberts, of Wertsner, Wild & Co., Cleveland, has gone to the New York plant of this concern. His address is 150 Greene street.

Cleveland.—Ed Cohn, Cleveland film man, and Elmer Sells, Youngstown exhibitor, were observed in a box at the Empire theater recently. What's her name, boys?

Coshocton.—Paul Barcroft, of the Pastime and Utahna theaters, Coshocton, was in Cleveland for several days' vacation the first week of May.

Cleveland.—M. A. Lebensburger, who is now with the national army at Chickamauga Park, Ga., was in Cleveland last week on a week's furlough.

Forming New Film Club in Cleveland.

Photoplay exhibitors, exchange men and others of Cleveland interested in the film business are interesting themselves in the organization of a film club to succeed the Cleveland Screen Club, which passed out of existence last fall.

A meeting already has been held at which several hundred Cleveland folks attended, and preliminary steps were taken. The object of the club is to promote social affairs only and not to take part in any other branch of the industry's activities.

A committee to draw up the by-laws and constitution has been named. It includes Messrs. W. E. Lusk, E. J. Schmidt, S. E. Morris, E. N. Downs, Dave Adler, Jack Greenbaum, S. A. Gerson and M. A. Malaney.

Latest from the Tong Front Trench.

The Argus Co., distributors of the Cleveland Plain Dealer Screen Magazine, are contemplating producing a picture by M. W. Korach, assistant director. It is called "The Curse of the Golden Dragon." Mr. Korach in taking pictures of the recent Chinese convention got into trouble with one of the Tongs. They refused to pose for the picture and the result was an argument in Hebrew and Chinese. To make a long story short, after the storm of the chop suey and gafilta fish cleared away, the camera lay in the street, Korach lay in a policeman's arms while "One Hung Low" fractically waved his arms and placed the Curse of the Golden Dragon on Korach.

"Hub" Taylor Starts Supply Business.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—"Hub" Taylor, well known throughout western New York as the representative of Pathe in this territory, is now in business for himself, handling a full line of motion picture theater supplies. He is located on Johnston street in the quarters formerly occupied by the Victor Film exchange.

Paul Fennyvessey to Don Kahki.

Paul Fennyvessey, manager of the Strand theater, is soon to do his bit by entering the United States Army. He is the son of Albert A. Fennyvessey, of this city, president and general manager of the Theaters Operating Company, which concern controls Keith's Family, the Rialto (formerly the Colonial), and Strand theaters.

G. E. Simpson's Soldier Son in France.

George E. Simpson, head of the Regorson Company, operating the Regent, Gordon and Piccadilly theaters, has received word that his son, George A. Simpson, has arrived safely in France. The latter was with one of the supply companies which trained at Camp Upton.

Notes of Interest to the Trade.

Jack Farren, of the Victoria theater, not only has first run on the new Chaplins, but has also signed the Billy West comedies for first run.

R. B. Matson, representing Vitagraph in western New York, was in town all last week, and will continue here throughout this week.

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Olympic, Buffalo's big Lafayette Square theater, was in town the other day. Bruce said that he just run down to see how they do things in Rochester.

Cincinnati Operators Get Desired Increase

Committee of Exhibitors' League Decides to Concede to Demands for $4.00 Extra as Pay for Projecting on Sundays.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First Nat. Bank, Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—After consideration of the matter by a committee of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of the Chamber of Commerce the demand of the operators for an increase of $4 for working on Sunday was granted. The exhibitors felt it to be the course of business men to give some thought to the demand from the standpoint of its effect on the cost of operation, but, as stated in this column at the time the demand was presented, it was favorably considered from the start in view of the high cost of living and the need of the operators for more money.

The Walnut Will Spend $30,000.

Changes in the Walnut theater, Cincinnati, which will cost in the neighborhood of $30,000, are to be made during the summer, with Rapp & Rapp, Chicago architects, supervising the work. The exact nature of the alterations and improvements to be made has not been announced.

Contract for New Theater Awarded.

It has been decided to award the contract on the new Palace theater, on Sixth street, Cincinnati, to the Longacre Construction Co., of New York and Chicago, and the formal contract is all that remains to be done to close the matter. The foundation work has been completed, and is ready for the superstructure, which is to be rushed at top speed through the summer in order to have the theater ready for business as soon as possible. The total cost of the work is now estimated at about $300,000. Rapp & Rapp, of Chicago, are the architects.

"Pershing's Crusaders" Runs Two Weeks

The success wth which the official war film, "Pershing's Crusaders," issued by the National Committee on Public Information, met at the Grand, Cincinnati, during the week of its engagement resulted in the extension of the engagement to cover a second week. The fact that there are 10,000 soldiers from Cincinnati in the various branches of the national service accounts for the increasing interest of the public here in war pictures calculated to give real information about the training and work of the soldiers and the manner in which their clothing and equipment is prepared for them. The prices at the Grand for this picture ranged from 25 cents to 50 cents.

Co-operative Grocer Joins U. P. T. of A.

C. C. Hite, who recently became Cincinnati manager in this district for the United Picture Theaters of America, Inc., has secured as one of his assistants Geo. V. Smith, formerly president of the Economy Grocery Stores Co., of Cincinnati, a co-operative concern which met with a considerable degree of success. It was his familiarity with the operation of co-operative business enterprises that led Mr. Hite's offer of a place on the United Pictures Theaters staff.

Southern Ohio Notes.

Salco, O.—The Salco Amusement Co., of this town, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $15,000 by I. Sobel, Robert Loehr, D. Printz, and others to operate a moving picture theater.

Springfield, O.—J. C. Murray, Roscoe C. Lorentz, Frank M. Krapp, and Edw. H. Scheuer have organized the Hippodrome Theater Co., which will operate a moving picture house of that name in Springfield. The company has a capital stock of $10,000.

Cincinnati, O.—The plan of soliciting bond subscriptions from theater patrons tried in Cincinnati during the latter part of the Third Liberty Loan campaign for the first time worked so splendidly, with the patriotic addresses of able speakers and war-time films to aid in arousing enthusiasm, that it will probably be used as a part of the subscription work from start to finish in future campaigns. It is worth noting that at the Grand, where "Pershing's Crusaders" was being shown, 156 subscriptions were received on a single day, this being more than twice as many as recorded at any other house. The Family, the Gifts, the Lyric, the Strand, Keith's, the Empress, the Olympic, Heuck's, and the Royal were among the other downtown houses whose patrons subscribed liberally on solicitation during performances.

John Seifert Makes Ideal a Winner.

DAYTON, O.—In past records of Dayton theater managers, none seems so good, all things considered, as that of John Seifert, "king of camouflage," and who has been called a second P. T. Barnum. One need but look at the front of the Ideal to justify the last mentioned title, for, in a search recently with another local manager, the writer or his companion found every known color in John's lobby display. Time was when the Ideal was considered a losing proposition, in fact it was a losing proposition, and sorely in need of a tonic.

Mr. Seifert told the World correspondent in confidence that the Ideal actually lost money before he took over the place, and that it required considerable nerve to tackle the job. The work went slow at first, for competition was directly across the street in the form of the Auditorium. Although many of his methods are open to criticism, such as his comparison of the recently installed organ with the New York Symphony Orchestra, it is an established fact that with all of his camouflage, John Seifert has made the Ideal a winner. It is now in a better condition than it ever has been, and business is good. A large part of his success, he claims, is due to his newspaper advertising, which is surely different than the rest. He frequently splurges, and also puts across quite a bit of free publicity such as mention in the dramatic column, which is very rare.

Atlanta Trade Letter

By Linton K. Starr, Atlanta Journal, Atlanta, Ga.

Betty Lee in Atlanta.

ATLANTA, GA.—Betty Lee, the popular Georgia girl, who recently starred in "The Triumph of Venus," released through the General Film Company, has returned to her home in Atlanta for the summer. Throughout Georgia, Miss Lee is tremendously popular, and is well known over the entire South. This is expected to make her picture a great drawing card in this territory. "The Triumph of Venus" will be shown in Atlanta at an early date, probably with the star appearing in person in connection with it.

Miss Lee has not announced her plans for the future, although she is understood to be negotiating with several big picture concerns.

Theater Gives Prizes.

The Criterion theater, through Manager Willard Patterson, has announced that it will give a $50 Liberty Bond each to the boy and girl contributing the best essay on why Arthur Guy Empey's picture, "Over the Top," is a great patriotic picture. The prizes will be given by the theater and the Vitagraph Company.

"Kaiser" Returns.

"The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," which recently smashed attendance records at the Rialto, has returned for another week's showing under the auspices of William Oldknow.

New Kleine Manager.

H. O. Tuttle has come to Atlanta from New Orleans, where he has been handling the Southern territory business for George Kleine. From this point he will distribute Perfection films.

Just at present Mr. Tuttle is busy pushing "The Unbeliever." Under the auspices of the Marine Corps the picture was given an advance showing at the Lyric theater, receiving enthusiastic criticisms.

Ishpeming Publisher Wants Sunday Shows.

ISHPEMING, MICH.—George A. Newett, publisher of the Iron Ore, is making an extensive fight for Sunday moving picture shows in Ishpeming. He points out that Negaunee, which allows Sunday shows, draws sufficient Sunday business from Ishpeming to tax the capacity of the street railway company, which runs between the two cities. As a further argument he cites the effect that the photoplay has had upon the saloon evil by diverting patronage from the barroom. He has suggested that a vote be taken upon the question, and this idea has been taken up by other newspapers.

W. R. Vincent Takes Over the Grand.

Menominee, Mich.—W. R. Vincent, of Cass Lake, Minnesota, has taken over the Grand theater succeeding A. T. Campbell, who has gone to Cincinnati to take charge of a photoplay house in that city.

City Fathers Will Censor Films.

Jackson, Mich.—The matter of censoring moving pictures has been put up to the city commission of Jackson, and that august body will be called out whenever an exhibitor thinks he has a picture that might prove objectionable. This decision was reached after lengthy pleas by the Jackson County Ministerial Association and the Federated Women's Clubs. The managers who objected to local censorship pointed out that no pictures were shown here which had not previously been passed upon.

Changes Among Michigan Theaters.

Saginaw, Mich.—Clyde Patterson, who has been manager of the Bijou theater at Bay City, has been made manager of the Bijou theater at Saginaw succeeding C.

Edgar Momand, who has gone to Flint to take charge of the Garden theater.

Holly, Mich.—J. P. Allen has commenced the erection of a theater in the rear of the Allendorf hotel.

Calumet, Mich.—"The Splendid Sinner" was shown at the Calumet theater for two days under the auspices of Troop A, Calumet Cavalry.

New Illinois Corporations.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—Secretary of State Emmerson has issued a certificate of incorporation to the Little Players Film Company, Inc., of Chicago; capital, $5,000; incorporators, Madeline Brandeis, Courtland Vandeusen, and Leo W. Hoffman.

The same incorporators have taken out a charter for the Vancourland Productions, Inc., Chicago, with capital stock of $500.

Other film corporations are the T. J. Davis Cinema Corporation, Chicago; capital, $10,000; incorporators, T. J. Davis, Frank J. Drufke, and Arthur A. Sherard. The Champaign Orpheum Company, Chicago; capital, $2,500; incorporators, Benjamin B. Kahan, George A. Trude, and Frank R. Cain.

Fitzpatrick & McElroy, of Chicago, who operate a string of houses in Illinois and Michigan, have applied for a charter. The capital stock will be $30,000, and the incorporators are Kenneth F. Fitzpatrick, Jr., Blair McElroy, and Lewis F. Jacobson. Other Chicago amusement companies seeking incorporations are the Liberty Amusement Company, capital stock, $60,000; incorporators are C. W. Jacob, E. J. Austen, and James S. Hutton. Lake Front Theater Company, capital stock, $1,000; incorporators, Oswald B. George, Amos C. Martin, John B. Doyle.

Two down state theaters will be handled by corporations. They are Quincy Amusement Company, Quincy; capital stock, $10,000; incorporators, H. L. Breinig, W. H. Smith, J. F. Garner. Washington Theater Company, Belleville; capital stock, $25,000; incorporators, Philip H. Cohn, Joseph Erber, A. B. Newman.

With Illinois Exhibitors.

Granville, Ill.—H. K. Ward has leased the Star theater to Louis Murphy, of Spring Valley. Clyde Ricketts has been retained as manager.

Kankakee, Ill.—City Clerk H. A. Sylvester has been making arrangements to open a moving picture theater in the Huling building on Court street, formerly occupied by the LaPetite. Sylvester formerly was an exhibitor in Colorado.

Decatur, Ill.—Manager James Carrier, of the Avon theater, has joined the National Army.

Monticello, Ill.—Edward Thorpe has sold the Princess theater to Joe Allman, former proprietor of the Avon theater at Decatur.

Freeport, Ill.—William S. Nichols, of Grand Rapids, Mich., has sold the Superba theater, 123 Stephenson street, to Thomas J. Watson, who for many years has been connected with the moving picture industry here.

Glasford, Ill.—Clyde Cowser sold his interest in the Dreamland theater to F. A. Vandeventer, postmaster.

Marseilles, Ill.—M. Engel, of Ottawa, has been endeavoring to make arrangements to secure a site here for the erection of a theater seating 1,000 and costing about $25,000.

Carmi, Ill.—Almost any kid can dig up a penny, and if no Carmi youngster failed to see "Jack and the Bean Stalk" at the Maine theater it was not the fault of Manager George Cross. He gave a Saturday matinee with this film, and any child who could not raise the regular admission fee needed only to pay the war tax.

Trade Doings of the Past Week in Detroit

Many Interesting Changes Among Local Distributors and in the Theaters—Changes of Policy, and Business Notes.

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

Wernick Got Contract He Deserved.

DETROIT, MICH.—It's no wonder that Dick Wernick is making himself valuable as a salesman to the Goldwyn organization in Michigan. The other Sunday he was in Adrian and wanted to get to Tecumseh, feeling rather confident he could get a contract. Incidentally, Goldwyn had a contest on for April and Dick wanted to head the list. He found that no trains ran Sunday between Adrian and Tecumseh, a distance of 14 miles, so he borrowed a bicycle from Ernie Kaiser, at the Garden theater, and rode to Tecumseh, where he signed up with Mr. Marks, of the Opera House.

Herb Weil Gets Port Huron Theater.

Herb L. Weil, who now runs the Maxine and Majestic theaters in Port Huron, has just acquired a long lease on the Family theater there, formerly conducted by E. C. Bedford. The Family is the largest exclusive photoplay theater in Port Huron and it virtually gives Herb control of the picture situation in that city.

Kunsky Books Kerrigan Pictures.

John H. Kunsky, of Detroit, has booked the first two Kerrigan pictures made by Paralta. They will be shown at one of his downtown theaters for an entire week each.

Drury Lane Books Paralta.

The Drury Lane theater, Detroit, has booked the Walthall and Barriscale features made by Paralta, and will show each one a full week.

Ealand Books Judge Brown Stories

Tom Ealand, manager of the Regent and Orpheum theaters, Detroit, has booked the series of Judge Brown stories.

Washington Renews for O. Henry's.

The Washington theater, Detroit, has signed a new contract for O. Henry two-reel subjects. Each is shown an entire week at the Washington. "We have people who come to the Washington purposely to see the O. Henry stories," said Will M. Elliott.

R. A. Perry Now With Metro.

R. A. Perry, formerly with Triangle, Allen Film and the Dawn Masterplay, is now with Metro in Detroit and will handle big special features in and around Detroit.

Standard Has Novel Films.

J. C. Fishman, of the Standard exchange, Detroit, has secured the Michigan rights to a series of Song Hits in Photoplay. One is "The Star Spangled Banner," another is "Over There" and others will follow at the rate of one every week.

Dave Blythe Back to Drury Lane.

Dave Blythe has combined his interests with M. S. Bailey, of the Drury Lane theater, Detroit, and under a new arrangement Dave will have complete charge of the bookings and business affairs of the Drury Lane, which he formerly managed. Under his management this theater will continue with its policy of showing all features an entire week.

Whitney Gets Lyceum Theater.

Bert Whitney, of the Detroit Opera House, has secured the Lyceum theater for his Klaw and Erlanger attractions next season. He plans to completely remodel the theater inside and out. The opera house block will be torn down to make way for a mercantile building.

Dave Mundstock Buys More Film.

Dave Mundstock, of the Strand Features, Detroit, just back from New York, announces new films. Among them are Juvenile comedies, a large assortment of Broncho, Kay-Bee, Dominoe and Biograph two-reelers, and a series of 20 Charlie Chaplin two-reel and single reel comedies. He brought back some of the pictures with him and already is having success in making bookings. "I never had more film good film in my life to offer exhibitors," said Dave.

Gladwin Park Celebrates New Organ.

A recent Wednesday night was "Organ" night at the Gladwin Park, Detroit. Reason—a New Hope—Jones Organ ordered by Manager Eddie Murphy many months ago and just installed. Ed. received many compliments from the patrons of the house and the music certainly improves the entertainment 100 per cent.

Luna Theater Has Patriotic Night.

The Luna theater, Detroit, King Perry manager, had a Patriotic Night on Tuesday recently. The entire proceeds of both night shows was given to one of the patriotic funds.

Miles Theater Has New Policy.

Gus Greening, manager of the Miles theater, Detroit, announces effective at once a new policy. The theater will continue giving three vaudeville shows daily with feature pictures, but will also run continuous from 1 to 11 p. m. daily, filling in the supper hours with short-reel subjects. With its splendid downtown location the Miles should find the new continuous policy a very profitable one.

J. E. Flynn Has Good Trip.

J. E. Flynn, Goldwyn manager in Detroit, visited exhibitors in Grand Rapids, Lansing, Kalamazoo and Battle Creek. In Lansing he signed up Claude Cady of the Colonial for Goldwyn pictures. Claud will show each release three days.

Brient Now Publicity Manager.

Elmer H. Brient has been placed in charge of publicity for the Detroit exchange of Artcraft-Paramount. In addition Elmer is also doing part of city sales work.

Co-operative Directors Meet.

The directors of the co-operative booking plan, recently appointed, and of which M. W. McGee is chairman, met in Detroit recently and laid further plans for starting business. Most of the $4,000 worth of stock in the Michigan Unit has been subscribed, so that the Unit is practically ready to go ahead and transact business. In the near future the Unit will announce its first picture.

Bob Peltier—a Fox Booster.

"When it comes to direction and punch in stories, give me the Fox pictures," said Bob Peltier, the "king" of Mt. Clemens with the Bijou and Lyric theaters.

Third Week for the Gerard Picture.

"My Four Years in Germany" is now in its third week at the Washington theater, Detroit. "Each day the receipts are growing," said George W. Trendle, secretary of the Kunsky Enterprises. "Everybody who sees this Gerard picture comes out a booster and that brings many more patrons."

Pick-Ups from Detroit.

Leo Kane has taken over the Crystal theater in Sturgis, Mich. He was a recent visitor in Detroit.

Joe Optner, of the Olympic theater, Detroit, has returned from Chicago, where he spent five days. Joe says he brought back many new ideas for developing his business and will use them.

Elwyn M. Simons, of the Family theater, Adrian, has booked Mutt and Jeff cartoons and Sunshine comedies through the Fox exchange. Ollie Brooks closed the deal.

Gerard Film Begins San Francisco Run

Tivoli Will Keep "My Four Years in Germany" for Indefinite Stay—Theater Receives Commendation from Washington.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—That inspiring production, "My Four Years in Germany," which so successfully visualizes the historic document of former Ambassador James W. Gerard, is creating a profound impression in this city and the length of its run at the Tivoli theater cannot be foreseen. Owing to previous bookings the first week's run will be followed by another production, but it will then be brought back for an indefinite showing. Not only have all former records for attendance at this theater been shattered, but receipts for the week are practically double those of the best former week. In order to accommodate the crowds the first show is started at ten o'clock in the morning, instead of at twelve, and in the evening three box offices are open. Prices for matinees are 20 and 50 cents, while in the evening they are 30 and 50 cents, with a few seats in the balcony at 20 cents.

During the week the Turner & Dahnken Circuit received a telegram from the Bureau of Public Information at Washington thanking the management for the efficient work it was doing with the Gerard film and asking its co-operation with the local Liberty Loan Committee. This latter request is being complied with and all week a great tank has been stationed in front of the theater to receive subscriptions to the loan. Four prints have been secured for this territory and bookings are rolling in at prices that have been paid by exhibitors in but few instances, $100 a day being the minimum. The production will be shown over the entire Turner & Dahnken circuit at the same prices that prevail at the Tivoli theater. The official stamp which this picture carries has attracted many people high in public life to view it, and judging from the rush for seats it is not improbable that it will be seen by more people in this territory than any other film ever presented.

Drive to Get Wide Use of War Films.

The Film Bureau of the State Council of Defense has inaugurated a drive planned along the lines that made the Liberty Loan campaign such a success, with the idea of placing the Government films in every moving picture theater in California. Every film exchange manager and every film salesman connected with an exchange in this State has been asked to turn in five contracts. All have cheerfully agreed to do their part and a great rush of bookings is expected at once. No town will be too small to escape and a one hundred per cent. distribution is confidently expected.

Romance Film Moves to New Home.

The Romance Film Company, formerly located in the David Hewes Building at Market and Sixth street, has moved to Film Row, having secured quarters at 124 Golden Gate avenue. This concern, which is conducted under the management of O. J. L. Byers, makes moving pictures of all kinds to order.

New Mission Theater Adds Orchestra.

The New Mission theater, conducted by the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit, has added a large orchestra, of which Walter Weber, president of the Musicians' Union, is leader. A new organ is also being installed and this will be presided over by G. Bernard Vest. Added attractions of various kinds are now a feature of the program of this house.

Marie Dressler Sells Many Bonds.

Marie Dressler, who has caused millions to laugh, spent the last week of the Liberty Bond campaign in the Greater San Francisco and other cities in Northern California on a more serious mission. Great crowds gathered everywhere she spoke and through her efforts many Liberty Bonds were disposed of. Following her appearance here she went to Oakland, which was behind with its quota at the time, and addressed audiences at the Auditorium and at the American and Sequoia theaters, also appearing at the U. C. theater in Berkeley. From here she went to Fresno and then to Merced, ending the campaign at the Hippodrome in Sacramento.

News from the Front.

Bertin E. Moissant, formerly cameraman for Gaumont in this territory, and who enlisted in the engineering corps a year ago, later joining the aviation service, is now with the photographic divison in France, with several other boys from the Pacific Coast, including C. Timer, of Los Angeles.

Among the San Francisco Salesmen.

Bert C. Donnellan, formerly manager of the Sullivan & Considine Circuit and at one time an exhibitor at Stockton, Cal., is now with the Mutual as road man out of the San Francisco office. Until recently he was with the Fox Film in a similar capacity.

Robert Brackett, formerly with the Select Pictures Corporation at Cincinnati, is now with the San Francisco office as salesman.

Harry Oviatt, formerly in charge of the San Francisco Pathe office, but more recently connected with a newspaper syndicate, is now with the Select Pictures Corporation and is on the road.

Henri Henrioulle, who has been with the San Francisco Pathe office since a branch was established here, has been promoted to the position of special salesman for the San Francisco and Los Angeles territory, handling serials exclusively.

C. A. Roeder, of the San Francisco Paramount office, has been transferred for a time to the Portland branch to assist C. M. Hill.

Dan Markowitz, of the Western Feature Film Company, is now with the Sunset Film Corporation as road man.

"The Unbeliever" Bookings Extended.

So great has been the interest displayed in "The Unbeliever," produced with the co-operation of the United States Marine Corps, that almost all of the bookings in the local territory have been extended. Wherever this film is shown there is a detail of marines, a quartet from the Mare Island Navy Yard, and at large houses a United States Marine band. The Oakland booking, originally made for four days, has entered up its second week, and at the Alameda theater, Alameda, the installation of another box office was made necessary by this attraction. The film has also been shown at the Berkeley theater, Berkeley, where there is a large aviation school.

Old Empire Theater Closed.

The Empire theater, on Market street, near Sixth, one of the oldest of the downtown houses, has closed. Negotiations are pending for its reopening by the owner of another small house in this district.

Patriotic Films at San Jose.

The last week of the Liberty Loan campaign was marked by the presentation of two patriotic productions at San Jose, Cal., William Kellner offering "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," at the Victory theater, while the T. & D. theater presented "My Four Years in Germany." Both engagements were successful at advanced prices.

George E. Thornton Takes New Post.

George E. Thornton, for several years manager of the Oakland house of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, but more recently in charge of the Franklin theater in that city, has been made manager of the new Rialto theater to be opened shortly at Eureka by Sheehan & Lurie, of San Francisco. He has left for that city to superintend the putting on of the finishing touches to this new house.

Brief Notes of Interest.

The All Star Features Distributors, Inc., San Francisco, has secured the rights to the French production, "They Shall Not Pass."

The Garrick Theater in the Fillmore district, San Francisco, has been remodeled and reopened as a combination vaudeville and moving picture house under the management of Morris Lebo. The admission price was reduced from 15 to 10 cents after a trial of three days at the higher figure.

H. H. Bru recently went East to represent the Turner & Dahnken Circuit at a meeting of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

W. B. Martin has sold the Star theater at Merced, Cal., to C. F. Reindollar.

Alex. Benedict has disposed of a one-half interest in a moving picture theater at 4069 San Pablo avenue, Oakland, to L. P. Jenson.

Texas Amusements Grow More Patriotic

Picture Exhibitors Even More Than Formerly Aid in National Affairs and Pictures Loyal to Cause Vie with Each Other.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, TEX.—Patriotism has been the permeating, pre-eminent principle in filmdom's realm down Texas way during the first week in May, and by the same token it is to continue throughout the better part of the month. Texas theater patrons and Texas theater managers did their bit and their best in the big push, which sent the Eleventh Federal Reserve District—however late the movement might have been—"over the top" for its third loan quota. There had been a sort of apathy, and we needed an awakening. Theater managers threw their facilities wide open to bond workers, and the thing was done. It will be a really interesting story, when it is known, to tell what Dallas theater led the list in sales of "baby bonds" on the "match the President" proposition. Patrons responded liberally, and salesmen worked like Trojans to the end of eminent success.

Proceeds Go Into Bonds.

"My Four Years in Germany" opened at the Hippodrome, Dallas, on May 5, and E. H. Hulsey, vice-president of the First National Exhibitors' Association, which controls the picture in Texas, together with Manager Arthur Claire, announced that the full net proceeds from Hippodrome admissions would go into Liberty Bonds of the third issue. This pledge was made in addition to heavy investments in this and previous issues.

Lou Remey Stays With Goldwyn.

Lou Remey will not become manager for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, of Texas—at least not for another year. He will remain as Texas manager for Goldwyn. Remey's contract expired in June, but had a clause giving the Goldwyn an option on his services for one more year. The company complimented him highly, and informed him that it would like to take up that option.

First Week May Releases in Dallas.

Aside from patriotic subjects first week May releases in Dallas theaters generally proved winners. Hulsey's Queen did an excellent business with Billie Burke in

"Let's Get a Divorce." Hart in the "Tiger Man" wasn't so good at the Old Mill. Playing the Game," the Paramount feature, with Chas. Ray, which followed, went fine, as that young man is a Texas favorite. It was followed later in the week by the Select, "By Right of Purchase," with Norma Talmadge, which did a good business. The Queen opened the week beginning May 5 with "The Knife," an Alice Brady production, which was followed by the Paramount release, "Resurrection," with Pauline Frederick.

Alma Rubens in the Triangle, "The Love Brokers," opened the similar week at the Washington to good business following the "Sins of Ambition," and the Rex did well with the Metro, "With Neatness and Dispatch," featuring Bushman and Bayne.

"Revelation" and An Accident.

An accident to "Revelation," running at the Hippodrome during the week ending May 4, proved two things—that people will be patient with proper explanation, and that all the Red Cross work women folk are learning isn't going for naught. The film caught fire, and several feet were burned out of it before Operator Pengilly extinguished it with his bare hands. The young man was badly burned, but he saved the reel. A woman in the audience who had taken a bit of Red Cross instruction administered first aid until an ambulance arrived. The theater was compelled to run two days without its feature, but added business came when a new film was hurried in from Oklahoma City, where it had finished a run.

Two New Theaters.

They're not only building ships down at Orange, Tex., but new moving picture theaters as well. The foundation has already been laid for a new, modern, concrete and brick structure for H. Thomas, of the Airdome, to cost $250,000, and to seat 1,200 people. Ground has been broken and material is on hand for a new theater for H. H. Ketterman as well. It will have a capacity of 1,000.

Theodore Polmanakos Goes to Camp.

Theodore Polmanakos, of the Crown theater, Houston, answering his adopted country's war-time call, has sold his theater there and gone to training camp. Jack Abrams, formerly connected with the Dallas opera house, remains as manager under the new ownership.

Pick-Up Notes from Texas.

Mrs. Nell Binyon announces that she is about to dispose of her Palace theater, at Lufkin, Tex., releasing management May 20. She will go to California.

J. A. Helton, of the People's and the Pierce, Port Arthur, Tex., is to be another California visitor. Mr. Helton has closed the Pierce for extensive remodeling, and is making the Coast trip pending its reopening.

Sid Weis, of the Grand opera house, San Antonio, was a Dallas visitor early in May. He is making some extensive changes in his house prior to opening with "Over the Top" on May 21.

George Walker, Jr., of the Hancock opera house, Austin, was another recent Dallas visitor on a mission similar to that of Mr. Weis.

H. C. Johnston, manager Crystal theater, Stamford, Tex., is still talking about those rains out in his country. He says business is bully since they came.

H. C. Fulkerson, of the Bijou theater, El Paso, is in New Orleans, where he was called because of the serious illness of a brother.

C. J. Mussulman, of the Grand theater, Paris, Tex., says the picture business at the moment is O. K. Mr. Mussulman is interested in some oil properties in the Wichita field, and passed through Dallas recently on a visit to that section.

F. A. Alexander, of the Elk theater, and D. W. Powell, of the Grand, Marshall, Tex., were both recent visitors on Film Row, Dallas. They're competitors, but the best kind of friends, and each talked optimistically.

Daylight Saving a Drawback in Villages

Oregon Exhibitors in Farming Centers Suffer, for They Must Start Shows an Hour Earlier—Reports on Conditions in the Trade.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Daylight saving is causing a financial loss to Oregon exhibitors, particularly those in the towns centering in farming districts. This is the opinion of George E. Jackson, Portland manager for the Mutual Film, who recently completed a trip by automobile to the California line, and of George Endert, Portland manager for General Film, who is just back from Eastern Oregon.

Southern Oregon exhibitors who formerly opened their houses at 7 o'clock now delay opening until 8. Exhibitors maintain that the rural folk work by the sun and go to bed by the clock, which cuts the show time down an hour.

George Jackson covered 1,240 miles in his trip by automobile, calling on 33 theaters in 27 cities and towns, and selling in 23 of them. He was the first auto driver this season to make the trip from Roseburg to Myrtle Point, there being one stretch of road between these two towns that passes only 7 dwelling houses in 61 miles. He found the Coos Bay conditions good, and reports that S. J. Lemansky has opened the Stars and Stripes theater at North Bend. Some of the small towns have cut down to one or two days a week, but are getting 25 cents admission. The new building at Coquille is progressing rapidly, and it is rumored that another house will be built.

Lewis Levine Calls on Portland.

The Portland film fraternity was honored by a visit of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Levine. The assistant general manager for the William Fox enterprises is out feeling the pulse of exhibitors before attending a convention where the coming Fox policies will be outlined, and he stopped over in Portland long enough to discuss the film situation with prominent exhibitors and to enjoy the beauties of the Columbia highway besides intimating some of the big things planned by William Fox. Mr. Levine was accompanied to Portland by Albert Eden, Fox manager in Seattle.

"Heart of the Sunset" Goes Big.

Rex Beach's "The Heart of the Sunset" was the attraction at the Majestic theater for the week of May 4, and the production enjoyed excellent success, the opening Saturday being one of the biggest of the season.

The Majestic appeared in spring attire for the occasion, the lobby being a bower of fruit blossoms, and the girl ushers all in new costumes of colored silk, the design of Mrs. J. J. Parker, wife of the president of the Majestic Amusement Company. The apple blossom bower was installed under the direction of H. D. Green, house manager.

To Felicitate Jack Woody.

Several prominent Portland exhibitors journeyed to Seattle early this month to attend a farewell dinner that was given there in honor of J. S. Woody, who has been appointed to a high position with Select. That a group of exhibitors should think enough of Mr. Woody to make the long trip for the occasion is evidence of his popularity in the territory.

Portland Suburbs Prosper.

E. R. Simpson, Portland representative for Pathe, reports his business good with the city's theaters, and therefore business is good with them. He hasn't missed a day in getting a contract, either downtown or suburban, all of which indicates the advisability of having a permanent representative in the Rose City.

Fifteen Cents Again in Favor.

The Progressive Motion Picture Company, through C. M. Hill, Portland manager, is lining up another bunch of exhibitors for a raise in admission to 15 cents. Among the newest recruits are Guy Robinson, Yeager theater; D. T. Noonan, Princess; J. Sullivan, Powell Valley, and W. E. Lewis, Scenic. Several other suburban men are contemplating making the change soon.

A Unique Lobby by J. C. Stille.

One of the most unique lobbies seen in Portland for some time was built at the direction of J. C. Stille, manager of the People's Amusement Company, for the Star theater for "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" during the week of May 4. The floor of the lobby was whitened to represent snow, there were papermache logs artistically arranged, and tickets were sold from a log cabin.

Window Cards Again in Favor.

Rose City exhibitors have again gone back to window cards. About eight months ago there was a tacit understanding among theaters that there were to be no more window cards, that they were an unnecessary expense, and that the business could get along without them. A few weeks ago the photoplay houses one by one began using them until they are all back in line with an added advertising expense reaching about $100 a week.

Milwaukee Theater Reopens.

Exchanges report the reopening of the Milwaukee theater at Milwaukee, Oregon, by a Mr. Evans. The house is one of the chain of theaters formerly conducted by H. C. Wirple, now manager of the Ideal.

Mr. Evans was formerly with the Erbograph studios, and comes to Portland from Boston. Milwaukee is a growing town, due to the expansion of the shipbuilding industry.

With the Portland Road Men.

Jas. Tally and A. B. Cleland were in Portland for Vitagraph showing "Over the Top."

Ben. Rosenberg, Metro's special publicity expert for the Northwestern territory, reports that he has a few weeks left before cleaning up his work in Portland. He says Metro is progressing rapidly in the Pacific Northwest.

C. M. Hill, Progressive Motion Picture Company, is out to make a hundred per cent. record for his company. He already has a good showing against the other Paramount offices in the United States.

Brief Oregon Film Notes.

Portland.—W. W. Ely, manager of the Hippodrome, reports his big war garden growing nicely, with the employees taking interest in gardening.

Forest Grove.—C. A. Watrous is reported to have given up the old location of the Star theater for a new spot.

Portland.—When George Endert returned he brought back with him contracts covering the city of Boise, Idaho, for Paralta.

Portland.—Among the recent visitors were A. H. McDonald, Rex, Eugene; B. J. Callahan, Seaside, who is preparing for the summer business; C. C. Ferguson, Baker, Newberg; W. W. Kofeldt, manager for Pathe, and Harry Lustig, general representative for Metro, en route to San Francisco after a successful sojourn in Seattle.

WAR SAVINGS STAMPS!

A twenty-five-cent stamp doesn't represent much capital; but if we all buy them, Uncle Sam can "carry on" for us all.

World to Release "The Cabaret."

World Pictures announces the release on June 10 of "The Cabaret," with a cast consisting of leading players. Carlyle Blackwell is the featured player, and associated with him are Montagu Love, George MacQuarrie, June Elvidge, and John Bowers. The picture is a faithful transcript of the life of the Bohemian section of New York known as Greenwich Village, and the majority of the scenes were photographed in that locale. Harley Knoles handled the direction.

New Star For Ebony Comedies.

Luther J. Pollard, president and general manager of the Ebony Film Corporation, of Chicago, announces the engagement of a new star in the person of Mattie Edwards, former vaudeville headliner. Miss Edwards is an experienced screen comedienne, and well known to the exhibitors, having been featured for over two years by Lubin, when that company was producing comedies enacted by colored comedians. "Mercy! The Mummy Mumbled" was her first subject under her new affiliation, soon to be released on the General Film program. This was prepared for the screen by scenario editor Bob Horner from a story by C. A. Frambers, and directed by Ralph G. Phillips.

"A Reckless Rover," an original fifteen-minute laugh dispenser by Bob Horner, has been finished by Director Charles David, who will immediately begin "Much Oblige," by O. A. Nelson.

The settings of "The Million Dollar Dollies," Screen Classics' romantic fantasy starring the Dolly Sisters, are a noteworthy feature of the production. Leonce Perret, the author and director of this screen surprise, has provided a picturesque tale with the mysticism of the Orient ever present, and the settings offer the exact atmosphere required.

Among the most massive and elaborate of these settings may be mentioned the large hall of the Moorish palace, the marble courtyard, the Maharajah's bedroom, the princess' room, the underground chambers of the palace, the interior swimming pool, the interior of a theater, the rooms of the Dollys in an apartment hotel, and Sherry's restaurant. All those settings were designed and built under the supervision of Henri Menessier.

Des Moines Exchanges Have New Heads

H. E. Friedman Takes Place of Dan Lederman at the Laemmle Office and O. H. Garland Will Guide Yale Office in Place of S. J. Mayer, Enlisted.

By J. L. Shipley, 615 Locust St., Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—Two local exchanges were taken over by new managers the past week. H. E. Friedman came on from New York to assume the management of the Laemmle office, which includes Universal pictures, Bluebirds, Jewels, and the other output marketed through subsidiary companies. Mr. Friedman has had a wide experience as a film executive. He was for several years with General, and then came West as manager of the Minneapolis Pathe office. Holding that berth a year he went to Denver in the same capacity, and subsequently to New York as associate manager of that exchange. Mr. Friedman went over to the Laemmle forces several weeks ago, and with the promotion of former Local Manager Dan Ledermann to the post of assistant to the general manager, Mr. Friedman came to Des Moines. He has already made many friends among local exchangemen and Iowa exhibitors.

With the enlistment in the service of Stanley J. Mayer, of the Yale office, O. H. Garland, a familiar figure in Iowa film circles, assumes the management of that office. Mr. Garland was for several years with General, and for the past year has been Iowa roadman for Paramount. Mr. Garland is a popular selection for that office. Lafe Clark continues as assistant manager. Mr. Mayer was the guest of a large number of local film men at a farewell luncheon before joining the colors.

Jules Rachmann Joins Navy.

Jules Rachmann, former manager of the Omaha office of Standard, and known to many Iowa exhibitors, has enlisted in the navy, and is now stationed at Paris Island, S. C.

W. C. Ansell Traveling for Foursquare.

W. C. Ansell, who has represented several film exchanges out of Kansas City, has been appointed road man in Iowa for Foursquare, and is making Des Moines his headquarters during a spring drive for business.

W. F. Jackson Goes Ahead for Film.

W. F. Jackson, known to every exhibitor in Iowa as general representative of "The Birth of a Nation" during its 84 consecutive weeks' tour of this state, has been engaged to handle the advance of "My Four Years in Germany" by the A. H. Blank Enterprises. Mr. Jackson is one of the best advance men in the business, and now has two companies routed well into the summer. E. Bonns is company manager with one company and H. Mitchnick with another.

New Incorporation Will Build.

Elbert & Getchell, who operate stock, vaudeville and legitimate theaters here, as well as the Unique, a five-cent picture house of large capacity, have incorporated their business into the Consolidated Theaters Co., and announce a three thousand seat picture house at five cents admission will be built within the next year. Another picture house of large capacity, which, it is said, will show the highest grade features at advanced admission, is to be built at Sixth and Grand avenues, which is a block out of the theatrical district.

Opens Cafe Movie Inn.

Leo Muelhaupt, former manager of the Casino, Marshalltown, opened his new Cafe Movie Inn last week, and during the noonday it is a rendezvous for all the exchange men, who lunch around a big table which is reserved for them daily.

Visitors and Personal Notes.

Visitors at Des Moines film exchanges during the week of May 1 included J. B. Julius, of the Majestic, Fort Dodge; John Anderson, of the Princess, Boone; Ed. Awe, of the Strand, Fort Dodge; J. B. Price, of the Empress, Indianola; Peter Leman, of the Rialto, Newton; J. Jolly Jones, of the Strand, Marshalltown.

Lee Gunnison, proprietor of two theaters in Atchison, Kan., spent one day in Des Moines recently and booked half a dozen features from the A. H. Blank offices. Mr. Gunnison is a pioneer in the picture business, and has plans under way to increase the seating capacity of his Royal theater to 1,000. He motored to Des Moines and back.

The Fox special, Theda Bara in "Cleopatra," is doing a splendid business during its twelve days' run at the Berchel theater at dollar prices.

C. E. Holah, Omaha manager of the new United Theaters, Inc., assisted by Freddy Martin, Iowa representative, spent several days in Des Moines last week in the interests of his company.

Lafayette's Beautified Luna Theater Open

Manager H. H. Jackson Now Has One of the Prettiest of Houses—Big Crowds Visit It on Opening Day and Are Pleased.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

LAFAYETTE, IND.—The opening of the new Luna theater, Thursday, April 25, marked an epoch in the history of the motion picture business in the city of Lafayette. Long before the doors of the pretty remodeled playhouse were thrown open an immense crowd had assembled in an effort to obtain advantageous positions before the ticket window. It was estimated that approximately 2,500 persons attended the affair.

H. H. Johnson, manager of the Luna, and his corps of assistants were unusually busy in handling the throng, and did so without a hitch.

The lobby of the new playhouse was a veritable bower of gorgeous flowers that had been sent by friends of the management. Mr. Johnson in turn distributed carnations to the women patrons.

The seating arrangements proved ideal under the test of service. The beauty and comfort of the new theater was a matter of universal comment. The lighting arrangements are ideal, and the magnificent organ can be heard to splendid advantage.

After being closed since November 1, the Luna has been transformed into one of the prettiest and most up-to-date motion picture theaters in the country. The cost of this transformation represents an expenditure of approximately $50,000.

Mr. Johnson will have associated with him in the operation of the Luna as assistant manager, Chester Raub, who has served in that capacity for the last three years; Mrs. James L. Johnson, cashier; Carl W. Rumsey, operator for the past five years, will still be in charge of the operating room; Edward Kern, Walter Wolover, Milton Lorenz, and Donald McClurg as ushers, and Edward H. Bailey in charge of the sanitary department.

J. D. Kennedy Guiding the Alhambra.

James D. Kennedy, of Indianapolis, Ind., has been appointed as manager of the Alhambra theater, one of the Barton and Olson houses, to succeed Edwin Booth, former manager, who resigned a few weeks ago to enter the service of his country. Mr. Kennedy has had about ten years of experience in local motion picture theaters, having started his career as an usher. He has been in the employ of Messrs. Barton and Olson for the last five years, and prior to his latest promotion was in charge of the general stock room of the firm in the Lyric building. He is widely known about by local exhibitors.

STRAY SAN FRANCISCO ITEMS.

"THE TRIUMPH OF THE WEAK"

Alice Joyce in Vitagraph Plays a Weak-Willed Woman.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IN these days of stress the coward heroine, "made just for loving," who is subnormal in that she lacks the mind to use common sense and therefore with no taint of viciousness gets into trouble is not, I feel safe in saying, the best type to set before red-blooded spectators getting less and less sentimental all the time. I do not say that this picture, "The Triumph of the Weak," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature in five reels, will not be popular. It is very sure to be in many places, but the time is passing when such will be widely liked.

The strength that the weak have, as shown here, is the knowledge of love in a stronger nature on which it can lean. Now most of us are weak, and to get strength for the stronger is perfectly wholesome and normal. But in this picture the dramatist makes his heroine in her beautiful and happy home willing to steal $500 intrusted to her husband, destroy the home, and bring ruin and dishonor on him and herself just to keep him from finding out that she had once before, when starving as a widow with a baby to care for, stolen to get bread and been sent to prison for it. The picture had been dramatic up to that point, it had been holding well. Then it upsets, and all the interest is spilled.

The story was written by Edith Ellis. It has much that is fresh and interesting, is well constructed up to the point of the second break, and is certainly well screened and acted. Alice Joyce has the leading role, with Walter McGill as her second husband. Eulalie Jensen plays the Broadway woman who had known her in prison and appears when she is beginning to be happy. The less important characters are full of local color, and help the story greatly—among them are Adele De Garde as a tenement girl of gentle nature and Templer Saxe as a plain-clothes man. The director is Tom Ferris.

"$5,000 REWARD"

Bluebird Photoplay Features Franklyn Farnum in First Class Detective Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE mystery in this five-reel Bluebird subject adapted by F. McGrew Willis from a magazine story by Charles Wesley Sanders is not extremely difficult to solve. At the same time the direction of the piece is such that the mystery is well protected until the proper time for its solution. There is a constant pull upon the interest, which is the test of any detective yarn, and a general satisfaction with the solution when it comes.

Franklyn Farnum is cast in the leading role, a youth named Dick Arlington, nephew of an irascible millionaire named Henry Arlington. William Lloyd plays the latter role effectively. Gloria Hope is pleasing as the girl, Margaret, though her part was not brought out with the dramatic strength it might have had in her one big moment. This was undoubtedly a fault in the direction.

The story opens with various glimpses of the Arlington home and the slowly rising dissatisfaction of the uncle with his nephew. We see the lawyer, Mr. Tracy, calling on Henry Arlington; then a new secretary named Norcross is employed. Dick and his uncle have a final quarrel, and Dick determines to leave, after a threat of disinheritance. That night at 8:30 o'clock, Henry Arlington is shot and killed by an assassin. Dick and Norcross are both in the house, and each naturally suspects the other.

As the story goes, Dick makes his escape, and is injured by a runaway horse in the country after saving a girl's life. He eventually marries the girl, and takes her back with him to clear his name. The wife is instrumental in establishing the guilt of the real criminal. This needed a little more finesse than was employed, as the confesison of the criminal on such short notice did not seem entirely convincing. At the same time the solution is pleasing and substantiated by good logic. The subject is an enjoyable one.

"THE MYSTERIOUS CLIENT"

Pathe Play Features Irene Castle in Entertaining Comedy-Mystery.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS diverting Pathe Play written by Charles Davey leads off with some situations of startling mystery, and after keeping the observer keyed up in suspense for several reels finally switches off into a rich comedy vein. The piece has really been directed cleverly, and if a certain lack of plausibility may be excused, as we are sure it will be, the offering passes as first class entertainment.

Irene Castle appears to excellent advantage as Jeanne Darcey, Milton Sills plays the good-looking lawyer-hero, and Warner Oland is Boris Norjunov, the pseudo-villain. This combination of players is just right for a production of this character. It is perfectly conceivable that the heroine would pick out Harry Nelson as her life mate, and it is more probable and much more to the point that he would instantly fall in love with her. Lack of conviction in this latter circumstance would have let the story down tremendously. As it is the girl's daring is properly recognized and rewarded. Warner Oland "puts one over" as the villain. No one would suspect him of being anything less, particularly of being so guileless a character as the girl's father.

The five-reel story begins with the hero, a poor lawyer, waiting vainly for clients in a loft in the Woolworth building. He is visited first by Boris, who tries to bribe him into crime. He ejects Boris from the office, and later a beautiful girl appears, who lures him forth to a series of exciting and amusing events which lead up to his good fortune.

"MOONSHINE"

Paramount-Arbuckle Comedy Shows "Fatty" Arbuckle as Amusing Burlesque Hero.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IF the last reel of "Moonshine" were as full of comic points as the first this Paramount-Arbuckle comedy would have great speed. The picture is an amusing burlesque of the Blue Ridge Mountains of Kentucky, a drama of "still" life, and "Fatty" Arbuckle makes a handsome heavyweight revenue officer. Buster Keaton as "Fatty's" assistant, Al St. John as an honest-to-goodness moonshiner, and Alice Lake as the beautiful mountain girl furnish Roscoe with just the sort of support he requires. He also has the help of an army of revenuers that apparently arrive on the scene in one auto and file through the door of the machine in an almost endless stream.

The locations are picturesque enough for a five-reel feature, and the titles are examples of real wit. Aside from being a complete departure from the usual style of story used for the Arbuckle rib-ticklers the picture has many mirth-provoking moments.

"PEG OF THE PIRATES."

Peggy Hyland Plays Heroine Captured by South Carolina Pirates.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE object of the Fox five-reel picture, "Peg of the Pirates," with pretty Peggy Hyland in the heroine's role, seems to have been to mix romance with humor; but I don't think it gets over strongly. It is a costume picture—they seem nearly always to tempt the players to exaggerated acting—and furthermore, the incidents are so unbelievable that they impress one as burlesque. Burlesque and costume romance might be made to coalesce; but there doesn't seem to be much unity of aim in this picture and it is hampered as an offering.

Peggy Hyland is always charming and graceful in costume; she is lovely as Peg in this pirate picture. Many of the early scenes are full of poetry. They are set in blossomy background and in a stately Colonial mansion surrounded by mossy southern trees. The pirate vessel is a real square-rigged ship on which skillful carpentry has built a superstructure for all the world like prints of ships of 1650. The director has been able to hide the modern-day background in which, of course, he had to work.

There are many places where the picture may go well. Children may take great pleasure in it, and in some of the houses where the audience is not critical the many undeniably pleasing qualities it has may make it pass as a most enjoyable bit out of romantic days long passed away.

"THE HYPOCRITES"

George Tucker Makes Artistic Adaptation of Jones Play for Cosmofotofilm.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ELIZABETH RISDON is the featured player in George Loane Tucker's adaptation of the Henry Arthur Jones play, "The Hypocrites," which is being handled by the Cosmofotofilm Company. He has succeeded well in surrounding the characters of the play with the proper atmosphere, and also in imparting to the spectator the intention of the author; but the production, as a whole, bears the earmarks of an old-fashioned method of development. In other words we would judge that the picture was not made recently. It has a daring moment or two which could have been avoided without interfering with the sense of the story; for instance, the baring of the woman's breast during an incident in the early part of the picture. The picture's greatest call to merit lies in the fact that in spite of a certain opaqueness at times caused by lapses in the continuity the interest of the spectator never flags. The story, which is tremendously human, briefly told is as follows:

A certain lord of an English manor, suddenly finding himself bankrupt, tries, with the aid of his wife, to force his son into a distasteful marriage with a young heiress who, with her parents, is more than pleased with the idea, the financial embarrassment of the father of the first party not being known. In the meantime the young man has met and fallen in love with a sculptor's daughter, and has promised to marry her. Complications occur in which to save his family he marries the heiress, while the sculptor's daughter, about to become a mother, meeting one grief after another, including the death of her father, leaves her old home to seek her lover in whom she has never lost faith. The curate of the village church, discovering the truth of the matter, takes advantage of an attempt on the part of the lord of the manor to force marriage between a poor couple in the village under like circumstances, and by clever manipulation finally brings about the release of the son of the aristocrat from his disagreeable bargain and the happy union of the lovers.

"CONFESSION."

Poignant Acting of Jewel Carmen Makes Many Scenes of Fox Picture Wring Spectators' Hearts—A Good Film.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

FEW actresses have a greater natural ability to seemingly take on soul-shaking emotions and to pass at once from joy to sorrow as Jewel Carmen; but her work is perhaps not so efficient artistically as it might be were she more economical of effort. Cool-headed technique would bolster her presentations with seemingly far less effort—she gives more than is needed to accomplish in the spectator the state of mind she aims at. She has magnificent ability to reach emotional truth for any moment; but she is apt to key her characters so high from the first that the contrast is not marked enough at the climaxes. She has some wonderful moments in "Confession," a five-reel Fox film, and her work helps to make an interestingly written and dramatic picture an offering of unusual merit. It is a picture that an exhibitor can afford to boost highly as a tremendously emotional melodrama.

A bride and bridegroom (Jewel Carmen and L. C. Shumway) are trying to slip away quietly. A yeggman holds up the automobile and takes not only the bride's wedding ring, but all their money and baggage. They send the chauffeur back for clothes and ask for a room at the hotel desk. It is refused as the sharp-eyed clerk sees no ring and has suspicions. He permits them to pass the rest of the night in the parlor, where the girl goes to sleep on the lounge. Near morning the man steps out on the piazza to smoke, hears a terrible scream and finds in a first-floor bedroom a woman who has just been murdered. He is caught with the knife in his hand, tried for murder and condemned. The governor refuses to delay the execution and there is only a few hours left. The bride, her father and a man from the district attorney's office go to the hotel in an attempt to discover who really did commit the crime. Toward daybreak they catch the night clerk trying to rob one of the rooms and force him to confess. It is a race to get to the governor and save the man all ready to be led to the electric chair. These scenes are, like the entire picture, handled in a masterly way by the director and grip with a new and fresh power.

"VENGEANCE"

World Features Montague Love and Barbara Castelton in Entertaining Subject.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS six-reel number tells a well-rounded story, with numerous interesting angles, all carefully woven together. The scenes occur in India and London, the settings in both localities being carefully devised. The action of the tale flows smoothly, with occasional dramatic moments which rise naturally out of the events portrayed.

Montagu Love plays two roles, the first that of John Cuddlestone, an English gentleman, who finds himself disgraced by his own brother in a card game. As a result of this false accusation of cheating, John is disinherited, and goes to India, where he takes a native wife who bears him a son. This boy grows to manhood, and the part is from that time on assumed by Mr. Love, who gives it the same finished rendering as he did the first role. Barbara Castleton is appealing as Lady Elsie Drillingcourt, the ward of Andrew Cuddlestone. Madge Evans plays the interesting role of Nan, a Eurasian slave girl.

There are many features of special interest in this subject which, on the whole, resembles an old-fashioned English novel in plot. The meeting of Lorin Cuddlestone, the son, with Nan, the slave girl, and his determination to care for her presents an appealing situation. Her loyalty to him in later years, which induces her to steal the jewel of Buddha in order to follow him on his mission of vengeance to London, is brought out strongly. The Hindu faker tricks in India and Lorin's subsequent appearance as a Swami in England are good. Perhaps the most dramatic touch is the second card game, which exactly reverses the first. In this second game Lorin disgraces Andrew Cuddlestone exactly as the latter had disgraced his father years before.

The subject contains full story value, and is nicely presented throughout.

"HER DECISION"

J. Barney Sherry and Gloria Swanson in Triangle "Sex" Story by Lotta Gannet.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SISTERLY love and sacrifice offset the betrayed maiden theme in "Her Decision," a five-part Triangle picture written by Lotta Gannet and directed by Jack Conway. Gloria Swanson and J. Barney Sherry head the cast, Darrel Foss and Ann Kroman having the other two important parts. The complications are dramatic, but do not always rest on a firm foundation of reasonable conduct. The character of Phillis Dunbar, played by Gloria Swanson, is intended to be a sympathetic one, but her failure to realize the true nature of the man she first loves and to imagine it is her duty to marry a man who loves her before she can accept money that is needed to save her sister from disgrace will dull the edge of the thoughtful mind's liking for the heroine.

Phillis is the private secretary of Martin Rankin, a man of wealth and greatly her senior, when she learns that her sister, Inah, has been deceived, and must go away for a time in order to hide her disgrace. Phillis loves a worthless young chap who has borrowed all her savings in order to open a dancing school. She knows that her employer will lend her the money for her sister without a moment's hesitation; also that he loves her, but she offers to become his wife in payment of the debt. Rankin marries her, but promises the ceremony shall be one in name only until she learns to love him. The tangled threads are all straightened out at the finish. The lover of Inah consents to marry her, Phillis discovers that her ideal is a cad, and is glad to turn to Rankin.

Gloria Swanson has many of the natural qualifications for the character of Phillis. She responds inwardly to the moods of the part, but has not learned how to properly mirror them on her face. A set expression of sadness marred her work. J. Barney Sherry had but little to do as Rankin except to register unusual goodness. Darrel Foss and Ann Kroman are consistent to the requirements of their roles. Photographer, Elgin Leslie.

"PLAYING THE GAME"

Charles Ray the Star of Pleasing Paramount Picture, Thomas H. Ince Made.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

BEING a rich young New Yorker and fond of Broadway night life it naturally follows that the first sight the spectator gets of the hero of "Playing the Game," the boy's aching head is tossing restlessly on the pillows, and he does not know whether it is 5 in the morning or 5 in the afternoon when awakened by his English valet. This convention over the plot of "Playing the Game" forces one to watch its progress with interest, although it takes a familiar track and arrives at a conclusion that is apparent from the start.

Julien Josephson, the author, has been more concerned about balancing the dramatic incidents with the humorous twists of his story and seeing to it that there was the right proportion of action to his scenes than to hunting for original material. Director Victor L. Schertzinger has taken hold of his share of the work in the same spirit, and, with the personality and knowledge of screen acting possessed by Charles Ray to help him, has succeeded in turning out an entertaining picture. "Playing the Game" has the advantage of getting better as it progresses, and there is a fight in the wind-up that will make you want to stand up and yell, "Good boy, Charlie! Land him one for me!"

After escaping the fascinations of a lounge lizard's lady friend with the musical comedy name of Babe Fleur de Lis the hero is sent out West by his uncle, and circumstances shuffle the cards so that he finds himself working for a mighty poor living on his own ranch. How he has sand enough to stick it out, lick the bully of a foreman, and win the daughter of the superintendent form the best part of the story. Doris Lee, Harry Rattenberry, Robert McKim, Billy Elmer, Lillian Lorraine, and Charles Pearley have congenial roles.

"I'm a Man," Judge Brown, and "Mountain Law," Ned Finley.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

"I'm a Man."

OF a strong patriotic nature this two-reel Judge Brown story is well directed, and tells an interesting story of a boy who is a member of the high school cadets. He desires to join the marines, but is too young, being still in short trousers. His family tells him he is still a boy. He demands long trousers, and with the help of his sister gets them. The boy's father, a banker, is of German descent, and intensely loyal to this country. A supposed Frenchman, DeCourcy, in reality a German spy, manipulates matters so that suspicion is cast upon the banker's loyalty. The boy, Frank, has a wireless apparatus, and one night discovers DeCourcy receiving a message to burn the oil wells. Frank notifies the military authorities and saves the wells, but is injured himself. His father then tells him that he is really a man now, and a friend of Frank's sister shows him his secret service badge, so Frank is content, as he knows his father will no longer be under suspicion. The acting of the cast headed by Martin Pendleton as Frank is entirely satisfactory, and the picture is well directed by King W. Vidor. It should appeal particularly to the younger generation.

"Mountain Law."

The theme of this two-reel picture, of which Ned Finley is not only the director but the leading player, is not new, dealing with a feud among mountaineers, but he has succeeded in making an interesting production, having the real atmosphere of the hills. The arrival of a pretty school teacher in a mountain settlement brings matters to a climax. She decides to reform Bob (Ned Finley), and is succeeding, as Bob falls in love with her, and everything is ready for the wedding, when Sam Dancey kills Bob's cripple brother, and Bob starts after; so does the sheriff, and Sam is shot. Bob returns to the girl, the sheriff says he killed Sam while resisting arrest. The wedding takes place, and Bob tries to tell his wife the truth, but she refuses to listen, saying, "I am a Clayton now." Bob's better nature is well shown by his affection for his crippled brother and his sympathy for his dog when he is shot.

"THE TRAIL TO YESTERDAY"
Bert Lytell Makes Initial Appearance with Metro in a Western Story.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

FOR his initial appearance on the Metro program, Bert Lytell has been furnished with a Western story, "The Trail to Yesterday," based on a novel by Charles Alden Seltzer. It is in five reels, released on May 5, and Director Edwin Carewe has succeeded in making an interesting production with good continuity, and one which holds the interest.

Unjustly accused of murdering his father, William Keegles manages to escape, goes West, and becomes a cowboy known only as Dakota. One rainy night a girl comes to his cabin; he finds she is Shiela Langford, daughter of the man who accused him of murder. An itinerant preacher with a blank marriage license also comes along, and Dakota, to obtain his revenge, forces the girl to marry him. He later learns that she is Langford's step-daughter, and regrets his action. Langford buys the ranch next to Dakota's, and, thinking him to be an outlaw, makes an agreement with him to get rid of Ben Doubler, who owns water rights which he desires to control. The climax comes after Ben is shot by Jack Duncan, foreman of Langford's ranch, and Dakota is accused. Shiela secures the agreement between Dakota and Langford, and when she confronts Langford with it he attempts to take it from her by force. Dakota arrives on the scene, reveals his identity to Langford, and forces him to leave the neighborhood, and everything is explained satisfactorily, and Shiela suggests that he had better take steps to record the marriage license.

Bert Lytell makes a satisfactory Dakota, and Anna Q. Nilsson is attractive as Shiela. The rest of the cast give a good account of themselves, except that Ernest Maupain is inclined to overact in the final scene. John Smiley adds an excellent bit of character work as old Ben Doubler. Harry Northrup is sufficiently villainous as Jack Duncan.

The photography is good, and there are some attractive Western scenes of the rolling lands on the ranches, with mountains in the background. The action is not always convincing, as, for instance, the coincidence of having the preacher with a blank license arrive so opportunely, and one rescue scene misses fire by being too far from the camera. However, the production, as a whole, is entertaining.

W. H. PRODUCTIONS
"The Hell-Hound of Alaska," "Satan's Pawn," "The Hula Hula Dance."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Hell-Hound of Alaska."

THE W. H. Productions Company is now offering a William S. Hart five-part melodrama, a five-part picture featuring Bessie Barriscale, and a two-part Chaplin comedy. "The Hell-Hound of Alaska," the Hart picture, was written by C. Gardner Sullivan, and produced by Thomas H. Ince. While not as compact a story as most of the later works of this writer it has a fair share of action, and its theme is the popular one of the badman who discovers that he has a large streak of good in him after all. His method of electing himself judge, jury and executioner is open to argument, but many followers of the screen are ready to applaud such an act and consider him a hero of romance of the finest type.

Too much time is wasted at the beginning of the story developing the motive for getting the young cad from the East out of Alaska. And not enough information is given as to the early history of the heroine. Real drama is reached, however, when the badman finds out that the woman he loves is living with the chap from New York. The camp calls on them, accompanied by a preacher, and all hands gather around while the couple are made man and wife. When the husband neglects his home for another woman and the wife dies the badman takes matters in his own hands, and sends a bullet into his rival's heart.

The story is somber and unrelieved by a gleam of humor. The production is carefully handled, a rainstorm effect being well done. William S. Hart, Enid Markey, and George Fisher form a well contrasted trio in the leading parts.

"Satan's Pawn."

Adapted from the Franz Molnar stage play, "The Devil," which made a sensation when first produced, "Satan's Pawn" exhibits the evil one as a polished gentleman who knows how to wear evening clothes and be polite to a lady while following his regular line of business of tempting a number of modern Eves. The five-part screen version retains the atmosphere of guilty passion that was the drama's chief claim to interest. Although handled in a strictly modern way the effect of the picture is the same as that of one of the old allegories. The devil, which the heroine finds continually at her elbow, is the creation of her own desires. As a consequence she yields to his tempting and deserts her husband for a lover. It is all told in a well-bred manner amid luxurious surroundings, and the acting is of excellent quality.

Edward Connelly has the title role, and makes his satanic majesty rather a pleasing person with a keen sense of humor. Bessie Barriscale as the guilty wife, J. Barney Sherry as the husband, Clara Williams as another of Satan's victims, and Rhea Mitchell as a model are the other leading actors.

"The Hula Hula Dance."

A two-part Charlie Chaplin comedy produced by Mack Sennett, the humor of the picture is never too refined. This is to be expected, however, from the title. Charlie goes to sleep on a park bench, and dreams that he is a native of the land that invented the hula hula. Clad in a skin ulster and his now famous derby he finds himself making love to a dozen maidens in hay skirts, and imagines he has dethroned the rightful king and fallen heir to all his wives until a policeman interrupts his slumber by fanning him with his club. Broad comedy in bunches runs all through the two reels.

"WOLVES OF THE BORDER"
Exciting Triangle Melodrama of Southwest Featuring Roy Stewart and Josie Sedgwick.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

CLIFF SMITH, director of "Wolves of the Border," a five-part Triangle melodrama, evidently went on a still hunt for a lot of new and eye-arresting locations before starting to produce the photoplay of which Alvin J. Neitz is the author and Steve Rounds the cameraman. Lovers of long stretches of open country and herds of grazing cattle, of steep mountain sides and deep valleys will find much to admire in the views. The story is a vigorous bit of melodrama, and Roy Stewart and Josie Sedgwick are surrounded by a number of properly cast actors.

Joe Warner, the character played by Roy Stewart, is a young ranchman whose modern methods of conducting his business sets his neighbor, Joe Warner, against him. Joe, however, has a pretty daughter who is fond of Merritt, and that makes it difficult for the old man to start a quarrel. Pete Wright, old Joe's foreman, also is taken by the daughter of the boss, and he turns the trick by stealing cattle from both Merritt and Warner with the help of a Mexican bandit, Jose Mardones, and making each neighbor think that the other has robbed him. Wright and Mardones then attack the Warner ranch, run off the stock, and steal the girl. Warner supposes that he is fighting Merritt and his men until they arrive and drive off the thieves and his neighbor rescues his daughter.

The stars are right at home in their roles. Frank MacQuarrie, Jack Curtis, Louis Durham, and Curley Baldwin complete the cast.

"MEN"
Strong Cast in Bacon-Backer Production of Harry S. Sheldon Photoplay.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ADAPTED from Harry S. Sheldon's stage play, the Bacon-Backer six-part screen version of "Men" directed by Perry R. Vekroft, is well constructed and finely acted. The list of names in the cast reveals men and women of established reputation, and the production is in keeping with the demands of the story. Just why the author chose the short but not very comprehensive title of "Men" is not quite clear. The parts are evenly divided between the sexes, and all the drama in the play is the result of honest love or dishonest passion.

Technically, "Men" is a society drama. Most of the characters belong to the smart set, and the scenes show the daily life and social functions of this grade of society. The story is not particularly original, but is intensely human, and its climax will win the spectator who prefers the happy ending.

Mrs. Burton, a widow and a woman of refinement, is obliged to part with one of her little girls through the stress of poverty. Alice, the younger, is adopted by a wealthy family on the condition that she is always to suppose that they are her real parents. Laura, the other sister, is betrayed by a rich young idler, Roger Hamilton. Alice is in love with Tom Courtney, but they have a foolish quarrel, and Hamilton managers to become engaged to the girl. When Laura learns that her sister is to marry Hamilton she goes to the church with her mother and denounces him. Alice is saved, and rights matters with Tom. A man who has always loved Laura proves it by making her his wife.

Anna Lehr, Charlotte Walker, Gertrude McCoy, Wilette Kershaw, Ida Darling, Robert Cain, William Tooker, Huntley Gordon, Bradley Barker, and Fred Radcliffe comprise the cast.

THE TRIUMPH OF THE WEAK, May 13.—A five-reel picture with Alice Joyce as the heroine; one of those distressingly weak creatures that are far from heroic and even lack common sense enough to be not dramatic. The characters are well acted and the story holds well up to a point when it drops almost out of sight dramatically. We notice it at greater length on another page of this issue.

Interstate Film Company, Inc.

THE LAST RAID OF ZEPPELIN L-21 (Interstate).—A two-reel picture which presents scenes in some of the English towns and villages which have been devastated by the German Zeppelin. The bringing down of the Zeppelin L-21 by Lieut. W. L. Robinson is the central point in the picture, which was reviewed in the issue of May 18.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

RIDERS OF THE NIGHT, April 29.—This five-reel picture is a melodrama deriving its chief charm from Viola Dana's excellent acting. It is a story of the blue grass region of Kentucky. The scenes where the heroine is about to be executed are grewsome in their reality. Reviewed at length in our last issue.

THE TRAIL TO YESTERDAY, May 5.—For his initial appearance on the Metro program Bert Lytell has been provided with an interesting five-reel picture based on a novel by Charles Alden Seltzer. It deals with the hero's endeavors to obtain revenge for a past wrongful accusation, and in the meantime falls in love with the accuser's stepdaughter. Reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 18 (Mutual), May 1.—Among the interesting items of this issue are the navy oarsmen in a race on the Severn river at Annapolis; women learning farming; General Foch and Secretary Baker; McAdoo inspecting ships, and other pictures of notables, including Secretary Daniels and Mrs. Dewey.

SCREEN TELEGRAM N. 19 (Mutual), May 5.—This issue contains pictures of our boys in France, Queen Mary inspecting women's reserve ambulance corps, decorating of Rheims architect for bravery in saving famous cathedral windows, Silvio Rosanti in his Caproni plant at Baltimore, and men of eastern universities holding their annual meet at athletic grounds of University of Pennsylvania.

OVER THE GARDEN WALL (Strand), May 7.—This number of the Billie Rhodes comedies, while it contains considerable clean fun, is not as well balanced as some of the others. Near the end of the picture there is a tendency to develop into farce comedy. The story centers about a love affair between the young peoples of the picture, the girl being a minister's daughter. They land in jail for speeding and finally turning the tables on the girl's father they force him to marry them in order to gain his release from his prison cell.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 20 (Mutual), May 8.—In this issue are some scenes showing the devastation caused in France by German guns. There are also some excellent pictures of some of the French airmen who have accomplished unusual feats; Viscount Isii at Washington; the "Blue Devils" in New York, and a scene in Lincoln Park, Chicago, showing a beautiful peacock with his tail feathers spread.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 21 (Mutual), May 12.—The burning of the Lasky studio forms one of the spectacles of this issue which is unusually interesting. Other features are women in a swimming contest; troops learning to ski on the Alps; dogs of mountain warfare; the flying of hundreds of carrier pigeons; an observation tower built of bags of sand on the desert; the town of Bethlehem, in Palestine, and sheep grazing on the White House lawn.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE MYSTERIOUS CLIENT (Astra-Pathe Play), May 19.—A bright five-reel subject featuring Irene Castle, Milton Sills and Warner Oland. The story begins with an absorbing mystery and branches off toward the close into first rate comedy. It makes a very entertaining subject. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

BRITAIN'S BULWARKS, NO. 2 (Pathe), May 19.—This gives some real scenes taken on the British front behind Messines. The soldiers of various nationalities are seen playing games, marching and at their various duties behind the front. The Irish regiments are shown in marching formation and the Scotch "Ladies from Hell" are also pictured. Ruins of various villages are shown.

FIREMAN, SAVE MY CHILD (Rolin-Pathe), May 26.—A riotous comedy number, featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. The scenes occur at a fireman's ball, where Harold makes a big hit and is appointed assistant chief. Humorous scenes at a fire come later.

FLASHES IN THE DARK (Pathe), May 26.—Episode No. 12 of "The House of Hate." This opens with the ingenious situation wherein Pearl and Gresham are about to shoot one another by mistake. Pearl blows out the light and both miss fire. Later Pearl just misses death in a runaway automobile. She and Gresham are then lured to a suburban house and trapped. The number is full of suspense.

Triangle Film Corporation.

HER DECISION, May 12.—Gloria Swanson and J. Barney Sherry are the principals in this five-part picture, directed by Jack Conway. It is the story of a sister's sacrifice. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

WOLVES OF THE BORDER, May 12.—Roy Stewart and Josie Sedgwick are featured in this five-part melodrama written by Alvin J. Neitz. Fine locations and a live story well acted are all to be found in the picture. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

SINKING OF THE LUSITANIA (Windsor McCay).—An excellent animated cartoon made by Windsor McCay. It pictures realistically the tragedy of the Lusitania and forms a good patriotic offering. The picture was reviewed in our issue of May 18.

Advertising Aids for Busy Managers

"TEMPERED STEEL"

The First National Exhibitor's Circuit Presents Mme. Olga Petrova in Mrs. L. Case Russell's Intensely Dramatic Story of the Clash of Wills Between Father and Daughter.

Cast.

Lucille Caruthers.....Mme. Petrova
Serge Radikin.....J. Herbert Frank
Richard Sheldon.....Thomas Holding
Mr. Caruthers.....William Carlton
Mrs. Caruthers.....Mrs. Walton
Rose Madden.....Edith Hinckle
Edwin Archer.....E. J. Radcliffe
Mrs. Sheldon.....Matilda Brundage

Directed by Ralph Ince.

The Story: Lucille Caruthers, daughter of an imperious Southerner who believes in absolutely dominating the women of his family, has all of her father's stubborn will, and in the clash over her ambitions to win success upon the stage she is disowned and comes to New York. Here she is coached by Serge Radikin, who guides her to a stage success and makes her his leading woman. Later she attracts the attention of Archer, a famous producer, who takes the pair under his management, but his attentions to Lucille fan the Russian's jealousy to the point where he throws up his contract, and, upon the night of her first performance under Archer he goes to Lucille's apartment, maddened by drink, determined she shall not make her appearance. To save herself from the vitriol he is about to throw, she shoots him and disposes of the body, going through the ordeal of the first night and the subsequent congratulations with a far greater display of dramatic ability than she shows in the mimic drama. After the excitement is all over she confesses, but a third suitor, Richard Sheldon, cleverly releases her from the charge of murder.

Feature Mme. Petrova as Lucille Caruthers and Thomas Holding as Richard Sheldon.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Gripping Drama of Stage Life, Disclosing the Thraldom of Stubborn Ambition.

Stunt Suggestions: If your lobby permits, set up a screen from behind which protrude the feet and ankles of a dummy. On the screen hang a card lettered "Behind the screen was the body of the man she had killed. Before it the famous actress stood to receive the congratulations of her friends upon her latest success. But one of the stirring situations in Tempered Steel, the most powerful play in which Mme. Petrova has yet been seen. Here (date)." The stunt can also be worked in a window if you can obtain the space.

Advertising Aids: Two designs in one-sheets. One each in three, six and 24-sheets. Window cards. Heralds. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. One three-column cut. Three each one and two-column cuts. Thumbnail cut. Slides in three designs. Heralds. Press sheet.

"THE MYSTERIOUS CLIENT"

Pathe Presents Mrs. Castle in a Startling and Vivid Story of the Underworld of the Aristocracy. Written by Charles Davey.

Cast.

Jeanne Darcey.....Irene Castle
Harry Nelson.....Milton Sills
Boris Norjunov.....Warner Oland
Tony Cavallo.....Caesar Gravina

Directed by Fred Wright.

The Story: Harry Nelson, a struggling young attorney, unable to pay his rent, receives a dispossess notice. He meets Boris Norjunov, who promises to pay him well if he will perform a rather shaky legal service, but Nelson declines. Jeanne Darcy comes rushing into his office and implores him to protect her from her pursuers until she has placed an envelope in a safe deposit vault. Nelson proffers his aid, but in the street they are attacked and the envelope stolen from his mysterious client. Nelson, still desiring to help the young woman, agrees to accompany her to a fashionable apartment house, where they are caught by Boris rifling a safe. A fight between Nelson and Boris ensues, and when the former regains his senses he finds himself in a secret room. He is released by Jeanne and, sometime later, upon being summoned to the mysterious house again, hears Boris threatening to kill Jeanne unless she will consent to murder a Miss Lonsdale. Nelson again battles with Boris; a shot is fired, and Miss Lonsdale falls apparently dead. Then a most unexpected climax develops.

Feature Irene Castle as Jeanne Darcey and Milton Sills as Harry Nelson.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Young Lawyer, Waiting for Clients, Gets the "Mitten" from His Sweetheart and Is Evicted by His Landlord.

The Contents of a Mysterious Envelope Puts Thrill in Photoplay.
Mystery and Excitement Lends Interest to Clever Screen Romance.
Comedy and Tragedy Revealed in the Struggles of an Unlucky Lawyer.
Novelty and Mystery Increase the Appeal of Engaging Photodrama.

Stunt Suggestions: The story does not give much to work upon, but plays up the fact that Mrs. Castle, Milton Sills and Warner Oland, the three stars of Patria, are all prominently employed in this production. In your newspaper and other advertising play up the line "Would you go through hell for an unprotected girl?" which is the appeal that gets Harry into all his troubles.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 11x14, both in sepia and color. Also 22x28. Slide. Campaign book. Cuts.

Released May 19.

"THE FAIR PRETENDER"

Goldwyn Presents Charming Madge Kennedy in the Story of an Awful Little Fibber Who Did Not Suffer the Penalty of Her Sins.

Cast.

Sylvia Maynard.....Madge Kennedy
Don Meredith.....Tom Moore
Harcourt .....Robert Walker
Ramon Gonzales.....Paul Doucet
Captain Milton Brown.....Wilmer Walter
Townsend .....Emmett King
Freddie .....John Terry
Barnum .....Charles Slattery
Marjorie Townsend.....Florence Billings
Mrs. Townsend.....Grace Stevens

Directed by Charles Miller.

The Story: Sylvia Maynard demonstrates to her employer, a play producer, how she would act if given the leading part in a play about to be put on. The wife of the producer happens in just as Sylvia, who is using her employer as her imaginary lover, is enacting a passionate love scene, and the wife, refusing to accept the young girl's explanation, demands that she be dismissed. At home Sylvia finds the rejected manuscript of the play and recalls the young man who wrote it. The production depicts the experiences of a poor girl who managed to make the wealthy believe that she is the widow of a United States army captain who was killed in action, and Sylvia determines to enact the part in real life. Mingling with the rich under the name of Mrs. Milton Brown, she succeeds in getting them to believe the story of her husband's death. Sylvia receives a shock when her make-believe husband turns out to be a real man. Don Meredith, the author of the play, whom she has met and who has fallen in love with her, is heartbroken to find that she is not free. The ensuing complications and the manner in which they are handled bring about a startling climax.

Feature Madge Kennedy as Sylvia Maynard and Tom Moore as Don Meredith.

"THE GOLDEN GOAL"

Greater Vitagraph Presents Harry Morey and Florence Deshon in a Blue Ribbon Feature by Lawrence S. McCloskey. The Story of a Man Who Rose From the Dregs.

Cast.

John Doran.....Harry Morey
Beatrice Walton.....Florence Deshon
Laura Brooks.....Jean Paige
Mr. Walton.....Arthur Donaldson
Richard Talbot.....Denton Vane

Directed by Paul Scardon.

The Story: In the Seamen's Mission where John Doran, a man of the seas, has come for a rest, he meets Beatrice Walton, a society girl seeking a change in her life by playing the organ in the Mission. Through Beatrice, Doran is given a job on her father's estate, and when she has awakened in him a strong affection for her, which she has no intention of reciprocating, she orders his dismissal. Doran works strenuously to amass a fortune, for he is determined to overcome the only barrier—money—which, to his mind, stands between him and Beatrice. With the assistance of Laura Brooks, a stenographer in the Talbot shipbuilding yards, where Doran is employed, he is advanced to the position of foreman. This is the first important step toward his goal, and he later becomes a leader in the workmens' union. Mr. Walton, failing in his attempt to get Talbot to sell his plant, schemes with his daughter to get Doran to call a strike. Seeing a chance to get a large sum of money thereby, Doran agrees, and just as he is about to call the strike he awakens to the perfidy of Beatrice and refuses to call the men out. The day is saved for Talbot, and Doran reclaims himself in the eyes of Laura, who has become much attracted to him.

Feature Harry Morey as John Doran and Jean Paige as Laura Brooks.

Program and Advertising Phrases: How a Man from the Dregs Followed a False Star, but Finally Reaches Realization.

Brute Force Wins Mastery Until Gentleness Comes with Love.
How a Wanton Jade Nearly Wrecks the Lives of Helpless Victims.
The Lure of Power, Backed by Intrigue, Stirs Fateful Emotions.
Gripping Story Revealed in Thrilling Scenes and Tense Episodes.

Stunt Suggestions: This is a labor story with a labor man for the hero. Get the trade unions interested. For street work make up a powerful man to look as much like a down-and-out longshoreman as possible. Letter a sign on his back: "This is the way I looked when Beatrice Walton first saw me. What happened after you can find out at the (house) today." Play up the interest of the shipyard scenes, using the stills for window work, supplementing these with any outside shipbuilding pictures you can get.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Window cards. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Heralds. Slides. Plan book. Press sheet.

"THE MILLION DOLLAR DOLLIES."

Screen Classics Presents the Famous Dolly Sisters in a Sumptuous Production of Leonce Perret's Original Story Written Expressly for Their Use.

Cast.

Yancsi Dolly..... Herself
Roszika Dolly..... Herself
Jack Hobson.....Bradley Barker
Tom Hylan.....Huntley Gordon
Rajah .....Paul Doucet
Princess .....Dolores Cassinelli
Maharajah .....Ernest Maupain
Alienist .....Marshall Phillip

Directed by Leonce Perret.

The Story: The Dolly sisters refuse to marry Jack Hobson and Tom Hylan until they have as much money as their prospective bridegrooms. It is this determination which influences them to accept the offer of a famous alienist, who offers them a million dollars to aid him in a cure. They are taken to a wonderful palace, not far from Broadway, where they find a young rajah whose disordered mind had caused him to spurn his princess. It is the Dolly's task to win him back to an interest in his wife. This they succeed in doing, but Yancsi has won the regard of the Maharajah, and he seeks to detain them against their will. The girls, however, succeed in getting a telephone message to their sweethearts, who come to their rescue in the nick of time.

Feature the Dolly Sisters, Bardel Barker as Jack Hobson and Huntley Gordon as Tom Hylan.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Two Poor Girls Decline to Wed Until They Shall Have as Much Money as the Men They Love.

Stunt Suggestions: Borrow a few globes of goldfish and use these for window work with a card explaining that "The Rajah preferred goldfish to his beautiful young wife—but that was because he was crazy. He was cured by The Million Dollar Dollies." Play up the various New York successes of the Dolly sisters in the newspaper work. Make as large a display of the still pictures as possible. These will sell the film more surely than any special stunts.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Press sheet. Ten-minute novel for newspapers. Lobby sheet. Slides. Heralds. Cuts. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Filler sheet.

"THE WINNING OF BEATRICE"

Metro Presents May Allison in a Business Romance in Five Acts. Written by May Tully.

Cast.

Beatrice Buckley.....May Allison
Robert Howard.....Hale Hamilton
James Buckley.....Frank Currier
John Maddox, Sr.....Stephen Grattan
John Maddox, Jr.....John Davidson
Millie Nelson.....Peggy Parr
Thomas Nelson.....Dean Raymond
Henry Jenkins.....Frank Joyner
Baby Jenkins.....Baby Ivy Ward

Directed by Harry L. Franklin.

The Story: James Buckley, president of a trust company, is persuaded by John Maddox, Sr., one of the directors, to use the securities of an estate in trust. Maddox gives Buckley his personal note as security, but when a sudden demand is made by the estate Buckley cannot collect from Maddox. Maddox has his tool, Jenkins, steal back the note, and in doing so kills Buckley, whose body is found by his daughter, Beatrice, on her return from a bazaar where her home-made candy has been one of the best sellers. On the drive back home she has become engaged to Maddox's son, but the engagement is broken when Buckley is supposed to have killed himself because of his misappropriation. Robert Howard, a young advertising agent, has become interested in Beatrice and persuades her to manufacture her candy commercially. The venture is such a success that it interferes with the profits of a candy company owned by the senior Maddox, who seeks, through Jenkins, to induce the employees of Beatrice to strike. Jenkins, mortally hurt, confesses to the murder and names the instigator, clearing Buckley's name, and Beatrice sells the secret of her success to Maddox for a handsome sum. It is merely the use of goat's instead of cow's milk.

Feature May Allison as Beatrice Buckley and Hale Hamilton as Robert Howard.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Novel Outcome of a Society Girl's Venture Into Commercial Life as a Candy Maker.
Sweets Bring Millions to the Sweet.
The Simple Things of Life Make Best Photoplay Topics.
May Allison in Her Newest and Most Charming Screen Drama.
Making a Million from a Few Pounds of Sugar.
There's a Lesson Here for Girls Who Want to Help Themselves.

Stunt Suggestions: Have a female goat led through the streets with a blanket, "Ever make fudge out of goat's milk. It made a fortune for one girl. See how it is done in The Winning of Beatrice at (house and date)." Print up envelopes with "Oh, Fudge!" in a ten-line letter, and use them to cover announcements of the play. Hook up with the candy stores with stills and a card reading "If you would know why our fudge is so delicious, see The Winning of Beatrice at (house and date). We, too, have a secret ingredient, but not the same."

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Press sheet. Ten-minutes novel for newspapers. Lobby sheet. Slides. Heralds. Cuts. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Filler sheet.

Released May 20.

Haven.....Geo. MacQuarrie
Hindu Wife.....Lila Chester
John Cuddlestone as a Boy, Charley Jackson
Nan as a Girl.....Madge Evans
Selim.....Joel Day
Isham, Selim's Son.....J. Aquilene

Directed by Travers Vale.

The Story: John Cuddlestone is betrayed by his brother, and leaves for India, where he marries a native woman. Not long after their son is born, Cuddlestone and his wife die. The son, John, who is being educated by the Temple priests, saves a young girl from the slave market. John enters the priesthood, and learns from his father's papers, which he has received, of the treachery of the other Lord Cuddlestone. Hearing that a Lord Cuddlestone is stopping at a nearby hotel, John and Nan, the girl he rescued, entertain the visitors, who disclose their real identity. Lord Cuddlestone sails for England, followed by John and Nan. In England, John is making a great success as a Swami, and one of his followers is Lady Elsie, the ward of Lord Cuddlestone. Having squandered his fortune, Cuddlestone begins to drain that of his ward, who visits the Swami for aid. When Cuddlestone learns the identity of the Swami he dies of remorse. Lady Elsie recovers her money, and John and Nan return to India.

Feature Montagu Love, who plays the dual roles of John Cuddlestone, junior and senior, and Louise Vale as Nan.

Program and Advertising Phrases: An appalling Legacy of Hate and the Consequences of Resulting Vengeance.

Strange Legacy of Vengeance Ripens Into Love.
Vengeance Wierdly Thrives in Strange Atmosphere of the Far East.
Occident and Orient United in Picturing Tale of Vengeance.
New Star of World Pictures Introduced in Gripping Photoplay.

Stunt Suggestions: Decorate the lobby with oriental hangings and burn incense just before the doors open. If you can, costume your doorkeeper as an Oriental, or merely let him wear the turban, which can be constructed from several yards of white cheesecloth. If you can borrow small Buddhas, use them for window work in connection with stills. If these are not to be had frame the stills with rich fabrics. Department and dry goods stores can hook up with similar fabrics, Turkish slippers and the like.

Advertising Aids: Two styles, each one, three and six-sheets. Free advance poster. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Two-color heralds. One and two-column cuts. Slides. Press sheet.

"WHO IS TO BLAME?"

Triangle Presents Jack Abbe and Maude Wayne in a Story of the East and West That Meet But Never Mingle.

Cast.

Taro San.....Jack Abbe
Grant Barton.....Jack Livingston
Marion Craig.....Maude Wayne
Tonia Marsh.....Lillian West
Mrs. Craig.....Lillian Langdon

Directed by Frank Borzage.

The Story: On a trip to Japan Grant Barton becomes interested in a 'rickshaw boy, a son of the Samurai, and brings him to America as his servant. Taro worships his master and holds him in but slightly less esteem than his illustrious ancestors. When Grant, beguiled by an adventuress, turns for a moment from the straight path, he is overseen by his wife, Marion, who leaves him, refusing to believe his protestations. Taro, knowing the adventuress to be a spy, leads her to believe that he is one of the Imperial family incognito and so contrives that his master shall find him in the siren's arms. Grant will not believe his explanations and turns him adrift. Taro explains to Marion and then goes back home, but not until he has made an end to the adventuress, and once more he takes up his trade of 'rickshaw runner, his bright dreams for the future now but a dream of the past.

Feature Jack Livingston as Grant Barton and Maud Wayne as Marion Craig.

Program and Advertising Phrases: How a Faithful Japanese Boy Brought Happiness in Restored Love and Confidence to a Man and Wife Estranged.
Intrigue and Villainy Thwarted by a Faithful Servant of the Sun.
Thwarting a Female Spy at the Moment of Her Triumph.
Out of the East Comes Loyalty to Rebuke Faithlessness.
Splendors of the Orient Reflected in Picturesque Photoplay.
Plots and Counterplots Come to Naught in Gripping Romance.

Stunt Suggestions: If you can contrive a 'rickshaw, run it through the streets with a boy in Jap costume and a banner on the back. A light racing sulky might do in a pinch. Get a nearby confectioner to make a display of glaced fruits with a card, "These candies are absolutely pure, but they are the same as those Taro San poisoned that his master might be spared the wiles of an adventuress. It was his idea of fidelity. See Who was to Blame? at (house and date) for the rest of this interesting story." Use the regular paper for window work. You might arrange a 'rickshaw race with home-made 'rickshaws over a short course for boys under sixteen, each to carry a girl passenger if you can get the boys interested.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Special process art heralds. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Photographs. Slides. Electros and mats. Triangle Magazine. Press sheet.

"THE BRIDE'S AWAKENING."

Universal Presents Mae Murray, the Player with a Personality, in F. McGrew Willis' Convincing Preachment Against Clandestine Marriages.

Cast.

Richard Earle.....Lewis J. Cody
Lucille Bennett.....Clarissa Selwynne
George Bennett.....Harry Carter
Frederick Bronson.....Joe Girard
Elaine Bronson.....Mae Murray
Jimmy Newton.....Ashton Dearholt

Directed by Robert Leonard.

The Story: Mrs. Bennett, fearing that Richard Earle, who is only slightly in love with her, will cast her aside, asserts that if he leaves her she will kill him and then herself. Earle, who really has no intention of making her his wife, marries Elaine Bronson, but keeps it a secret. Shortly after the wedding Earle begins to neglect her, and at a party she is insulted by one of his drunken friends. Jimmy Newton, a guest, believing that she is only Earle's ward, protects her, but when he shows affection for her Earle's jealousy is aroused. Mrs. Bennett is subsequently discarded by her husband, and going to Earle's house hears him tell Newton of his marriage to Elaine. When Newton has left Earle strikes Elaine, who picks up a revolver. It falls behind the curtain where Mrs. Bennett is hiding, and as Earle strikes Elaine again Mrs. Bennett fires at him. As he falls a second shot proclaims the complete fulfillment of Mrs. Bennett's threat.

Feature Lewis J. Cody as Richard Earle and Mae Murray as Elaine Bronson.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Convincing Photoplay Preachment Against Clandestine Marriages.
Photoplay Argument Against the Wedding of Mismated Couples.
Be Off with the Old Love Before Marrying the New Enchantress.
Confiding Love and Base Treachery Basis of Gripping Photoplay.
There Can Be No Division of Love in a Marriage for Happiness.
Don't Be Caught in Despicable Intrigue is the Latter-Day Commandment.

Stunt Suggestions: If you have had a recent runaway match in your town the best thing to do would be to hook up with this publicity, taking the safe position that not all clandestine marriages are apt to turn out as well as the Blank-Dash match. In default of such publicity, try to interest the clergy, explaining the purpose of the story. If you have not worked the contest stunt lately offer a prize, through some paper, for the best letter from a happy bride who was secretly married. Use a card or throwaway lettered "Don't Get Married" in large type, and in a much smaller face "until you have seen A Bride's Awakening at (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Player cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two-columns wide. Press book.

Released May 25.

"OLD WIVES FOR NEW"

Jesse L. Lasky Presents Cecil De Mille's Production of a Screen Version of David Graham Phillips's Widely-Read Novel, With Many Screen Favorites.

Cast.

Jack Porter.....Donald MacDonald
Pedro Escoba.....Milton Ross
Jose Duranzo.....Spottiswoode Aitken
Bobby Underwood.....Buster Irving

Directed by R. William Neill.

The Story: Marcella's father, a musician, falls ill, and is unable to continue his work. Rather than become the wife of Pedro Escoba, also a musician, Marcella supports herself and her parent by working as a model. Marcella's father gets worse, and the service of a specialist is required. To secure money to obtain the doctor, Marcella agrees to a proposition of Lois Underwood, the show-girl wife of the wealthy Robert Underwood, to live in the West for a certain time under the assumed name of Mrs. Underwood, the object of Lois being to obtain a divorce from her husband and to marry her admirer, Count Louis Le Favri. Little Bobby Underwood falls dangerously ill, but through Marcella's nursing his health is restored. Later, Mrs. Underwood and the count meet death when a discarded lover of Mrs. Underwood, acting as her chauffeur, drives them into a lake. Robert Underwood, who has fallen in love with Marcella, marries her.

Feature Dorothy Dalton as Marcella Duranzo and Thurston Hall as Robert Underwood.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Vengeance Breaks the Marriage Tie When Schemes and Plots Have Failed.
Getting Rid of a Husband Was Not So Easy as It Seemed.
Stripping the Mask of Deceit from the Face of a Faithless Wife.
When Is a Co-Respondent Not a Co-Respondent?
Stirring Drama of Married Infelicity Carrying a Vital Lesson.
Domestic Drama Involving Thrilling Complications.

Stunt Suggestions: Get out a throwaway with a flash line, "Do you want to earn $1,000?" In smaller type add, "Mrs. Robert Underwood paid Marcella that sum to impersonate her at Reno and thus establish a legal residence preparatory to divorce. See 'The Mating of Marcella' at (house and date)." Get a blank decree of divorce if you can, or make a copy, and paste on window cards with the text, "Mrs. Underwod paid Marcella a thousand dollars to establish a Reno residence, but Death was the judge who gave the final decree. See 'The Mating of Marcella' at (house and date)." Use with the large gelatines of the star for lobby work.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

"OLD HARTWELL'S CUB."

Triangle Presents William Desmond in a Powerful Story of a Man Who Was a Man and Another Who Wasn't—with a Girl, of Course.

Cast.

Bill Hartwell.....William Desmond
Mary Lane.....Mary Warren
Edward Jones.....Eugene Burr
Rev. David Lane.....Walt Whitman
Tom Hartwell.....Percy Challenger
Mag Jones.....Dorothy Hagar
Deacon Grimes.....Graham Pette
Steven Marvin.....Edwin J. Brady
Benton.....William J. Ellingford

Directed by Thomas N. Heffron.

The Story: The drunken father of Bill Hartwell, the village blacksmith, is placed in jail, but is released by his son, who batters down the door. Deacon Grimes and the villagers try to drive them out of the place, but young Hartwell fights them off. David Lane, the village minister, appears, takes sides with the Hartwells, and subdues the attackers. Bill is invited to the minister's home and a mutual attraction develops between him and Mary, the preacher's daughter. Edward Jones, posing as a salesman of bibles, but a crook at heart, through intrigue gets Mary to marry him. Not long after the ceremony Jones flees from town, but Mary follows him to the village of Chico where she learns that he has a wife. While at the height of her troubles, Bill, whose father has died, comes into Chico and takes Mary home as his bride after having been informed that Jones did not have a legal ceremony performed.

Feature William Desmond as Bill Hartwell and Mary Warren as Mary Lane.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Without Purposed Intent This Photoplay Will Add Another Nail to John Barleycorn's Coffin-Cover.
Red Blood and Sturdy Manhood Counterbalance Intrigue and Vice.
Victory Over Malice is Easily Won When Hypocrisy Shakes Its Slimy Cloak.
How a "Fighting Parson" Exposed His Flock of Hypocrites.
Sure and Rapid Disposal of Crooks Under Western Forms of Justice.
Gripping Story, with Forceful Lesson, Told in Brilliant Photoplaying.

Stunt Suggestions: Probably you can dig up some old worsted work mottoes with "Honor Thy Father." If you can, use these for window work with a card, "This was the motto of Bill Hartwell, and he lived up to it to the last in Old Hartwell's Cub, a stirring Triangle story of the West." For the lobby you can rig up a blacksmith's shop with a portable forge and someone to work the hot iron. Most of your reliance must be placed upon the material supplied by the manufacturer.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, one each three and six-sheets. Heralds in rotogravure. Slides. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Electros and mats. Press sheets.

Released May 19.

"TRUE BLUE."

William Fox Presents William Farnum as a Typical American in a Romance of a Remittance Man Who Learned at Last the Value of the True American Blood.

Cast.

Bob McKeever.....William Farnum
Bob McKeever (as a child), Francis Carpenter
Gilbert Brockhurst, afterward Earl of Somerfield .....Charles Clary
Stanley Brockhurst, his second son, William Scott
Buck, the foreman.....Harry De Vere
Pedro .....Barney Furey
Hank Higgins.....G. Raymond Nye
Henry Cottenham.....Marc Robbins
Secretary to the Earl.....Jack Connelly
Mary Brockhurst.....Ada Gleason
Lady Somerfield.....Genevieve Blinn
Ruth Merritt.....Katherine Adams
Wife of Buck.....Carrie Ward Clark

Directed by Frank Lloyd.

The Story: Gilbert Brockhurst, a cousin of the Earl of Somerfield, is informed that through the death of his relative he is now Earl. He sails for England, leaving his wife and young son, Robert, in San Francisco where the family has been living. Mrs. Brockhurst, heartbroken over the note which she finds from her husband saying that her life as the Countess of Somerfield would only spell unhappiness for both, goes to a ranch in Arizona which she has inherited and where she later dies. Her son, resentful at his father's attitude, takes the name of Robert McKeever. Meanwhile, Brockhurst has married and his second wife bears him a son, whom he names Stanley. Years later, Brockhurst and Stanley come to America on a secret diplomatic mission, and Robert meets and assists financially his half-brother, a spendthrift. Robert believes that his sweetheart, the school teacher, has been won over by Stanley. He is leaving for another city when she tells him that he is the man she really loves. Brockhurst decides to make Robert his heir; but he refuses the offer, and Stanley, through the generosity and kindness of his half-brother, realizes how dissolute his habits are and returns to England—a better man.

Feature William Farnum as Bob McKeever and Katherine Adams as Ruth Merritt.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Justice Overtakes an English Snob Who Marries in America and Deserts His Wife for a Title.
The West Drives Home a Lesson in Decency with Compound Interest.
Taking the Measure of a Man in True Western Fashion.
English Snobbery Gets an Accounting from American Manhood.
William Farnum is His Latest Screen Romance Seen at His Best.
The Rugged West Deals Out Justice with Impartial Code.

Stunt Suggestions: If you have them, use pictures of Farnum for window display; drape with the American flag and with a card giving the title and emphasize the fact that this is not a war play. For the lobby use a broad-brimmed Stetson and a gilt crown with the legend: "He was given a chance to exchange his cowboy Stetson for the coronet of an Earl, but he was a true blue American and loved the range too well to give it up for an English park. See William Farnum in True Blue (date). A Fox Standard Feature." An effective throwaway can repeat the legend with a streak of blue dye at the top of the sheet. A small boy can put the dye on a couple of thousand bills between school and supper time.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Press sheets and mats. (Mats may be secured free by writing to the Fox Film Corporation, Publicity Department, New York City.) Cuts are made on special order at the rate of 20 cents per column.

"ACE HIGH."

William Fox Presents the Daring Player Tom Mix, in a Strenuous Story of the Alaska-Canadian Border.

Cast.

Jean Rivard.....Tom Mix
Jean Rivard (10 years old)....Lloyd Perl
Jean Rivard (15).....Louis Sargent
Annette Dupre.....Kathleen Connors
Annette Dupre (as a child), Virginia Lee Corbin
Jack Keefe.....Lawrence Peyton
Baptiste Dupre.....Colin Chase
Harvey Wright.....Jay Morley
Louis Cartier.....Pat Chrisman

Directed by Lynn Reynolds.

The Story: Baby Annette Dupre is found lying beside her dead mother in the snow by Jean Rivard, a ten-year-old lad. Jean takes the child to a man and his wife, living in a nearby settlement. The couple adopt Annette, and when the wife dies the husband sends the child east to be educated. The husband becomes the owner of a saloon on the Canadian-Alaskan border, and the bar is so built that it can be shifted into the other country when the police are after him. When he reaches manhood, Jean joins the Canadian Mounted Police, and learns that the husband has sent for Annette to work in the dance hall. Fearing that harm will befall her, Jean decides to save her from such a life, but only accomplishes his purpose after he has had two strenuous fights. Learning that Annette's father has become president of a new railroad, Jean takes her to him. Later Jean and Annette are married.

Feature Tom Mix as Jean Rivard and Kathleen Connors as Annette Dupre.

Program and Advertising Phrases: The Story of a Love That Lasted from Childhood Through Maturity.
Dastardly Plot to Reap Profit Through a Woman's Disgrace.
Powerful and Moving Scenes Set in the Great Canadian Northwest.
The Dash and Romance of Rugged Drama Translated to the Screen.
Villainy Fails When the Great Wilderness Gives Up Its Secret.
Fighting to Victory With Human Wolves on Civilization Outposts.

Stunt Suggestions: The Shifting Bar is about the best stunt suggestion. If you can get a large enough window build a table supplied with bottles. Paint a line down the centre of the window and put the bar on the line. On the card letter "One side of this line is in Alaska, the other in Canada. By moving the bar across the line the owner escapes the jurisdiction of the police. To this dive he was about to bring his adopted daughter, but the Northwest Mounted Policeman who loved her intervened. See the thrilling story of "Ace High" at (house and date). Tom Mix is the star. That's a guarantee of action." You can use a similar bar in your lobby if space permits. It will also make a good talking point for the newspaper work.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Press sheet and mats (mats can be secured free by writing to the Fox Film Corporation, Publicity Department, New York City). Cuts are made on special order at the rate of 20 cents per column.

"THE GUILT OF SILENCE."

Bluebird Presents Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford in a Story of Alaskan Life That Is Different from All the Others in Its Run of Unusual Incident. From the Story by Ethel Hall.

Cast.

"Silent" Smith.....Monroe Salisbury
Harkness .....Alfred Allen
Amy .....Betty Schade
Mary .....Ruth Clifford
Gambler Joe.....Sam De Grasse

Directed by Elmer Clifton.

The Story: During a terrific thunderstorm Smith loses his voice. He is rescued by Harkness, a miner. Winter comes and Harkness goes on a long prospecting expedition, leaving his wife, Amy, and his daughter, Mary, in the care of Smith. In the spring when he returns he is astonished to find that his wife has given birth to a baby and that Smith is in love with Mary. In a heated argument Amy accuses "Silent" Smith of the parentage of her child. Then the wife rushes out of the cabin, and Harkness fires at Smith, wounding him in the arm. The shock results in Smith regaining his voice, and he urges the old miner to go after Amy. He does, and to his horror learns that she has been unfaithful to him, and that she is now the wife of another. Amy goes out of his life forever, and Harkness returns to his cabin to live with Mary and Smith.

"NEWMAN" Brass Frames and Rails

DO YOU KNOW

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMANS"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."

Insist on that name and save money.

You ought to have our latest catalogue. Write us today.

We manufacture the frames in various finishes which do not require polishing.

Gripping Story of a Man Unjustly Accused and Reprieved by Strange Fate.
Love and Loyalty Win in Strife for Glittering Gold.
Speech Comes When Grip of Death Unloosens Afflicted Tongue.
The Code of the Klondyke Nearly Sacrifices an Innocent Man.

Stunt Suggestions: Shoot a bullet into a board, extract it and tack to a lobby card lettered "Revolver shots are not used by the average physician to restore lost voices, but this bullet struck 'Silent' Smith just in time to save his reputation and his partner's happiness. See how it happened in The Guilt of Silence (date)." The same idea can be used for window displays with a frame of cartridges. During the hot weather advertise a trip to Alaska for the price of admission. Use the same idea on cards with a basis of "This ticket and ?? cents will entitle the bearer to one trip to Alaska starting (dates) from the Blank theater."

"SELFISH YATES."

Thomas H. Ince Presents William S. Hart in a Powerful Story by C. Gardner Sullivan Telling of the Reclamation of a Brutalized Rum-Seller Through the Power of Innocent Love.

Cast.

"Selfish Yates".....William S. Hart
Mary Adams.....Jane Novak
"Rocking Chair" Riley.....B. Sprotte
The Oklahoma Hog.....Harry Dunkinson
Hotfoot.....Ernest Butterworth
Betty Adams.....Thelma Salter

Directed by William S. Hart.

The Story: "Selfish Yates" is a dive keeper in a little mining town in Arizona. His theory is that his own personal interests should engage his attention solely and refraining from interfering in the business of others, he sternly prohibits anyone else from interfering with his. One day a young woman of the loftiest character enters into the sphere of his existence and by her purity and softness effects a spiritual regeneration in this ruffianly character. This is not accompanied without much trouble on his part, but after a series of thrilling incidents he comes to a realization of his great love for the girl.

Feature William S. Hart as "Selfish Yates" and Jane Novak as Mary Adams.

Program and Advertising Phrases: The Beacon Light of Love Guides a Master Outlaw to the Harbor of Regeneration.
"Bill" Hart Has Opportunity to Do His Best Acting.
Good Impulses, Long Dormant, Awakened by True Love.
Dan Cupid Wins Signal Victory in the Hurly-Burly of Outlawry.

"BLUE-EYED MARY."

William Fox Presents June Caprice, the Sunshine Girl, in the Story of a Girl Who Won a Fortune Through a Fortunate Accident.

Cast.

Mary Du Bois.....June Caprice
Mrs. Van Twiller Du Bois....Helen Tracy
Jeanette.....Blanche Hines
Cecil Harrington.....Bernard Randall
Jones, the Butler.....Thomas Fallon
Tom Vane.....Jack McLean
Bridget.....Florence Ashbrooke
Henry Leffingwell.....Henry Hallam

Directed by Harry Millarde.

The Story: The father of "Blue Eyed Mary" Du Bois has been disowned by his wealthy mother because of his marriage. Mary goes to New York to reconcile them. The grandmother has a nephew who is planning to inherit her fortune. When Mary arrives the grandmother refuses to give the nephew more money, and calls him a spendthrift. The nephew robs the safe, and accuses Mary. At this point comes a peculiar twist in the story that brings happiness to Mary and her parents.

Feature June Caprice as Mary Du Bois and Bernard Randall as Cecil Harrington.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Intrigue Put to Naught by Brave Girl's Relentless Opposition.
Girl's Quick Wit and Self-Possession Thwarts Scheming Villain.
Mystery, Romance and Adventure in a Fight for Fortune.
Thrilling Detective Story With Smashing Surprise Climax.
Deceit and Treachery Nearly Rend Established Family Ties.
Fast Action and Thrilling Scenes Provide Exciting Amusement.

Stunt Suggestions: Use "Be Nice to Your Grandmother" as the catchline for a throwaway or newspaper work, and explain that that was how Mary came into money. There is nothing in the story to suggest special stunting. Try to get it over with the paper and stills supplied you.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one, three and six-sheet. Lobby display, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Press sheet and mats. (Mats can be secured free by writing to the Fox Film Corporation, Publicity Department, New York City. Cuts are made on special order at the rate of 20 cents per column).

"OVER THE TOP."

Albert E. Smith Presents Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey (Himself) in a Photoplay Supreme Based Upon Empey's World-Famous Book. With Lois Meredith and James Morrison.

Cast.

Garry Owen.....Arthur Guy Empey
Helen Lloyd.....Lois Meredith
Albert Lloyd.....James W. Morrison
Friederich von Emden..Arthur Donaldson
Mrs. Wagner.....Julia Swayne Gordon
Mrs. Margaret McNeal.....Mary Maurice
Madam Arnot.....Betty Blythe
Sonia.....Nellie Anderson
Thomas Waldron.....William Calhoun
Geoffrey Blake.....William H. Stucky

Directed by Wilfrid North.

The Story: The narrative vividly depicts Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey's life from the time he is honorably discharged from the United States army, his entry into business life and follows him through his service in the British army, and his adventures with the boys from America in the trenches. There is a romance running through the picture.

Feature Arthur Guy Empey as Garry Owen and Lois Meredith as Helen Lloyd.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Marvellous Photoplay Made from World-Famous Book by Celebrated Soldier-Lecturer and Yankee Hero.
Personal Appearance of Famous American Soldier, Author and Lecturer in His Own Photodrama.
The Real Thing in War Dramas with Vivid Picture Reproductions of Heroic Deeds by America's First Soldier-Hero.
Go "Over the Top" in a Comfortable Chair with the Yankee Hero.
The Vibrant Thrills of Warfare Pictured in This Exposure of the Hun.

Stunt Suggestions: Circus the town with three, six and twenty-four sheet stands, reaching out into the territory tapped by train or trolley. Use plenty of window cards. Get the stores to feature Empey's books, and make a special drive on the schools, giving after school matinees with or without reduction tickets. Interest the Red Cross and the Boy Scouts to sell tickets on a small percentage. Use a street wagon with the twenty-four sheet stand and a fife and drum. Do your press work as far in advance as possible and keep it up until the last day of the showing.

Advertising Aids: Two styles one-sheet. Two styles three-sheets. One six-sheet. One twenty-four sheet. Lobby displays. Slides. Window card. One, two, three and four-column ready made advertisements.

victed and sentenced to death. The murderer is captured by Mary and her father, who inform the governor. The executive orders the execution stayed, but is informed that it is too late. Then comes a thrilling climax.

Feature Jewel Carmen as Mary Manning and L. C. Shumway as Bob Anderson.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Robbed of Her Wedding Ring a Bride Battles to Save the Family Honor.

Bride, Groom and a Murdered Woman Provide Motive of Photoplot.

Baffling Mystery in Murder Plot to Ruin Bride and Groom.

Stolen Wedding Ring Brings Bridegroom Close to Gallows.

Loss of Wedding Ring Leads to Appalling Complications.

Bride's Love Wins in Terrific Struggle to Save Groom from Execution.

Stunt Suggestions: Get a furniture store to display two arm chairs with a card: "Bob and Mary Anderson has to spend their wedding night in these chairs because Mary had lost her wedding ring. And because of this Bob was convicted of murder. It doesn't seem possible, does it, but see 'Confession' at (house and date) and be convinced." A tobacconist can argue that just because a smoke caused Bob to be convicted of murder is no reason why the public should not enjoy his brand of smokes and see "Confession." A jeweler can urge the value of a wedding ring, and so on. Work as many window displays as you can along these lines. For the lobby get a carpenter to make a couple of wooden wedding rings large enough to use as frames for the stills. Have them gilded.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Press sheet and mats (mats can be secured free by writing to the Fox Film Corporation, Publicity Department, New York City). Cuts are made on special order at the rate of 20 cents per column.

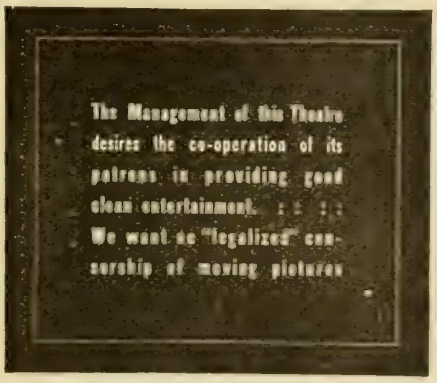
Every Little Bit Helps

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.



The Management of this Theatre
desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good
clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

Simplex

"If he says so it must be true"

It is almost impossible to have expert knowledge of everything you buy.

The thing to do, therefore, is to buy of men who are experts—and honorable.

Such men know what is good and what isn't.

They'll tell you what is best for you.

And even if you doubt the wisdom of what they recommend, take their word for it. You'll win.

Another example came to our notice the other day, in the shape of a letter written to one of our Distributors. Here it is:

Philadelphia, April 16, 1918.

Mr. Lewis M. Swaab,
1327 Vine Street,
Philadelphia.

Dear sir:

I bought a Simplex from you about five years ago, at your solicitation, taking your word for it that the machine was better than anything on the market. But, frankly, I doubted your word.

Now I want to say to you that my Simplex machine has been running every day for almost five years, and it has not cost me more than about Ten Dollars during that time for repairs, and these were only incidentals.

I am so fond of the machine that if I could not get another I would not sell it at any price.

You are at liberty to use this letter at your pleasure.

Yours very truly,

Lyric Theatre,
2nd & Morris Streets,
Philadelphia.

Alfred D. Gregory

This letter is, in effect, written to YOU. And it tells you two things:

(1) The Simplex is, as we have told you, the Machine that costs little for repairs and gives Permanently Perfect Projection.

(2) The Simplex Dealer is a dependable man. Go to him to buy the Simplex and everything else you need and with his expert knowledge he'll help you succeed.

The Simplex Dealer makes money on your satisfaction—not on repairs

Steel-nerved Herbert

in Elmer Clifton's Daredevil American Drama

"SMASHING

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTION

"EVERYBODY LOVES A LOVER," goes the old saying, and here's a lover with punch and fire and speed that will sweep your people off their feet--Herbert Rawlinson at his dynamic best in a virile Western picture of a man who won't be downed by man or devil in his pursuit of the girl he loves.

"SMASHING THROUGH" has scenes that

Rawlinson

of Love and a Gold Claim

THROUGH

wake you up in the middle of the night with their huge thrills. It's the real stuff—photo-drama at the top notch--zip--pep--big love--swift action--wonderful outdoor and mine scenes--a real American play with a whang and a clang in it. Book this hummer of a picture, and there won't be a man, woman or child who isn't pleased with it right straight through. Reason why? It's a Universal Special Attraction.

EXTRA

On the tenth of June the Universal will start releasing two-reel Western Dramas at the rate of one every week. This will be good news for the many exhibitors who have urged us to resume making two-reelers; and it is important news to every man in the exhibition business, whether he has asked us to make them or not.

The two-reelers that we intend to release are gems. They will contain the punch, the story, the direction and the settings that you expect in great big five reel productions. The only difference will be that five reels of GOOD STUFF will be packed into two. Without the shadow of a doubt the picture public is being five-reeled to death. As we have said time after time, many of the long features now on the market are not to be compared with high-class two or three-reelers when it comes right down to the question of ENTERTAINING the public and not boring them to extinction.

Fortunately, enough exhibitors are awake to the fact that A TWO-REELER IS JUST AS MUCH A FEATURE AS A FIVE-REELER if it contains the goods and is properly advertised by the exhibitor. There was a time when the exhibitor paid his money according to the LENGTH of the film he got. When that time came, the Universal quit making two-reelers—because they cost more to make in proportion to their length than the average five-reel picture does.

But we are now assured by huge stacks of letters from exhibitors that they want more variety in their programs; they want to snap up their shows; and the only thing that will do the snapping up is a series of two-reelers OF A QUALITY BETTER THAN WAS EVER ATTEMPTED BEFORE IN SHORT PICTURES. We'll be ready to shoot on June 10. Get in touch with the nearest Universal exchange NOW and make arrangements to do all future booking in a way that will leave room for THE BEST TWO-REEL DRAMAS THAT EVER CAME OUT OF A STUDIO.

A Paramount Picture

The Charming Story of a Dear Little Girl Who Ran Away With a Strolling Player

"PRUNELLA" is the play in which Marguerite Clark triumphed at the Little Theatre and at the Booth Theatre in New York. "Prunella" was heralded throughout the land as a brilliant drama. Marguerite Clark and her director, Maurice Tourneur, have made it an even more wonderful motion picture.

The dainty charm of the star, the splendid beauty of the production, will make this Paramount Picture a photoplay that the whole nation will go to see.

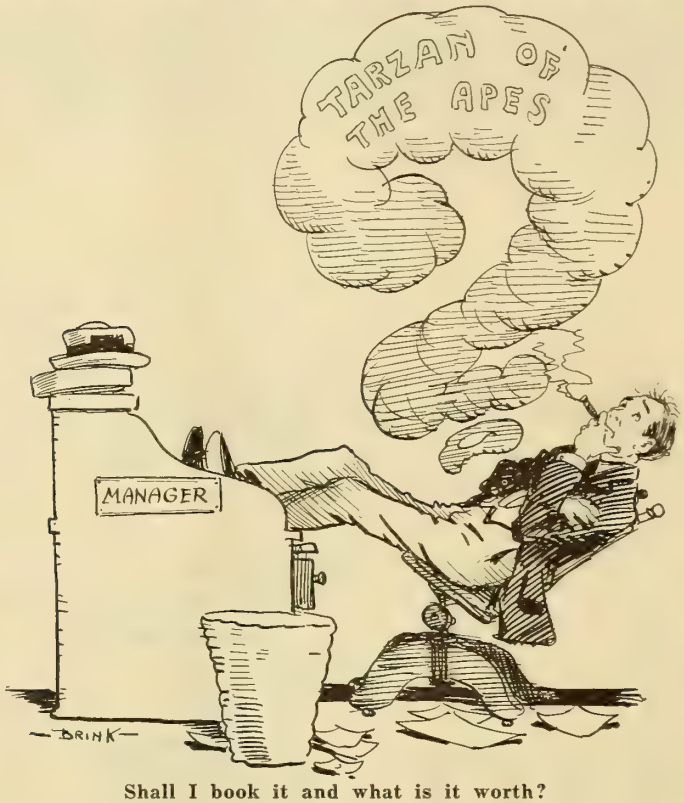
Are you a reason whyer—



Shall I book it and what is it worth?

The First-run man thinks it out something like this—

His Questions	His Answers	His Conclusions
Tarzan of the Apes?	Calls up local bookseller and learns story is most widely read novel of a decade.	Good title; should draw well.
Where and how has it been shown—and at what prices?	The first money-making Broadway success for several years. Ran 8 weeks at Broadway Theater, New York City, at prices of 25c to $2.00. Cleaning up everywhere.	If it made money on Broadway it must be a wonder—guess I can get increased prices, too.
Who releases it?	The First National Exhibitors' Circuit.	If they grabbed it for their theater it's good enough for mine.
Is it a man's, woman's or child's picture? Is it of "Highbrow," one class or a popular appeal attraction?	Buys the story, starts to give it the "once over," decides to take it home and read it, leaves it on his desk and, returning, finds stenographer and office boy disputing about which gets it first while boss is out.	It will interest all ages and both sexes.
Looks up Trade and newspaper reviews.	Is impressed by some such as these: M. P. World: "Drew round after round of applause." N. Y. Sun: "It is just the kind of picture the fans will adore."	Wonders if it will break his house record.
Telegraphs some disinterested friend whose judgment he relies on.	Gets an answer like this: "It is a masterpiece, a true marvel," from Willard Mack, author of "Tiger Rose" and famous actor.	Must be an extra good production.
Watches Trade Paper advertising	And is struck by news ads which show it is breaking house records everywhere.	Decides that rental price asked is too high and plays it on percentage.

Plank No. 3

"To keep the capital of each association in its OWN depository, and under its own control."

The "AFFILIATED" Platform

1—To insure EXHIBITOR MANAGEMENT and CONTROL in very fact, as well as promise.

2—To in no way disturb existing booking organizations, but rather to encourage them.

3—To keep the capital of each association in its OWN depository, and under its OWN control.

4—To maintain all the benefits of "Open Booking," and at the same time provide a CONSISTENT and DEPENDABLE schedule of releases.

5—To secure, not only ALL the concessions in rental prices which the combined buying power of exhibitors will earn, but the MAJOR SHARE of all excess profits as well.

6—To distribute the cost of all productions on a fair and business basis to each booking association, and to every member of such an association.

7—To regulate expenditures, according to sound business methods and to protect exhibitors against excessive salaries, extravagant advertising and pretentious executive offices.

8—To arrange, on behalf of the booking associations, now existing, and such others as shall be formed, for an affiliation with a national, or central clearing house, upon terms that are JUST and EQUITABLE to all concerned.

Protection—Plus vs Promotion—Minus

EVERY exhibitor dollar put into the Affiliated plan must return one hundred cents with interest—not one hundred cents, less ten cents for promotion charges.

This is assured by the fact that the exhibitor's dollar is at all times under his own control—not under the control of promoters.

Not a dollar of his money is used to finance or promote the Affiliated Distributors Corporation. Every penny of it is kept intact in the depository of the exhibitor's own booking association.

The exhibitor pays a modest membership fee to his local booking association. This membership fee, together with those of his fellow exhibitors, is placed in their bank as a trust fund to guarantee to the producer the cost of his picture, plus a profit of twenty-five percent.

This membership fee is a small fraction of the amount many companies require as a deposit. Unlike most deposits, however, these funds draw interest while in trust.

The funds are administered by the bank selected by the booking association. The Affiliated has no jurisdiction over them nor access to them. They are simply the tangible evidence of the Association's good faith.

In return for this assurance of good faith, the exhibitor not only receives pictures on a definite price basis, but gets back fifty percent of all the money earned by each picture over and above its scheduled quota. Of the remaining fifty percent, the Affiliated gets twenty-five percent and the producer twenty-five percent.

The exhibitor is in no way obligated, save to pay for the picture which he selects, while he, in turn, is at all times protected in full.

Any booking plan, less secure, must invite speculation and risk.

TRIANGLE

An Exhibitor—Exchange—Service Proposition

THE TRIANGLE Distributing Corporation is founded upon the three fundamental angles of a progressive business—the Customer, the Product, the Organization.

Three sides form the angles of this business—the Exhibitors, the Exchanges and Service.

The EXHIBITORS' side receives first consideration and "tops" this organization, since without exhibitors there would be no need for exchanges or service. And every TRIANGLE exhibitor is welcomed as a component part of this business.

EXCHANGES then, are operated on the principle that exhibitors come first. Every employee who helps to construct this second side of TRIANGLE realizes that upon the welfare of the exhibitors depends his welfare. And notice we say ExhibitorS—the plural—which means careful consideration to all alike, rich or poor, great or small, old or new. This brings us to the third side of our TRIANGLE.

SERVICE, the only thing an Exchange has to sell. And good service, the only kind that can link TRIANGLE exchanges to efficient exhibitors. The exhibitor is efficient or he wouldn't be buying service. And TRIANGLE service is exactly the opposite to the old idea that exhibitors must look out for themselves. TRIANGLE policy—to furnish the maximum service for the minimum price.

It is evident from the very construction of the TRIANGLE Distributing Corporation that steadily increasing profits will depend upon the cultivation and growth of the three factors—Exhibitors, Exchanges and Service.

And TRIANGLE profits are defined as a just reward for service rendered.

An expansion of the new kind of Service necessitates better Exchanges and more Exhibitors. Likewise the increasing number of exhibitors means better exchanges and better service.

Exhibitors—Grasp the opportunity now of associating with TRIANGLE—the Distributing Corporation that co-operates for the mutual benefit of all.

President Metro Pictures Corp.,
1476 Broadway,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Rowland:-

I cannot refrain from writing you regarding the wonderful success attained by Mme. Nazimova in "TOYS OF FATE" which opened here at the Strand Theatre, last Sunday.

I thought "REVELATION" a great picture but unquestionably in my mind this will meet with even greater success, owing to its tremendous appeal to the masses.

Nazimova is a marvelous star, and exhibitors everywhere should make every effort to book this production, as undoubtedly it should prove to be one of the strongest box-office attractions of the season. Please accept my heartiest congratulations.

With kindest personal regards, I beg to remain,

Yours most sincerely,

TOYS OF FATE

Screen Classics-Metro

DIRECTOR	George D. Baker
SCENARIO BY	June Mathis
CAMERAMAN	Eugene Gaudio
AS A WHOLE	Beautiful star with pep, grace and fascinating personality registers real emotion in artistic, distinctive production
STORY	Gypsy desiring revenge marries daughter to man who stole girl's mother; has good dramatic moments. May be illogical but surely interesting
DIRECTION	Excellent; made situations register and gave truly classy atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Exceptionally fine
LIGHTINGS	Some exquisite and all very good indeed
CAMERA WORK	Excellent
STAR	A delight
SUPPORT	Very capable
EXTERIORS	Composition of some very artistic; always pleasing
INTERIORS	Very good; many effective lightings
DETAIL	Very good; title illustrations excellent
CHARACTER OF STORY	A couple of rough spots, but will ride because beautifully done
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION	6,000 feet

OH, boy! That "gel" can sure troupe! We've had a lot of 'em from the stage try to bust through on the screen, but most of them stubbed their toe about the first or second bust.

Sometimes this has been because the stage favorites were getting too old to stand the searching eye of the camera and sometimes it was because they had really been getting by on the stage because of publicity or favoritism instead of merit. In quite a number of cases failure on the screen followed success on the stage because of the different environment and conditions and the inability to register the voice.

But Nazimova—say, she just simply flashes onto the screen and owns it. She feels what she is doing and knows how to express emotion by body movements as well as the shutting of the facial muscles. Nazimova need never return to the stage if she likes the freedom of film work and the beautiful checks film "maggots" can write. She is there!—and she can stay there—as one of our greatest emotional film stars!

George Baker is deserving of a tremendous amount of credit for presenting the little beauty to splendid advantage. Some stars who tried to do screen work were killed early by bad direction and poor lighting.

In this Nazimova has been beautifully lighted, and the direction of the entire offering is excellent. It is dramatic, interesting and decidedly distinctive as to atmosphere with an occasional laugh in the early part to carry it along properly.

I want to comment particularly on the composition of some of the exteriors taken in Florida. They were exquisite, and the lighting and camera work throughout was excellent. The sets carried the same impressive atmosphere, and from a production viewpoint this certainly hits on high.

The illustrated titles made by Ferdinand Earle were the best work of this sort I have ever seen. They were truly artistic and helped maintain the "class" of the production.

The star's pep, grace and sincerity made it possible for her to dominate always without this dominance being objectionable. Frank Currier, as Nazimova's father Charles Bryant as the 'ero, Irving Cummings as the gypsy lover, and Edward J. Connelly as the dope-eating prosecutor were all excellent. Dodson Mitchell and Nola Mac were quite good types and very satisfactory.

The story centered about an old gypsy's desire to avenge the death of his wife, caused by Mitchell, through having Nazimova marry the man who had stolen her mother. It had many truly tense dramatic moments and held the interest all the way.

The worst spot in the story was the awful coincidence of the gypsy hubby "happening" to be outside just when the roue walked out on Nazimova in the prologue. That could be and should be covered up by a better title explaining that he had traced her.

CUT LOOSE, BOOST STAR BIG; THEY'LL SURE LIKE THIS

The Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you haven't trained your gang to turn out in bunches to see Nazimova, get busy and start something, because she "has it," boys, and folks are going to like her if you get them in.

Make a genuine fuss about her sensational successes on the stage, because she has been a success—a big one—and is right now. She is at present starring in New York in Ibsen's "A Doll's House."

If you attack this right, you'll get both the highbrows and "the mob" and please them, too. Play up her name big and then add a little personal touch of your own about the fact that she is "one" of the "stage stars" who has more than made good on the screen.

For the mob—get one of her most beautiful photographs and bill her as "the most fascinating woman in theatricals" that should start something. If you have a really rough gang, bill her as the "vampire every one loves."

Go easy on the story itself. The plot holds, but will not stand searching analysis as to plausability. Your gang won't care a rap, however, because the star and production simply smother the plot.

The title itself will mean very little in any one's young life, so center all of your attention on Nazimova. For a stunt you could offer a prize on a contest as to how-to pronounce her name. Get your newspaper to pull this for you. There has been a lot of discussion on that point for many years.

Go to this boys—it's a real feature!

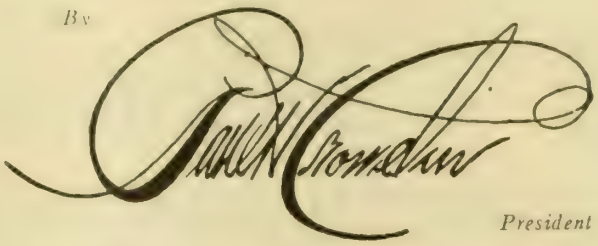
"Little Talks with Foreign Buyers"—No. 12

By



President

SPECIALS!

HAVE you noticed in reading "export items" in the American trade papers, the frequency with which special features for foreign distribution shift about from agent to agent? John Smith offers them in May, John Brown in June, John Green in July, and Hevin Nosehoo in August. Isn't it significant that when Inter-Ocean is announced as exporter for a feature, it remains the exporter? The lucky pair stay true: there is no hasty divorce! "They live happily ever after!" You only hear of separation when the feature is separated from us by a BUYER. What's the reason? Merely that Inter-Ocean enjoys the confidence of foreign buyers by offering them ONLY what Inter-Ocean knows they can use—and that special features handled by Inter-Ocean have ALL had to come up to this test.

FOR INSTANCE:

The Pyramid Company's great productions:
Lewis S. Stone in "Inside the Lines" (6 reels), and "The Man of Bronze" (6 reels)
Selexart's three strong specials:
Rhea Mitchell in "Honor's Cross" (6 reels)
Howard Hickman in "Blue Blood" (6 reels)
Rhea Mitchell and Howard Hickman in "Social Ambition" (7 reels)

Facts and Comments

IT would appear from some correspondence that has come to us that there is to be a determined and conscientious effort to close the breach between exhibitors that was caused by the domineering methods of President Ochs at Chicago a year ago. At that time Mr. Ochs, bent upon promoting some of his peculiar ideas of benefiting the cause of the exhibitor through helping himself, managed to divert a large and influential number of exhibitors from the National League. This movement, which resulted in the forming of the American Exhibitors' Association, was a protest against the Ochs privateering schemes; but important as was the body of secession no lesson was conveyed to Ochs thereby, and he has gone along in his own way much to the detriment of the exhibitors' organization. Fortunately this year is to be his last, and new men are to take charge of the affairs of the Exhibitors' League. It is this prospect that gives hope of healing the breach that has occurred in the body of exhibitors, and a definite effort will be made to accomplish that greatly desired event. As evidence that negotiations have already been commenced we are permitted to publish the letters that have passed between two men who are in position to act with authority:

New York, May 13, 1918.

Mr. C. C. Pettijohn, New York City.

Dear Mr. Pettijohn: Believing in your sincerity and fairness and that you have the welfare of motion picture exhibitors at heart, I am addressing this letter to you in an effort to ascertain at least if it is possible within the next sixty days to bring the two national exhibitors' organizations together under one banner.

I know and I think you realize that there are big, clean, sincere men in both organizations, and we may as well be frank with each other and admit that both organizations are at present hampered by members who have selfish interests to play.

I believe that you and I are in positions at present, or we can at least start a movement which may result in great good to motion picture exhibitors throughout the country.

I am willing to take the initiative for this movement in our organization if you are willing to do likewise with the members of the American Exhibitors' Association. Will you co-operate with me in an effort to bring about a fair understanding among our respective members, and, if possible, an amalgamation of both national organizations into one united, efficient and unselfish organization, which will divorce itself from all sides issues and devote itself solely to the business of the motion picture exhibitors of the United States and Canada?

Will you favor me with an immediate reply to this letter? And if you feel that we can conscientiously work together in the furtherance of a plan which will bring us all under one banner I will be glad to meet with you and your associates and start the "ball rolling."

With kindest personal regards I am

Very truly yours,
SIDNEY S. COHEN,
President New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

New York, May 15, 1918.

Mr. Sidney S. Cohen, President Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State, New York City.

Dear Mr. Cohen: I am just in receipt of your letter dated May 13, and I am trying to comply with your request for an immediate answer.

While in the Middle West last week I consulted with several of the officers and directors of the American Exhibitors' Association on practically the same subject mentioned in your letter.

I believe in you, Mr. Cohen, 100 per cent. I have the utmost confidence in the men who surround you. I have so stated to the men with whom I talked last week, and I have this day sent a recommendation to Frank J. Rembusch, our national secretary, that only a tentative date be set for our national convention and that such tentative date be not sooner than the last of August or the first of September. In the meantime I am willing to join hands with you in an effort to bring about one national organization, with no "sides issues"; devoted exclusively to the business of exhibitors and ever ready to co-operate with any other branch of the industry for our common good.

Uncle Sam has recognized us as a potent factor in this great world war. He needs us, and I personally believe we will be worth more to him under one banner—the banner under which all American people are this day united—his banner.

I am ready to meet you.

Sincerely yours,
C. C. PETTIJOHN.

Mr. Pettijohn has put his finger on the big idea. What is wanted is "a national organization with no side issues." There is sufficient league business to be taken care of to keep a real live exhibitors' league on the jump every day in the year. Up to now that business has been sadly neglected because the chief officers of the league have been busy using their positions and the prestige which goes with them in vain efforts to create private jobs for themselves. We believe that the exhibitors of the United States have had enough of that sort of thing and enough of the sort of officers who go in for that sort of thing. There should be a general clean-up at Boston, and a good slogan for the occasion is: "A National Organization With No Side Issues." It is a good get-together war cry.

ALTHOUGH the plaything of Dame Rumor for the past few months the Goldwyn company comes out with an announcement, which appears in this issue of the Moving Picture World, that would indicate anything but instability or inability. No organization that is at all shaky could carry a program of fifty-two subjects a year, and it requires a fair sort of ability to build a business of that magnitude and to swing it after it has been constructed. This should be in the nature of a rebuke to the feeble-minded gossips who go up and down the town peddling foolish tales.

A BIT of fiction that contains a great deal of fact: Jenkins, the hero of Mary White Slater's story in the April Harper's, is a commonplace young chap, with limited opportunities for enlarging his mental horizon.

> What the moving picture shows did for Jenkins was wonderful. Before he found them his intellectual life had been limited to the reading of the full-page advertisement of the Spalding bargains . . . on Sunday morning, when Jenkins always bought a paper. . . . At the picture show Jenkins came suddenly, by the mere act of looking, into a complex knowledge of life that he had neither the ability nor the taste to get from books.

The last sentence is an argument in favor of the screen that for compactness of expression has not been surpassed by the most zealous of its supporters.

ONE method of keeping down the high cost of film rentals is divulged in an ingenuous letter sent by an exhibitor to the editor of an amusement journal, the pages of which, up to the present, have been void of moving picture advertising. The theater manager goes on to explain how an agent for a film concern visited him and tried to rent him a picture for a sum which he thought too high. While the agent was extolling the merits of his picture and showing a very laudatory review from one of the real moving picture trade journals the exhibitor admits with great satisfaction that he produced an article from the paper to which his letter was sent, and the uncomplimentary tone of its review so took the wind out of the agent's sails (or sale) that he was eager to cut the original rental price squarely in half. The possibilities of such a method of doing business has its serious as well as its humorous side. It also illustrates an established maxim of the show business: "The only bad notice is no notice."

* * *

IN an article in one of the New York dailies the writer expressed his regret that the screen version of Charles Reade's famous old play of the time of Peg Woffington, "Masks and Faces," made by the leading actors of the London stage, had not been booked for a run in one of the Broadway moving picture houses instead of being shown for only one day. The gentleman referred to the grace and distinction with which the members of the cast wore their laces and silks and satins and the ease with which they reproduced the polished manners of an earlier period. Managerial wisdom probably recognized that three-quarters of the names in the cast mean nothing to the larger portion of theatergoers in this country and that the present is so full of vital interest that a picture dealing with a past age would find it difficult to compete with subjects built on some phase of the great war. "Masks and Faces" was the London theatrical profession's contribution to the cause of the Allies, and it is to be hoped that an extra effort will be made by the American public to give it the support it deserves.

A New Form of Contest

By Robert C. McElravy.

NEWSPAPER contests make an interesting diversion for many people, and it has been left to the New York Evening Mail to devise one that will please screen patrons. This paper is running a series of "still" pictures, representing scenes from moving pictures that have been exhibited in public and are accordingly pretty well known to the fans. Contestants, after receiving certain other information, are required to name the picture from which the special scene is taken in each case, to give the name of the principal player and to describe in one sentence the bit of action portrayed in the published scene. A number of prizes are offered to successful contestants.

This strikes one at first as being a difficult competition, since the number of films is so great and one selected scene gives but a small hint of the story itself. Yet it is a remarkable fact that in many instances a hint is sufficient, and in almost every case the still picture gives some satisfactory clue to the identity of the film. Once this is obtained the contestant has a wealth of advertising in most cases to help him getting the rest of the information required.

One's memory is capable of some surprising feats, and there is no accounting for the things it retains and the things it parts with. Thomas Bailey Aldrich wrote the well known lines: "My mind lets go a thousand things, like dates of wars and deaths of kings," going on to tell how in spite of all this he could well remember a day when a gust of wind shook two petals off a certain wild rose tree.

The mind is prone to collect and retain the things it most enjoys and to discard what is displeasing as quickly as possible. It is not always successful in either case; who has not searched in vain for the tag end of a funny story at a propitious moment, and who has not had painful impressions stamped upon his brain that he is unable to forget?

It is fairly wonderful, however, the collection of worthwhile things the mind grasps and holds for its own. A scrap of poetry recalls instantly the poem from which it was taken; a characteristic speech from a novel brings back the book; a few bars from a popular song will set a roomful of people humming. And so it is wth moving pictures—one "still" scene often recalls the film from which it was taken.

It might appear that the habitual picturegoer would come in time to have a confused jumble of all the films he has seen, but this is not the case. Each picture, if it is worth remembering at all, has points of striking dissimilarity from all others. Even where the cost of performers is practically the same, there are still a thousand variations in plot, settings and action to guide the observer. And even where one has seen many hundreds of screen subjects there is seldom a moment's hesitation about whether he has seen a particular one before.

As to how much one still scene will recall and how eagerly the obtainable clews will be followed up by the Evening Mail's contestants remains to be seen. But our guess is that the fans will "come across" in this contest with a good showing of an intelligent appreciation and remembrance of the films.

Exhibitors Drawing the Line

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

SOME of the delicate and difficult problems almost constantly confronting the National Board of Review have been taken up and solved by the exhibitors themselves, though it is doubtful whether they will attempt as a body to settle upon the advisability of showing a certain class of plays pretending to warn audiences of social evil. People are liable to avoid theaters giving prominence to plays on themes openly undesirable, and there is an esthetic objection to stories containing propaganda not largely vital to the hour.

Whatever art may teach on the screen, it must first entertain.

There is no need, however, of going to extremes either way. We weary of the sermon because it is so purely didactic. But we may grow equally weary of plays without a definite and natural purpose, in which the dice are so heavily loaded that the characters lead us to no rational conclusion and leave us in a state of abhorrent vacuum. Then the intelligent exhibitor is not so much concerned with the morality of a play as about the sincerity back of the theme it contains and its artistic presentation.

The loaded dice play is the weakest of all.

The regular formula is for it to present a pretty girl in trouble, abnormally good, outrageously persecuted by the villain, by her family, or by society. This is supposed to arouse sympathy for the dear creature, whereas it has exactly the opposite effect. She is too entirely good to be true, and as soon as the self-confident young "opposite" comes sauntering on the scene, his brushed-back hair shining like a halo and revealing a forehead pure as Alpine snow, all anxiety about the leading lady in distress completely disappears.

That the heroine's enemies shall lick the dust we are assured.

Constant repetition of that wornout tale has reached the limit of human tolerance, yet it is the regular form used to exploit the star on high salary and her little bag of tricks. It is beyond the Board of Review to eliminate lollypop, but exhibitors are beginning to lose patience with this astigmatic view of life, so false to common experience, and an entirely new form of censorship has appeared on the horizon of motion picture production, that of the man who gets his dimes and dollars from what he shows on the screen.

Exhibitors are tired of being fooled.

Read the promises woven like so many golden threads into the fabric of cleverly-designed publicity, and then take a look at the fulfillment, stuff that is bleeding motion picture interest in all parts of the country, while it is explained as due to "the war," like nearly every other evidence of artistic and business incompetency. That little cloud of censorship which has appeared at the edge of our serene sky is but the forerunner of a storm of protest.

It will be a protest against having this young art bled white.

Not only are we hearing from the exhibitor now, but he is making himself felt. He may have been impressed in the past by the magnitude and office magnificence of this or that distributive organization, but he has come to a full realization that these elements have little to do with his box-office receipts—only the product reaches his customers, and on its quality his bread and butter depends.

Shall we go on mewling in our babbling infancy?

The man, or the woman, who engages audience sympathy is not the much-pictured "lead" in this or that loaded-dice drama, but a human creature of faults and mistakes so common to us all, so near to us as to become dear to us, who falters and fails and falls, who may rise, or who may reach some such modest fulfillment of desire and ambition as is doled out to the average human being, who, "after all," gets a ray of happiness like a glimpse of bright sunlight on a gray winter's day. Is it not almost time to replace fortuitous circumstance and sudden great reward in the amateurish stuff we are getting with a more interesting, more complete revelation of the inner nature of men and women whose lives are beautified by their struggle and suffering?

Intensive Advertising

By Epes W. Sargent.

THE press agent of one of the leading companies was recently commenting upon a suburban house in a town of about three thousand. "He sometimes plays to as few as fifteen people," explained this light to fortune, "but Saturday and Sunday he cleans up all expenses and his profit, too." And yet this man is one of the staff of a much self-praised "Service Bureau" that stands ready to do anything for the exhibitor.

According to the same authority, this exhibitor uses a regular advertisement, yet he can draw only fifteen or twenty persons to the mid-week performances. Either there is something radically wrong with the advertising or the wrong sort of program is used. The town is not sufficiently close to a large center to feed its residents to the city theaters. It is largely self-contained, yet he can draw but five persons out of each thousand to the performances given other than Saturday or Sunday.

Even were this an isolated case the matter would call for comment, but there are many other houses in small towns that look to the Saturday and Sunday business to keep them out of the hands of the sheriff. They seem to accept with resignation the theory that they can draw only on the holiday nights and make no effort to get after business through the week, though they pay film rentals and current bills and other expenses "to keep the people in the habit of coming," though so few come.

Not one of these houses is confined to a two-night business. Each of them could play to paying audiences through the week were the advertising campaign properly conducted, but the managements do not know how to advertise properly and apparently make no effort to learn. They take it as the law that they cannot make money through the week, and so they make no real effort to increase their takings. They are content to break even or a little better on the week and bow their necks to the decrees of fate.

The Chinese farmer grows not one but several crops upon his tiny allotment of land. He cannot farm upon a broad scale because the land is crowded. He fertilizes, he rotates his crops, he does everything possible to increase the yield of his patch of ground, and he achieves some surprising results.

The position of the motion picture exhibitor is very similar. He has exhausted the virgin soil of novelty. He can no longer merely open his house, announce pictures and make money. He must do intensive advertising, and this does not merely apply to the more intelligent use of printer's ink. He must make his house attractive. He must suit his film service to the tastes of his patrons. He must cater to their wants rather than to his own ideas of what they should require. In a word, he must both present and represent his wares so attractively that the public cannot resist the appeal of his invitation. If he will do this, he will have no more lonesome little "crowds" of fifteen or twenty. He will at least break even, and have his holiday takings for profits.

Are We Advancing?

By F. H. Richardson.

THE answer to the title of this article is yes, and it is a very decided yes, too. The projection of motion pictures has emerged from its very crude days and is now a trade, demanding of its votaries a very accurate knowledge of electrical action, lens action, mechanics as applied to the projection and a less comprehensive knowledge of several other things.

The projector of today is a marvel of mechanical accuracy in some of its parts, and a rather wonderful and highly creditable production in all its parts. Its factor of safety is very high when one considers the combination of highly inflammable celluloid and intensely hot light ray it is called upon to handle.

The operating room is now indeed deserving of the name. The film is mechanically accurate in its working parts down to one ten-thousandth of an inch. The perfection of our best photography is literally marvelous, and the moving picture theater itself is now, in its best examples, a temple of beauty.

And you, Mr. Operator, in whose hands is placed the very heart of it all—the reproduction upon the screen of the finished product—have also progressed. But have you kept pace with development in other sections of the industry? Ask yourself that question in all seriousness, my brother. Have you bent every energy within you to the perfection of your knowledge of your trade? Do you thoroughly understand your business as an operator? Could you, for instance, successfully pass the Vancouver examination? Are you up to date in your practice? Do you line up your optical system by the application of accurate knowledge or by guess? Do you turn up your nose at books and projection departments and blunder along haphazardly, cursing the "boss" because he does not pay you more, but making no real effort to make yourself worth more? Could you, if given a new theater and projectors, knowing only the length of throw, width of picture and amperage, procure your lenses, set them in place and line up your machine optical train so that you would know with certainty just what the screen result would be, except as to precise width of picture, which cannot be accurately calculated, due to slight variation in E. F. of objection lenses from what they are supposed to be?

If you cannot do this then you lack knowledge; but you may nevertheless have advanced largely from your plane of a few years ago. Let the next few years see the operators of this country advance in learning until they can take their place as a class in the rank which the importance of their trade justly entitles them to occupy.

Women Refuse to Indorse Censorship

At Convention of Federation They Listen to Illustrated Lecture by Dr. Oberholtzer and Decline to Agree With Him.

AT the fourteenth biennial convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, held at Hot Springs, Ark., April 30 to May 8, a brave attempt was made by a small minority to railroad through a resolution in favor of state censorship. This attempt was foiled, however, by the passing of a resolution suggesting that state federations make surveys of motion picture exhibitions in their respective states.

Among those who spoke at the meeting held on Wednesday afternoon, May 8, under the auspices of the Department on Civics were Mrs. Elizabeth Richey Dussez of New York, whose subject was "Motion Pictures as a Constructive Factor in the Community"; Mrs. Sara Elizabeth Edwards of St. Louis, who spoke on the better films movement, through a request made by the National Board of Review; John M. Dean, of the Board of Censors, Memphis, on "Local Regulation"; Mrs. Guy Blanchard of Chicago on "State Censorship"; Mrs. Myra Kingman Miller and Mrs. P. Dunham Foster.

One of the bitterest adversaries of the motion picture cause present proved to be Dr. Ellis P. Oberholtzer, secretary of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, who proceeded to lay every known juvenile crime at the door of the motion picture. To further blacken the character of the screen he produced eight reels of evidence clipped from the several millions of feet of film which has passed by the boards during the past five to six years. These consisted in the main of cuts made in Keystone comedies; "Purity," a Mutual production; "A Daughter of the Gods" (Fox) and "The Wolf Woman" (Triangle). These cuts were exhibited without any attempt to qualify the truth of the impression intended to be conveyed, and without any explanation of their relation to modifying circumstances in the pictures to which they belonged. This exhibition was given as a backer to a scathing verbal attack made by Dr. Oberholtzer on the motion picture and a loud appeal for legalized censorship.

Dr. Oberholtzer was present in the interests of the formation of a congress of state boards of censors and state censorship throughout the country. He was well supported by Mrs. Bessie Leach Priddy, Ph.D., chairman of the conference; Miss Caroline Simpson, State Board of Censors, Kansas City, and Mrs. Guy Blanchard of Chicago.

It is considerably to the credit of those who so ably championed the cause of the motion picture that the resolution in favor of state censorship was suppressed, especially in view of the fact that there now exists no motion picture committee in connection with the federation, the committee which was formed at the last biennial having been disbanded some time ago. The important point made at the conference apart from the actual passing of the resolution for a general survey was that selection rather than censorship is the idea on which the better film worker must concentrate.

Pathe Not Backing United Theaters

Vice-President and General Manager Brunet Denies Rumor of Affiliation with Alleged Co-operative Concern.

REGARDING the publication in an amusement periodical of alleged "rumor" connecting Pathe with the United Picture Theaters, Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe Exchange, has issued the following denial:

A statement from Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, this week sets at rest for all time the rumor linking Pathe and United Picture Theaters.

Mr. Brunet said: "There is absolutely no truth in the published report that Pathe is in any way affiliated with or behind United Picture Theaters of America. Pathe has no connection of any sort whatever with the United concern."

"POP" LUBIN RESUMES ACTIVITIES.

Siegmund Lubin was met in a Philadelphia trolley car by a representative of the Moving Picture World, who was informed that although the old-time manufacturer had resumed an active part in his optical business he also had started to produce features at his Betzwood studios, near Valley Forge. Mr. Lubin had been ill a long time, and since he has regained his health has been actively engaged in his favorite pursuits.

Stage and Screen Unite for Charity

Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, Led by William Fox, Makes Untiring Effort to Lead Rivals in Red Cross Drive

THE greatest "drive" in the history of the world began Saturday afternoon, May 18, with a tremendous street parade, when President Wilson led Red Cross patriots down Fifth avenue. During the five days preceding that event general organization was going on, with the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, captained by William Fox, turning the Subway Central Building, at Broadway, Seventh avenue and Forty-second street, into a busy hive of high-pressure activities.

This team will represent theatricals in Greater New York during the current days, and the efforts put forth are designed to convince the Government that theaters are a necessity and not a non-essential in the conduct of the war. Owing to unsurmountable difficulties there was no national organization to represent the stage and screen, the brief time making it impossible to mobilize the industries outside of Greater New York.

Apart from the efforts that will be made to collect cash and subscriptions for the Red Cross in various theaters hereabouts there will be special entertainments, as listed below, to swell the total that shall go to the credit of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team in the great rivalry to make the best showing among fourteen "teams" that will turn in totals to the "drive" in Greater New York. Here is the list of "specials":

Amusement Program for Allied Team.

Thursday night, May 23, at the Hippodrome, courtesy of Charles B. Dillingham—Entire force of 1,074 actors, singers and attaches of the original cast of "Cheer Up" for the last time in New York. This is to be known as musical comedy night, and the following Broadway stars will augment the regular show: Raymond Hitchcock, Annette Kellermann, Fred Stone, Julia Sanderson, Joseph Cawthorne, Will Rogers, Fannie Bryce, Eddie Cantor and Doyle and Dixon.

Friday night, May 24, at Madison Square Garden—Great patriotic concert, followed by a carnival under auspices of best known sporting men in town. Seven big bouts, all genuine contests; direction of Charles J. Harvey and Joe Humphreys.

Saturday night, May 25—The fashion ball at the Hotel Astor by the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Stars. This will be the gala event of the week. William L. Sherry bid $500 for the first box.

Sunday night, May 26—Dramatic, musical and vaudeville benefit at the Century theater, Sam H. Harris, Directing chairman, at which the following volunteers will appear: Weber and Fields, Clifton Crawford, Doyle and Dixon, George White and Ann Pennington, Harry Fox, Three Dooleys, Billy Van and Ferguson, Six Brown Brothers, Vivian Segal and Carl Randall, Frank Craven, Edith Day, Leo Carillo, Florence Moore, Ray Cox, Will Morrissy, Fay Bainter, Harry Clarke, Janet Velie and chorus in the rose number from "The Kiss Burglar."

Monday night, May 27—Wonderful galaxy of operatic stars in a concert at the Metropolitan Opera House, headed by Enrico Caruso and, in addition, Francis Alda, Claudio Muzzio, Sophie Breslau, Anna Fitzu, Tamika Miutra, Adam Didur, Leon Rotheir, Jose Mardonnes, Pasquale Amato, Andres di Segurola, Ricords Stracciati, Conductors Roberts Moranzoni, Walter Damrosch, Ossip Gabrilowitsch and Richard Hagerman.

On the same evening as the fashion ball at the Astor the Coney Island committee will tender a reception and ball to Brooklyn members of the "Allies," of which William Brandt is the Brooklyn general, at the Hotel Shelburne, Brighton.

Matinee Mobilization of School Children.

Saturday morning there will be a "matinee" mobilization of Greater New York school children at special performances given in every picture theater in the greater city. Eight hundred and fifty thousand children will be urged to attend. The theaters are giving their entire plants and the services of their employees to the cause.

Under the arrangements the attendance of the children will be directed by Assistant Superintendent of Schools William J. O'Shea. The marshaling of the pupils and the handling of the tickets will be in charge of the 22,000 school teachers of the city. The children will in most cases be mobilized in their schools and processions will be headed to the theaters nearest the schools.

In many of the theaters music will add to the gaiety of the occasion, and in some instances members of the higher grades will make five-minute talks to their younger brethren on the meaning of the Red Cross work and the necessity for every child to do his best for the boys who have gone abroad.

Every penny of the money obtained from tickets will be turned over to the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team at Broadway and Forty-second street.

Trade Active for Red Cross

Practical Methods Employed by Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team in Industrial Campaign.

IN view of the fact that the theatrical and motion picture industries are associated in the minds of certain individuals as non-essentials regardless of the fact that the theaters all over the country have formed the chief avenues for the spreading of patriotic propaganda a campaign has been opened for the collection of funds among members of the industry for the second Red Cross War Fund. Herein, as in many other instances, it is hoped to prove that the motion picture industry is a very live and essential factor in the vitals not alone of America, but of the whole world. In fact, never has the theater been a more necessary factor than at the present trying period.

A meeting called at the offices of the National Association in the Times Building, New York, on Thursday, May 16, at the noon hour, was addressed by Frederick H. Elliott, who briefly explained the object of the occasion and the plan where by it is hoped substantially to support the Red Cross as a motion picture unit. The plan is as follows:

It is requested that in each business office of the industry a captain be appointed who will take charge of the obtaining of monthly subscriptions. Each subscriber is supplied with a pledge card on which to write the amount of the pledge, whether it be 50 cents or $5 a month for the period of one year, this amount to be deducted from the monthly salary of individual subscribers and the entire amount of each office's contributions to be mailed in an individual check to the official representative. Further information regarding this movement can be had from the office of the Industrial Campaign of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, in the Times Building, New York.

It is to be hoped that the practical plan by which the smallest gift can be made a part of a substantial unit for the comfort and welfare of our fighting men may be generously responded to throughout the industry.

CAREY WILSON TO AID IN RED CROSS DRIVE.

Carey Wilson, sales manager of the First National Exchange, Inc., has been appointed a member of the committee to arrange the theatrical benefits that will be a prominent feature of the Red Cross drive scheduled for May 20 to 27 in New York. Mr. Wilson was indorsed for this position by the New York Exchange Managers' Association, of which he is a charter member.

KLEINE TO DISTRIBUTE RIALTO DE LUXE.

The record of progress inaugurated by Rialto De Luxe productions with "The Unchastened Woman" is accumulating additional force by the announcement that arrangements have been made by which the George Kleine system will distribute the future productions of this brand throughout the country.

The wide territory covered by the Kleine system assures the Rialto De Luxe productions being seen in a large number of the representative theaters.

The first production to be handled by the Kleine system is "The Unchastened Woman," adapted from Oliver Morosco's stage success of the same name, and it is announced that the future productions released under this brand will be special features with well-known artists and based on successful plays or books.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Closing Hours of Northwest Convention

Many Speeches but Not Much Real Business Mark End of Interesting Session—Exchangemen Entertain.

THE seventh annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest came to a close May 8 with several patriotic speeches and short talks by visiting exhibitors and exchangemen. Following the reading of the results of the balloting for the board of directors the chair introduced Congressman T. D. Schall, of Minnesota, who spoke at length on the exhibitors' duty to the President at this time and told a few facts about the prosecution of the war that brought round after round of applause. Mr. Schall's speech was followed by short talks by Manager C. L. Peavey, of the Paramount exchange; E. R. Pearson, of the Universal-First National exchange; Manager L. H. Coen, of the Metro exchange; Jesse Goldberg, Metro representative from New York; Miss Rose Tapley, representing Paramount; Val B. Valleau, exhibitor from Albert Lea, Minn.; T. E. Hansing, Nokomis, Minneapolis; C. C. Pettijohn, Indianapolis; Joseph Hopp, Chicago, National President Lee A. Ochs, J. E. Sherwood, president of the Wisconsin League, and Frank Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Ind. All of the talks were short and considerable was said in a few words.

President W. H. Deeth.

The real business of the final session was little beyond the debating standpoint. Resolutions presented by S. K. Leen, of the Ruby theater, Jamestown, N. D., asking for better service from exchanges in the matter of paper shipments, the elimination of C. O. D.'s and a clearer understanding of return expressage charges was discussed at length and the main points answered by exchangemen in their short talks during the afternoon. Secretary C. H. Hitchcock's annual report was read and approved.

Treasurer W. H. Deet's annual report was read and approved. The report showed that $370.44 was in the organization's treasury at the time of the convention, that considerable money had been spent during the past year to battle unjust legislation, the music tax and to send delegates to the national convention. It also showed that due to the elimination of exposition booths for this year's convention there was only a little money added to the funds already banked previous to the opening of the convention. Mr. Hitchcock's report showed that there were 172 paid-up members on the records at convention time, that 78 were in arrears and that 32 new members were added during the two days of the convention.

Upon legal advice the by-laws committee withdrew its recommendations for changes in the by-laws, making it possible for members of the organization to elect officers from the floor instead of choosing a board of directors which at its pleasure selected the body's executives.

Convention Sidelights.

Thomas Furniss, of Duluth, "grand old man" of the Northwest branch, announced at the convention that he was to participate in no more convention activities. Mr. Furniss stated that he would continue to be a member of the Northwest body and affiliations, but that he would take no active part in future government of them.

* * *

James G. Gilosky, retiring president, refused to accept the nomination for the board of directors, although a good number of exhibitors rallied to his support.

* * *

Mrs. Mabel E. Brinkman, of the Rex theater, Bemidji, Minn., and Mrs. Henrietta B. Starkey, Star theater, Le Sueur, Minn., were the only women attending the convention. Mrs. Brinkman is one of the oldest members of the organization and Mrs. Starkey has attended every convention for several years.

* * *

C. C. Pettijohn, member of the American Exhibitors' Association, urged the Northwest body to remain loyal to the National league and to send a strong delegation to the Boston convention.

* * *

Representatives of the Affiliated Distributing Corporation, namely, William Brink, Grand Rapids, Mich.; C. C. Pettijohn, Indianapolis; Frank Rembusch, Shelbyville, Ind.; Louis Frank and Joseph Hopp, Chicago, and G. H. Burford, Aurora, Ill., met in Room 208, West Hotel, during convention time and interested a good number of exhibitors in their plan. It is likely that the Affiliated will merge with Tom Hamlin's Associated Theaters exchange here shortly, and if such is the outcome T. Jacobs Hamlin will likely head the local branch.

Lee Ochs, David G. Rodgers and Joseph Schwartzbine, representing the United Picture Theaters organization, were also on the ground during convention days and were able to interest a good number of exhibitors in the United plan.

Abram Altrowitz, moving picture editor of the Minneapolis Daily News, issued a special film men's edition and had five hundred copies distributed at the exchangemen's beefsteak party following the closing of the convention.

the history of Minneapolis at the Gold Room, Hotel Radisson. The party was announced on badges and cards as a beefsteak supper. It turned out more than that and the occasion will be remembered by those present.

Film men of all branches attended. Each wore a butcher's apron and a carnival cap. Boxes served as chairs. Beverages were on tap, and pickles, radishes, celery and confetti were plentiful.

Jazz music, clog dancing and selections by a quartet added much to the enjoyment of the party. S. A. Louis, S. N. Robinson and George Law headed a committee that arranged the party and the exchangemen deserve full credit for putting on something original and staging it exceptionally well.

Impressions of the Northwest Convention

By Sam Spedon.

At the start of the convention there seemed to be an undercurrent of politics preparatory to the election of the board of directors, who are empowered to select the officers for the ensuing year. There was some anxiety that it might manifest itself in a division of the members present and possibly lead to a bolt in the convention. This feeling was brought about by a rumor to that effect, published in a local trade journal.

The charter of the corporation invests the board of directors with power to select the officers, contrary to the wish of some of the members, or stockholders of the corporation, who consider it unfair and believe the officers should be elected by popular vote on the floor of the convention.

There was much spirited discussion on this point, which was finally referred to a corporation attorney, who said the section of the by-laws touching upon the point was in accordance with the state laws, and that the only way to change it was to file another charter with the secretary of state. This was the crucial point on which the rumor of disruption was founded. After this was passed everybody breathed easier and felt encouraged when later it was announced that fourteen new members had joined the organization.

They Deserve Credit.

Much credit is due James Gilosky, the presiding officer, for his governing ability and his evident desire to be fair and the members are to be commended for their disposition to sustain him in his rulings.

Fine Spirit Shown.

While the atmosphere was surcharged with apprehension there was no disposition shown on the part of the convention to be discourteous to the representatives of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation. They were invited to attend its session and at its close they were called upon to address it. It should be said they did not abuse this privilege by airing their personal affairs in any way.

Ochs and Pettijohn.

Lee A. Ochs confined his remarks to an appeal to attend the National convention at Boston in July, where he thought it was likely that the split which was caused by his election at Chicago last year would be healed by the amalgamation of the two bodies. Mr. Pettijohn, who followed Mr. Ochs, said he was a member of the American Exhibitors' Association, but he thought the members of the Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest should attend the National convention at Boston.

"The A. E. A. will not attend, but it is willing to send a delegation of fifteen or twenty men to the National convention if that body sees fit to invite the delegation as its guests, to confer on amalgamation and help it clean house," said Mr. Pettijohn. "If you have a National organization it is your duty to stand by it, and if the A. E. A. decide one big National organization can be rightly governed by exhibitors who are not affiliated with other interests outside their theaters, men without ulterior motives, we will be glad to join and work hard for it."

The Results.

Outside the general business routine of the organization in holding the convention, the benefits of an annual get-together, the discussion of local problems and the rectifying of them, we cannot truthfully say that anything of vital importance was accomplished.

There is one thing we must all recognize, however, in state and national conventions, they stimulate co-operation and keep us in direct touch and interest with the whole industry. We may not accomplish anything vital this year, but we may be called upon next year, or possibly next month, to combat a problem of great importance to us all. It is then we will realize the importance of organization and co-operation. It is then we will need our local, state and national organizations to stand by us to a man and help us face the dangers that so easily beset us.

Stick to Your Organization.

One of the members at the convention was called upon to make a few remarks and he said something. We will try to quote him as near as possible. "I am a new member, of only a few weeks," he said. "I never knew of this Exhibitors' Corporation until a short time ago and I immediately sent in my application. I believe in organization and co-operation. I want to co-operate because I know it will benefit me. Organization reminds me of what an old darkey said. He was asked by his master to snap a fly with his whip from the back of a horse and he did. They came to a tree from which a hornet's nest was hanging. His master asked him if he could snap the nest off the tree. The old darkey said: 'I can, but I won't. Dem fellers is organized.'"

Do you get the point? Organize and stick to your organization and nobody will care to trouble you.

GOLDWYN ENTERTAINS NORTHWEST EXHIBITORS.

The Goldwyn Minneapolis exchange kept open house for Northwestern exhibitors during convention week, which closed May 11. Besides Richard C. Fox, Goldwyn manager, gave 150 exhibitors, many of them accompanied by their wives, a rare treat in the gold room of the Radisson Hotel in the form of a special showing of "Joan of Plattsburg," starring Mabel Normand, "Hearts of the Sunset," "Social Ambition," the Selexart production distributed by Goldwyn, and "Bill's Predicament," the second of "Smiling Bill' Parsons' Capitol Comedies.

To help make all Northwestern exhibitors feel at home during their week's stay in Minneapolis, Fox called in all of his road men to assist him in extending greeting to the visitors. Forty visitors used the Goldwyn office to receive their mail, which they answered through a stenographer engaged for the occasion.

The Goldwyn special showing at the Radisson proved a pronounced success. The visiting showmen were deighted with the program. A splendid musical program was given during the showing, Fox having engaged a six-piece orchestra to enliven the occasion.

Toledo Exhibitors Form Association

It Will Be Affiliated With Commerce Club and Starts Off With Thirty Houses.

FOR the first time the exhibitors of Toledo have organized a genuine business association, which has adopted the name of the Toledo Amusement Association, and is affiliated with the Commerce Club. At the organization meeting the following officers were elected:

J. Pearlstein, of Keith's theater, president; Manager McClelland of the National theater, vice-president; Manager Beck of the Lyric theater, secretary; Manager Klink of the Hippodrome theater, treasurer. The board of directors is composed of Manager Gerstle of Loew's Valentine theater, A. Horwitz, owner of the Colonial, and Attorney C. K. Friedman.

The association's officers will serve for one year. Meetings will be held every two weeks. Already about thirty houses are represented in the membership, and at the next meeting, May 15, plans have been laid to enroll the remaining houses—about ten.

Boston's Cadman Square Has Premier

Dorchester Section's Beautiful 2,000-Seat Picture House Begins With Nazimova in "Revelation."

BOSTON has added another to its fine chain of photoplay houses. The latest addition to the ranks is the Codman Square theater in Codman Square, Dorchester, one of the finest residential sections of the city. The house seats 2,000. It cost over $250,000.

The theater was dedicated with a regular performance on Saturday night, May 11. The feature photoplay was Nazimova in "Revelation." There is a change of bill twice a week. The latter half of the first week, "The House of Glass," Clara Kimball Young's latest photoplay, was featured.

The Codman Square is owned by Patrick Bowen, a hotel and real estate man, and E. A. O'Donnell, a business man. Harry Jones will be the local manager. The architect followed the general designs of the Strand and Rialto of New York City. A subdued lighting system and a heating and ventilating system which are the finest of their kind have been installed.

The theater is an impressive building of limestone, thoroughly fireproof, and containing an elaborate set of five exits. It has a beautiful promenade gallery, large and comfortable rest and smoking rooms, and special attention has been given to the acoustic properties. The stage has been so constructed that it is capable of handling any kind of show.

The theater has been sumptuously fitted and decorated. The color scheme, which is in French gray and gold, makes the Codman Square one of the most attractive houses in the city.

A large organ has been installed. Messrs. Bowen and O'Donnell are watching closely the progress of this new photoplay house, and if it turns out the success they anticipate they expect to erect houses of a similar type in a number of New England cities.

Goldwyn to Double Its Output

For Its Second Releasing Year Company Will Issue Over Fifty Subjects, Including Six Farrar Productions.

IN its second releasing year Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will double the number of its productions from the present basis of twenty-six annually to more than fifty, according to announcement just made from California by Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn.

This step will be good news to thousands of exhibitors and comes in response to exhibitor demands and their support of Goldwyn since the company was organized.

During its second twelve months Goldwyn will release: Geraldine Farrar, six productions; Pauline Frederick, eight productions; Mabel Normand, eight productions; Mae Marsh, eight productions; Madge Kennedy, eight productions; Rex Beach, six productions from the biggest works of this famous author. And six productions with a popular male star, whose name cannot be announced at this time.

"Within a fortnight," says Mr. Goldfish, "Miss Farrar will begin her first Goldwyn production, and it is good news to be able to tell of her association with our company. From the day of her entry on the screen this brilliant artist has been a sensationally successful star, and our plans for her future foretell a doubling of her popularity through the selection of even greater screen stories than she has ever had before.

"Miss Frederick unquestionably ranks as one of our greatest emotional actresses; a beautiful woman of rare charm and constantly increasing popularity, both with the public and exhibitors. Owners of theaters everywhere have had proved to them her great box-office drawing power.

"It gives me great pleasure to witness the successes of Miss Normand, Miss Marsh and Miss Kennedy, three of our stars who have carried us so far forward during our first year as a producing organization.

"Miss Normand has materially increased both her reputation and her popularity since joining Goldwyn through her successes as a dramatic actress. There were persons who doubted the wisdom of having her step outside the fields of comedy for the newer and finer dramatic work she has undertaken, but these doubts vanished instantly and she was at once recognized as a splendid dramatic actress.

"Miss Marsh is today a greater favorite than ever before in her career. She has more than justified all of the predictions we made for her.

"The faith we had in Madge Kennedy even before her first picture was completed has been amply borne out. She was an instantaneous success on the screen.

"Heretofore, as is generally known, there has been usually but one Rex Beach production annually. Every production ever made from one of his famous stories has made money for exhibitors. Goldwyn is assured of six Rex Beach productions in a single year.

"I am not yet ready to announce by name the popular male personality to be starred by Goldwyn, but I am assured in advance of his great popularity with the American public.

"In June we shall announce our marketing or releasing plans and policies for the coming twelve months. The step we have taken in doubling our production output was foreseen from the beginning of our company's career. With twenty-six productions we first wished to build an organization and develop its capacities and facilities. We did not intend to be hurried into the making of machine-made pictures. We wished to test out our sales and distributing organization and also we desired to girdle the civilized globe with our sales offices and alliances.

"In all of these things we have succeeded. While we have built a powerful and able corporate organization we shun the coldness associated with a corporate existence. We have built a loyal, human, hard-working business family and drawn about us people of sympathy and affection. As humans we have made our errors and mistakes, but we have achieved much and have effected a permanent institution that will continue to improve its already advantageous position in the industry.

"Doubling of our production output does not mean any lessening of our interest in distributing independently made pictures. We have had splendid success with our independent productions. Goldwyn Distributing Corporation keeps 'open house' for the makers of all worthy pictures. We desire to distribute still more productions. Any producer of a good picture or series of pictures can avail himself of our excellent facilities now and at all times."

Illinois Holds State Convention

State Officers and Executive Committee and Delegates and Alternates to Boston Convention Elected.

THE annual Illinois state convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held in Hall 210, Masonic Temple, Chicago, Tuesday, May 14. I was much surprised to find that only one exhibitor from downstate was present, namely, W. W. Watts, treasurer of the state organization from Springfield. G. M. Luttrell, of Jacksonville, the state president, was absent, and so was William Bradley, of Ottawa, first vice-president. Dee Robinson, of Peoria, and Charles J. Law, of Pana, both members of the state executive committee, were also absent, so that the gathering was practically local in make-up.

In my mind there is no doubt that this lack of interest in the state meeting is due to the steam-roller politics practiced at the last national convention here, as no body of independent Americans will long submit to be treated as puppets to carry out the plans of a few politicians.

In the absence of Messrs. Luttrell and Bradley, Second Vice-President Andrew Karzas, owner of the new Woodlawn theater, Chicago, called the meeting to order. After asking that he be relieved of the duty Fred W. Hartmann took the chair, on motion of Robert R. Levy.

A motion was then made and carried that a committee be appointed to recommend a slate of officers for the state organization and that another committee be named to recommend a list of delegates and alternates to the national convention at Boston in the coming July.

Joseph Hopp objected to this method of selection in a forceful speech, holding that all matters of elections should be made by nominations from the floor, instead of by a committee in star chamber session. He confessed that he himself had been a party to such practices in the past, but that the great world strife in which our country is now engaged for the sole purpose of making the world safe for democracy had awakened him to the sense of being more democratic than heretofore.

"I am sincere in this matter," he said in his closing paragraph. "I have reached that state of life where along this line I appreciate my shortcomings in the past and henceforth shall oppose in organizations of this kind any effort to stifle the voice of any member. I am not a candidate for any office; I seek no preferment at your hands; I have no candidate to suggest, hence I speak from an unselfish standpoint and as a free agent. Let us be through with this mockery and nominate and elect those you may desire through nominations from the floor."

His speech created considerable feeling and a heated debate, after which a motion to adopt the slate method was carried by vote.

The following state officers were then named and elected: President, G. M. Luttrell, Jacksonville; first vice-president, William Bradley, Ottawa; second vice-president, A. Karzas; treasurer, William J. Sweeney (succeeding W. W. Watts), and secretary, Sidney Smith, all of Chicago.

State executive committee: Charles J. Law, Pana; Dee Robinson, Peoria; Paul Sittner, Robert R. Levy and Henry Von Meeteren, Chicago; W. D. Burford, Aurora, and E. Kunz, Springfield.

Following are the delegates to the national convention: G. M. Luttrell, Jacksonville; W. W. Watts, Springfield; Fred W. Hartmann, Sam Katz, I. E. Berkson, William E. Heaney, R. R. Levy, Walter Johnson, P. J. Schaefer, Ludwig Schindler, Alfred Hamburger, William J. Sweeney, John Frundt, Sidney Smith and Harry C. Miller, all of Chicago.

Following are the alternates: Dee Robinson, Peoria; W. D. Burford, Aurora; Dr. Atkinson, Evanston; William Cadoret, Kankakee; George D. Hopkinson, L. Siegel, Rocco Navigato, William Rohe, Joseph Trinz, Paul Sittner, Charles Abrams, G. M. Laing, R. L. Jacoby, Louis Zahler and Andrew Karzas, all of Chicago. J. S. McQ.

UNIVERSAL PLAYERS CONTRACTS EXPIRE.

The contracts of three players heretofore in the employ of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company expired during the past week and were not renewed. The players who now are free agents are Ella Hall, Franklyn Farnum and Emory Johnson. The names of several well known screen actresses are under consideration to fill the place made vacant by the failure to renew the Hall contract, and it is probable that Universal will have an important announcement along these lines in the near future.

As a result of the departure of Miss Hall another star combination is broken up. Ralph Graves, who was signed by Universal recently, will be seen with Priscilla Dean.

Shipman Completes Large Plans

Will Release Fifty-two Subjects a Year and Aims to Keep in Close Touch With His Clients.

ERNEST SHIPMAN, whose announcement appeared in our last issue to the effect that he practically had completed plans for releasing fifty-two pictures a year, is well known in the film industry, with which he has been connected for several years. Prior to that time he had established a reputation as an advertising expert and theatrical manager, having made two trips around the world with theatrical attractions.

Not only is Mr. Shipman in charge of the distribution of the product of independent producers, but he is also acting in an advisory capacity in connection with the actual manufacture of some of the pictures. He states it is his aim not only to see that the productions are timely, but, by ascertaining what his competitors are working on, to obviate needless competition which would result from simultaneous production of stories of the same type and theme.

Ernest Shipman.

In furtherance of the idea of satisfying exhibitors Mr. Shipman has adopted the plan of getting in touch with a number of the leading exhibitors explaining the type of story under contemplation and requesting their opinions, and then being governed accordingly. In this connection he states as worthy of remark that in each instance 70 per cent. or more of the exhibitors are practically in accord, though not always agreeing with his ideas.

One of the subjects now being prepared for production and designed to cement more closely the friendly relations between this country and Japan is a thrilling story of the Japanese samurai, in which the principal role will be enacted by a well known actor who has gained an enviable reputation by his portrayal of Japanese characters.

In speaking of his success in disposing of territory on the various productions he is marketing Mr. Shipman attributes it in no small degree to his method of handling film productions along the same line as other merchandise and his practice of establishing a fixed price for each production which is distributed among the various territories on an equitable percentage basis. In furtherance of this idea he has prepared printed price lists for the benefit of state right buyers which show the exact price for each territory.

Universal Photographs Start of Air Mail

Has Eleven Cameramen on the Route Between Belmont Park and Washington.

JACK COHN, manager of the Universal Animated Weekly department, claims to have obtained such splendid pictures of the opening of the aeroplane mail service between Washington and New York on May 16 that the pictures may practically be considered as exclusive.

No less than eleven motion picture photographers were used by Universal to cover the historic event. Representatives of Universal were stationed not only at Belmont Park, Long Island, and Potomac Park, Washington, the respective starting places of the aviators carrying the mail bags, and at Bustleton, just outside of Philadelphia, the midway stop, but at numerous places along the route taken between Washington and New York by the aviators.

In taking the precaution of stationing cameramen at intervals along the route Universal was fortunate enough to get pictures of Lieut. George L. Boyle when the aviator was forced to make a landing at Waldorf, Md.

All of the film of the flight taken was rushed to the Universal laboratories, and within forty-eight hours positive prints were being shipped to all Universal branches.

St. Louis Snoopers Are Ousted

Censorship Is Dead in Fourth City and Bluecoats Are Back on Their Beats Hunting Less Interesting Prey

AFTER five years of desperate fighting during which time the freedom of the film was seriously jeopardized, the demon "censorship" in its popular guise has been slaughtered in the fourth city by a possee comitatus composed of the very best element of the city of St. Louis. At present writing the octopus of individual snooping lies prone upon its stomach with but a few lame kicks left.

Exhibitors have noticed during the last few weeks the dying gasps of censorship. Five years ago a set of busybodies, who constituted themselves guardians of public morals and private liberties, set out in St. Louis under the banner of so-called propriety, and within a few weeks made themselves so ubiquitous that no film or theatrical performance was safe in its investment.

Not satisfied with the private influences which were brought to bear on the motion picture exhibitor, the Police Department under Chief William Young appointed a regularly formed morality squad composed of six or eight policemen, who, for some reason or other the chief decided had suddenly been endowed with sufficient discretionary judgment to tell an intelligent public just what it should and should not see or hear.

So the "Morality squad," as it was called, started on its quest of prey. One by one the wise minions of the law visited the theaters more boldly advertising catchy titles, and one by one the theaters were entered and the offerings scrutinized.

While this "official" form of snooping was going on, a set of unauthorized individuals who came into unusually keen judgment just about the time the policemen were so endowed also swooped down upon the exhibitors and theatrical man. A gentleman by the name of E. V. P. Schneiderhahn, an attorney by profession, and representing what was called at the time as the Federation of Catholic Societies, took up the cause for the unofficial snoopers.

Within a few months there were docketed in court a number of "violations" of the law governing "obscenity," and exhibitors and exchange managers alike worried.

Court Threw Out Many Cases.

The cases came up. In some instances the court, having viewed the exhibition in question himself, threw out the cases without ceremony. In others he listened for a time and then nolle-prossed them. In others change of venue was taken and some, I believe, are of record as still standing—with the film in question reposing in the ashheap of has-beens.

The court found that it couldn't tell from the testimony of the Morality Squad whether the picture was educational or lascivious, scenic or obscene. The self-appointed guardians themselves failed to agree and case after case went from the ridiculous to the absurd.

Then the Morality Squad—composed as I have indicated by policemen and dictating in some instances to very highly intelligent and educated men—was clothed with the power to "order changes." This was the last straw. The motion picture trade and the theatrical interests informed the Morality gentlemen that a court would estop them if they tried that form of Russianism. It was tried once or twice and proved a fizzle.

With every defeat of the Morality Squad there was a concomitant loss for the self-appointed guardians of private morals and liberties until, vanquished at home, they sought redress in the State Legislature.

It is of record in Missouri that the Legislative session of 1917 saw a crowd of self-constituted snoopers at Jefferson City—I had the pleasure and amusement of seeing them there—who did not know just what kind of a law they wanted. They had no basic principles upon which to work. They had neither zenith nor nadir in their conceptions of propriety. Ephemerists and theorists, they argued before a body of legislators for the passage of an indefinite measure as to morals, but a very definite measure as to purpose—what these censors wanted was a state statue which would simply give them the right to say what they wanted to say about any picture and have their say "go."

Be it said to the credit of the Missouri Legislators, the lawmakers couldn't see them. Snooping and censoring got a distinctive oral discoloring at the hand of the Legislature.

Snoopers Stub Their Toes on "Birth of a Nation."

It was about this time that the "Birth of a Nation" appeared in Missouri. The snoopers appeared and filed their complaints. The case was called and the snoopers and dramatic critics called. The snoopers declared that the scene in which Miss Mae Marsh was chased over a precipice was outrageous, and declared that the negro mob scenes were conducive to laxity in morals and productive of mental debauchery. The court listened.

Then well-known private citizens were called, dramatic critics entered and all were in accord that the censors were about as far off as usual. The "Birth" went on as usual.

Shortly after this the self-styled guardians visited the Shubert and Klaw & Erlanger houses, made Al Jolson's girls don fleshlings and put kilts or panties on Ned Reyburn's dolls. The runway came into distinction through their objections—with the inevitable result that the shows declared "risque" were packed.

Cops Watched Pictures, Indecent Burlesquers Thrived.

It may be remarked here that while the snoopers were visiting legitimate pictures, trying to have a part of Annette Kellermann's "Neptune's Daughter" cut out, and attempting to eliminate some of the mermaids from a celebrated water-scene movie, there were operating in St. Louis two burlesque houses that defied both law and order, decency and propriety—but which—and I can prove it—received absolutely no attention from the gentlemen who were "cleaning up"—no, not even from the "Morality Squad."

The last six months brought things to a head.

The Morality Squad was split up and some of its members transferred. The individual snoopers' organization virtually disbanded with the defeat of a measure introduced in the Board of Aldermen and calculated to give them broad powers in censorship. And the next step was to have the "cop on the beat" give every show the onceover!

That was the straw that broke the camel's back.

It was the Charybdis upon which Censorship in St. Louis floundered.

About three weeks ago four pickpockets operated on a wholesale scale in the foyer of a motion picture house and within 10 feet of three policemen and a sergeant who sat in the back row watching the picture then being screened!

A few nights later two automobiles were stolen from in front of a motion picture house while the policeman on the beat was giving his "discretionary" onceover to the film.

And it was a noticeable fact that robberies grew in the neighborhood of the movie houses—especially the large ones.

Then the bubble burst.

Chief Young, acting on orders of the Police Board this week, sent out written orders to every captain in the city to keep the 2,000 policemen of the Fourth City out of the motion picture theaters, to cut out the so-called discretionary prerogatives of the bluecoats and to send them back to the street corners and areaways to look for robbers.

This is the story of misguided censorship in St. Louis which, I may say, is indicative of the spirit and the method behind all forms of self constituted snooping.

The thing was wrecked on its own reefs here.

And meanwhile the Exhibitors' League, led by William Sievers, manager of the New Grand Central, instituted a voluntary censorship over its own showings, that placed a ban on children in theaters for certain productions—the only form of censorship which has met with popular approval in St. Louis and the only censorship that now has a leg to stand on.

LOCKWOOD COMPANY MOVES TO NEW QUARTERS.

The Yorke-Metro Company, which produces the Harold Lockwood features for the Metro, has moved its base of operations from Metro's West Coast studios, where it occupied space since its arrival from the East, to a plant of its own at 1329 Gordon street, Hollywood, Cal. Prior to the company's occupancy extensive alterations and additions were made in the plant and in its equipment to increase production facilities. The first picture the Lockwood company will put on in its new home will be "A King in Khaki," a romantic drama, based on Henry Kitchell Webster's novel of that name.

Conditions as Seen in the Northwest

By Sam Spedon.

After the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest we stayed in Minneapolis and St. Paul five days to size up the territory of the Twin Cities. We learned that there are 93 theaters in all in both places as against 160 two years ago; 61 in Minneapolis and 32 in St. Paul. We succeeded in visiting about two-thirds of these and in many instances meeting the owners or managers. All in all, the houses are quite sizable and well appointed. In Minneapolis there are several of them beautiful. Those in some of the suburbs or neighborhood localities are beautiful and built on modern lines of architecture. There are a few such in the city itself, but most of them are of the ordinary type, although well managed and maintained. In St. Paul the same conditions exist, but most of the larger and more attractive theaters are in the city's center. We were glad to meet Theodore Hays, manager of the Garrick, one of the largest theaters in St. Paul. Mr. Hays is probably the pioneer exhibitor of the Northwest, one of the most progressive and one of the most capable showmen. He is second to no one in business. We were particularly impressed with the Lagoon and Calhoun, two residential Minneapolis theaters, recently built.

Messrs. Ruben and Finkelstein control about fifteen theaters in the Twin Cities. Many exhibitors control two or three houses, so the individual owners are not so numerous in these two cities, comprising in all about 700,000 inhabitants.

As near as we could learn, from a consensus of opinion, the city theaters are doing a good business, but the adjoining territory is only fair. Some of the exhibitors are somewhat pessimistic about summer patronage and predict a general falling off on account of the draft and war demands generally. In some smaller towns in the Northwest they are already talking about closing during the next three months.

Exhibitors Have Grievances.

We heard considerable complaint among the exhibitors about the excessive overhead in maintaining the exchanges at the expense of the exhibitors. They have become obsessed, as well as some of the manufacturers, with the question of waste and the remedy for it. And now that the co-operative booking plans have advanced new ideas and theories they have centered on them as the panacea and are more or less convinced that present methods of distribution and production are all wrong and a more equitable business basis will be arrived at in the near future.

A Slam at the Home Office.

The question of contracts made by branch managers and then referred to the home office in New York is considered an injustice and evil which should be remedied. The exhibitor claims that an authorized representative of any business concern should be empowered to act authoritatively for the concern and it should stand by the manager's agreement as to price and not change it after the exhibitor has agreed in good faith to book the attraction. Such proceedings put the exhibitor to much hardship when he has, very often advertised or announced to his patrons that he will show the feature at his theater.

Exchanges.

In Minneapolis there are thirty-five exchanges all maintaining well equipped and attractive offices. We called on most of them. They accorded us a hearty welcome. One thing was very noticeable among the exhibitors and exchangemen. That was the friendly feeling which exists between them. Notwithstanding the many grievances that prevail on questions of business, they bear no animosity personally and the best of feeling is manifested in all their associations with each other. Some of the exchanges are doing very well. Others, on account of changes in business management, we presume, are not getting their usual quota of business.

Considering conditions in this immediate northwestern territory, we are of the opinion that they are not as prosperous as they are in most parts of the East and West.

An Acknowledgment.

We want to acknowledge the extreme courtesy shown the World's representative by Newton Davis of the Universal, who tendered the use of his car in getting around the Twin Cities. And likewise to George W. Malone of the Mutual for aiding us in arranging our itinerary; also to Dan Donnellan of the same exchange.

An Exchangeman's Opinion.

Here is an interview with E. R. Pearson, one of the leading exchange managers of Minneapolis. "Of the territory immediately contingent to Minneapolis our records show 650 towns and 980 theaters. Over 500 of those towns are under 2,000 population. Only about 10 towns exceed 10,000 population. Many of the towns having more than one show, all of them are controlled by one exhibitor. This, with above figures, proves conclusively that competition between exhibitors for film exists in less than 30 per cent. of this territory's localities.

"Conditions from the profit standpoint to exhibitors seem to be comfortable. Of course, 70 per cent. being practically free from competition on the buying end, certainly do not overpay for this service, and if they permit their patron's interest in pictures to become languid it is their own fault.

"I might mention one other fact, the gross rentals for all current events and weeklies in the Chicago territory averages fully $3 a theater for the whole territory, whereas in the Minneapolis territory averages $1 a theater for all weeklies.

"Now I consider it a patriotic privilege to encourage showing of weeklies, especially since at the prevailing rental prices such films could not possibly be profitable for either the exchange or the producer; hence I cannot be accused of any ulterior motive. My methods of setting prices on a film subject are always in the ratio that such subjects' box-office value and cost bears to a locality's conditions and urban population. Thus the price becomes exactly fair to the small town in proportion to the large one and vice versa. If it is a good buy for one exhibitor it becomes proportionately just as good a buy for another. Besides, we always guarantee value received. We cannot afford to accept money any other way. Every exhibitor buys service not once, but from fifty to one hundred times a year and becomes less and less cautious toward the exchange that always gives him a square deal."

Madge Kennedy Signs Longer Contract

Goldwyn Announces Actress Has Placed Signature to Agreement Covering Years Ahead.

MADGE KENNEDY is the latest Goldwyn star to sign a new and still longer-term contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, under whose name and auspices she made her successful debut in motion pictures. Miss Kennedy's original contract with Goldwyn still had a long time to run, but so great has been her success and so enthusiastic is Goldwyn about her screen future that the company wished to get the comedienne to cast her lot with it for years ahead. This she consented to do.

This announcement definitely puts an end to the rumor about Miss Kennedy's return to the stage as a star under David Belasco's management. Since her entry into pictures last spring Miss Kennedy has scored successes in "Baby Mine," from Margaret Mayo's big stage success; in "Nearly Married," from Edgar Selwyn's long run New York stage success; in "Our Little Wife," an Avery Hopwood stage hit, and in "The Danger Game," a melodramatic comedy written for her by Roy Somerville. Next week she will be seen in "The Fair Pretender," another melodramatic comedy, built around the great American game of bluff, by Florence C. Bolles. Meanwhile she has completed a screen version of George Weston's story, "Oh, Mary, Be Careful," for release some time in the early summer. Her next picture to follow "The Fair Pretender" will be "The Service Star," which Willard Mack, Goldwyn's scenario editor, poetically calls "the flag of all mothers."

ARCHITECTS TO SEE NAVY FILMS.

The first private showing of the Educational Film Corporation's new four-reel naval picture, "Your Fighting Navy at Work and at Play," will be given in the clubrooms of the Architectural League of America, in West Fifty-seventh street, New York, on Thursday evening, May 30. It will be an invitation affair, limited to the members and their friends—a sort of navy night, in which the architects who are keenly interested in naval construction will be addressed by Henry B. Culver on "Ships' Models," and by Lieutenant Henry Reuterdahl, U. S. N., on "The Fighting Navy."

The making of prints of "Your Fighting Navy" has started at the laboratories. In anticipation of extraordinary demand the first order calls for fifty positives for the United States alone. At least a week's run at a leading Broadway theater will precede the general release, which is scheduled for about the middle of June.

Richardson Home After Five Weeks' Trip

Looks Over Theaters in Missouri, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio—Talks to Fort Wayne Men—Visits Westinghouse Plant

HANNIBAL, MISSOURI.

HANNIBAL is one of those rather sleepy but substantial and quite wealthy Missouri cities. It nestles beside the Father of Waters' muddy tide about one hundred miles above St. Louis. It was the boyhood home of Mark Twain and the house where he lived for many years is still "pointed to with pride," though the Huckleberry Finn house has been torn down. Hannibal has a population of about 25,000, but only three motion picture theaters; two of them owned and managed by one man, J. D. Price, whom I did not have the privilege of meeting personally, but who, I was told by his lieutenant, claims that "too much competition" forced him to reduce the admission to one of his theaters to five cents. Sorry, friend Price, but I am unable to see how or why one competing theater could do that, and if it is true, then I would say that two theaters are sufficient for Hannibal. This thing of giving the public a program the production of which cost thousands and maybe tens of thousands of dollars for five cents does not appeal to yours truly as having proper proportion. I was all the more surprised at Mr. Price's action in this regard when I found his Star theater, the one I visited, presenting evidence of live, up-to-date management. I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Price's capable votes-for-ladies assistant.

The Star theater, one of the Price houses, seats 900; admission 11 and 17 cents—higher on special days. The auditorium is prettily decorated and is quite cozy. The interior lighting, while susceptible of improvement as to the clock and orchestra lights, is not at all bad. The screen is set in black, but the black does not come in to meet the picture at the top and the sides, as it should; also there is no black at all at the bottom. This is bad, because, unless there is black right up to the picture at top, sides and bottom there is not that sharp contrast which "sets the picture off." In fact, it is best to let the picture extend over on the black by one or two inches, but not more than that. The picture light was brilliant and well handled.

M. S. Justice is operator. He has but recently taken a position at the Star, and is getting things into shape in the projection room. He is sadly hampered in his work by that abomination, a fixed schedule. The day of my visit there was not sufficient film footage to fill the allotted time, hence the projection was necessarily dragged, with rather absurd action in certain parts. There was also, of course, some flicker. That there was not more was due to what must have been an intelligently planned revolving shutter. The Star projection room is practically on a level with the screen. It is of fair size, and there is a vent flue of ample size, with exhaust fan therein, all of which is excellent. There are two General Electric mercury arc rectifiers in the projection room, the light from their unpainted tubes flooding everything. These are soon to be displaced by a transverter; also the projection room walls are to be painted black. Good!

Friend Justice has invented a clever changeover signal, which device he is hereby invited to describe in the Propection Department for the benefit of fellow operators. Justice is, I think, a very competent man. The Star box office scenery certainly does like popcorn, and when it comes to ice cream she just simply eats 'em alive.

Departure of Men for Camp Affects Patronage.

The Park theater, a thousand-seat house, charging 5 and 10 cents some days, 10 and 20 other days, and still higher when special big features are booked, is owned and managed by Thomas A. Rigler, who wants what he wants when he wants it; also he usually gets what he wants when he wants it, so I am told, if it be at all obtainable. If friend Rigler sees a nice ripe plum hanging from a high limb he waits not for it to fall and be squashed or grabbed by some one else. No, no. He grabs a pole, hands Mr. Plum a wallop and graps it as it drops, thus assisting nature, as it were.

The Park had not opened for the day when I was there, hence I cannot vouch for screen results. I gathered from neighbor Rigler's remarks, however, that he had recently let a progressive, up-to-date operator go, employing in his stead one who, while a competent electrician, is not an operator. With all due respect to Manager Rigler he has, I think, made a grave error in this matter; also one which will not tend to boost box office receipts. A good operator must be a pretty good electrician, but it does not at all follow that a good electrician is anything even faintly resembling a good operator. In other words, while electrical knowledge is a necessary part of the education of a competent operator, it is one part only. There are several other equally important branches of knowledge necessary before one can lay just claim to the title operator.

Manager Rigler says business has been rather poor, due to the enlistment of 600 of Hannibal's young men, which, so Mr. Rigler says, means the loss of about 2,000 admissions to Hannibal theaters every week. This estimate he bases on an average of two admissions each person a week, which, of course, usually includes an admission for the young woman who accompanies the youth. This estimate may be a little high, but undoubtedly it is responsible for at least a goodly portion of the loss. Business is, however, slowly improving again, and will, Mr. Rigler thinks, soon be restored to normal. Manager Rigler greeted me most cordially, and it was with regret we hurried away to attend to other matters.

QUINCY, ILLINOIS.

I STOPPED in Quincy from 6 p. m. to 7 a. m., but was too weary to do more than pay hurried calls at a few of the theaters. I clambered into the straw the previous night at St. Louis at 2.30 a. m., only to roll out again at 6 a. m., to travel 150 miles in the stuffy day coach of a local train. Therefore, I confined my efforts to taking dinner with P. F. Felt and his daughter, Lulu, the latter a musician of large local reputation, and to visiting the Quincy, Gem and Princess theaters. At the first named I found Manager J. J. O'Neil busy taking up a collection of tickets from incoming patrons. His son, William, was projecting what was, at least at the moment, a well-illuminated picture. The Quincy is of the storeroom type, seating 250. All I saw of it was from the entrance.

Pinkleman to Build 1,000-Seat House.

P. E. Pinkleman is the "big man" in Quincy motion picture affairs. He owns the Princess, Savoy, Gem and Family theaters, management of which he supervises, and is contemplating the erection of a 1,000-seat theater as soon as conditions again settle down to normal. Mr. Pinkleman is an enthusiast; also he is eager for knowledge which will aid him to improve his theaters. That is merely one way of saying that he is a progressive theater man. "The Projection Department of the Moving Picture World is our guide in all matters pertaining to projection," he says.

Quincy is a wealthy city, and a conservative one. Its population is about 36,000, and it has nine theaters, all of which use a good grade of film service, so I am told; also such of them as I saw were putting on at least fairly good projection, that of the Princess being brilliantly illuminated. I was too tired to visit operating rooms or to watch projection, especially in view of the fact that at 7.30 a. m. I must again be in a stuffy day coach, with a strenuous day before me. That meant get up at 6 o'clock. Mr. Pinkleman was disappointed in that I could not address the Quincy men, but there is a limit to physical endurance.

FORT WAYNE, INDIANA.

DUE to misunderstanding as to exact time of my arrival in Fort Wayne, the reception which had been planned went "blooey," because I beat 'em to it. Fort Wayne is distinctly a manufacturing city, with a population of 80,000. Having established a rather unhappy home in the city's best, which, however, isn't really the best, Home of the Wanderer, I called up the Strand theater, but could not get into touch with either its manager or operator, the latter being secretary of the Fort Wayne operators' union. But I left word of my arrival and soon Manager Quimby of the Strand put in an appearance and said: "Hello, Rich! Saw you in New York three years ago; how are you? Got a machine downstairs that can do eighty miles per! C'm on; let's get some air!" And before I could get the last syllable of my "All right" pronounced we were in the car. Some hustler is friend Quimby. He owns the Strand and Jefferson, two of Fort Wayne's best.

I visited the Jefferson and Strand that evening under Mr. Quimby's guidance. I did not make notes as we passed through the Strand, for which I am sorry, because I did not get back to it as I had planned. The Jefferson, of which Alexander McCabe is house manager, has a lobby different from any I have viewed to date. Mr. Quimby seems to have solved the problem of securing revenue from the sale of advertising to merchants in a way which is unobjectionable, or very nearly so. The entrance lobby is 20 feet wide by 120 feet long, and Mr. Quimby has installed therein large glass display cases, set against the wall on each side which he rents to drygoods, millinery and other merchants for the display of their wares. A not-too-large decorative card in each case announces the name and address of the firm advertising. So far as I can see the plan has no objection, except possible congestion of the lobby in rush hours.

Jefferson Auditorium Imposing.

The Jefferson auditorium is imposing and pretty. It has a seating capacity of 1,400. A wide, rather flat-arched ceiling covers a space 68 feet wide by 150 long. The decorative scheme of the interior is in fawn and old rose. The picture is projected on a mirror screen 18 feet wide—probably the largest screen friend Rembusch ever made. A specially constructed railway car was necessary to transport it from the factory in Shelbyville, Ill., to Fort Wayne. Mr. Quimby likes the screen very well. The auditorium lighting could be improved in so far as applies to the clock and orchestra lights, though neither is what could be termed bad.

The projecting room is 12 by 40 feet, but only has a 7.5-foot ceiling. This latter fault is minimized by the fact that in the ceiling are five vent flues, with forced draught ventilation. If I remember correctly, the inlet is at the ceiling line, which is not good, because the air will enter, rush along the ceiling and out again. If I am right about this, I would advise that the fresh air inlet be carried down to the floorline and along the rear wall, with graduated openings, about three of them, to admit fresh air to all parts of the room. This may seem to Manager Quimby like a small detail, but I can assure him it is of great importance to the comfort and health of his operators. There is a Fort Wayne motor generator set, 100 ampere capacity, its controls and ammeter and voltmeters being located on the front wall between the projectors. The ports are of goodly size—an important item, indeed. The projection light was brilliant and of pure tone; also the projection speed was correct. Taken altogether the Jefferson is an up-to-date theater, which would be a credit to any city. Projection is in charge of Brother Foreman, secretary of Fort Wayne Local Union No. 466, M. P. M. O.

After inspecting the Jefferson Mr. Quimby took me for a spin in his machine, and believe me that car only touches the highest spots when he opens 'er up. Pitch dark, a sprinkle of rain and 55 miles an hour. That's all! By day the scenery would look like a photoplay projected at approved east side speed when brother Quimby steps on 'er.

Later E. A. Krans, president; E. J. (Baldy) Kirk, vice-president; G. A. Loucks, business agent, and L. A. Bertschi, trustee Local Union 466, I. A., came to our hotel room and informed the writer he was not due in bed until cock's crow.

Finds Faulty Operating Rooms.

And just at this point let me intersperse a few remarks as to conditions in Fort Wayne. I visited the Strand, Jefferson, Transfer, Grand, Colonial, Lyric and Orpheum theaters. All theaters in the city use a.c. supply, rectified by means of Fort Wayne motor-generator sets. Some of the theaters are large, commodious and excellent, with up-to-date appointments and equipment, but the majority (there are 14 all told) leave something to be desired. Some of the projection rooms can be called that only by courtesy; also most of the projection rooms are ventilated by means of windows opening directly on the street. This latter is bad in several ways. Not only does it flood the projection room with light at matinees, making it very difficult, if not impossible for the operator to have that clear, sharp view of his screen he must have in order to do the best possible work, but it constantly sets up the temptation for him to rubber at the passing show, with consequent neglect of his own.

In proof of this half an hour or so after I had visited the Grand I passed by on the sidewalk and saw the operator sitting in a chair in front of the window, his legs crossed, his chin in his hand, apparently dreaming. In view of this I am certain that the criticism sent in not long ago concerning projection in this theater (which said the operator seemed to be asleep, as the picture was out of frame much of the time) was justified, and if it is, that big, open window is the probable seat of the trouble. These windows should be closed up tight, and fresh air, in ample quantity, brought in through a light-tight duct. This would not be so nice for the operator, but it would be very much better for the screen result. I am sorry to criticize the Strand brother thus sharply, but facts are facts, and there can be no possible excuse for an operator sitting with his back to his machines and his screen while an uncontrolled, inanimate motor reproduces the art of high-class artists on the screen. The operator is not employed to watch the passing crowd. He is there to watch his work, and unless he does exactly that the work will inevitably suffer.

By and large Fort Wayne projection rooms are distinctly below the average, and the further fact that in some of the houses auditorium lighting needs attention, and needs it badly, makes it to the credit of Fort Wayne operators that screen results are as good as they are.

The Transfer theater is owned and managed by D. S. Vesey, who, by the way, has the reputation of being one of Indiana's best attorneys. It is of the storeroom type and seats 319. Auditorium lighting is good, except for the piano and exit lights. I showed friend Vesey how to remedy this fault, and he said the matter would be attended to immediately. Screen illumination and projection speed were excellent. C. O. Smith is the operator. The projection room is small and there is a lot of light therein. One Simplex and one Power's 6B are used.

How Auditorium Clocks Should Be Illuminated.

At the Grand I found my old friend Mr. Clock planked right up against the screen at the left of the picture, its white face brilliantly illuminated, its woodwork also illuminated, and light reflected to considerable of the nearby wall. When! Oh when! will theater managers come to realize the utter foolishness and entire uselessness of placing their entire screen result into direct competition with a wrongly illuminated clock? Once again, for the 'steenth time, I will tell you how to illuminate your clock. Go to a photographer and get some of the black paper in which his large negatives are wrapped. Cut a circle of this black paper the exact size of the face of your clock and make a hole in its center for the hand post. Have a sign painter paint, in proper position, the roman numerals from I to XII in WHITE. Now slip the paper under the hands, either by removing them, or slitting the paper from center hole to edge, or by making the center hole one inch in diameter and slipping the hands through the hole when they come together, as they do once every hour. Next place several small spots of liquid glue on the clock face and press the paper face down over the original face, to which the glue will hold it. You now have a black clock face with white figures. Next cut false clock hands from thin white cardboard, white oilcloth or white paper, making them about three-eighths of an inch wide. Attach these false hands to the clockhands by any suitable means, such as glue or slits in the paper to thrust the hands through. We now have a black face with white hands and figures.

There is no appreciable reflection from the black paper, so that if the light now be confined to the face of the clock all the audience sees are the white figures and white hands, but it sees them far more easily and plainly than it did or could before, because WHITE SHOWS ON DULL BLACK FAR BETTER THAN BLACK SHOWS ON WHITE. If the foregoing be carried out faithfully you may have your clock beside the screen without any of the bad effect you inevitably produce when you do it the other way. It does not in the least injure the original clock face.

In addition to the clock, there were seven bright sidelights about six feet from the floor, and two large decorated diffusing globes, containing white light, located halfway down the length of the auditorium, one on each side thereof, set out probably two feet from the wall and about eight feet from the floor, all of which is bad from the projection viewpoint, since these lights set up eyestrain, and by reflex action in the eyes of the audience produce, in a modified way, precisely the same effect that stray light on the screen produces—injures the highlights and lessens the color tone and contrasts of the picture. All this is said in kindness.

I had the pleasure of meeting John Molett, manager, a pleasant man, who, like too many other theater managers, expends much energy on studying his program and not enough on the problems involved in placing those programs properly before his patrons.

Objects to Large Windows in Grand's Operating Room.

The screen illumination was excellent at the time of my visit; also the projection speed was correct. The operating room is small and is literally flooded with daylight by day and, I should imagine, with street light by night by large windows opening on street, extending from floor to ceiling of room. A pleasant place to work, but one not conducive to excellence in projection, particularly when the street is the main drag of the city, and crowded with men, women, boys and girls. Ray Miller is operator. Two Power's 6A machines are used. I most sincerely trust Manager Molett will take what I have said in good part, realizing that it is said entirely for his own benefit and the benefit of the motion picture industry, and eliminate the faults I have named. Enlarge that projection room by moving the front wall three feet ahead (it can be done easily, if I rightly remember), close those windows tight by building in front of them a light-tight airshoot of ample dimensions, its opening at floor level, with ample ceiling vent flue and a 16-inch exhaust fan. The operator won't like this at all, but that cannot be helped. When his comfort comes into conflict with excellence in screen results, his comfort must give way. He is not there to put in several hours watching the crowd, but to watch the screen, and watch it closely. As to illuminating your theater without those objectionable sidelights, why I will, upon application, tell you how to do it—how literally to flood your theater with light without in the least injuring screen results.

Comes Across Excellent Projection in Colonial.

The Colonial theater is managed by Herman Heisler. Projection light was brilliant and pure in tone. Color values of the picture showed up well. The Colonial is a 5-cent house, seating 500. The piano is far to the right and there is no light near the screen. The projection room is small and quite crowded, also its windows open on the street. There were also unnecessary incandescent lamps burning therein, wasting coal and doing harm instead of good. L. A. Bertschi is operator, though he was not on duty at time of my visit, hence cannot be blamed for the burning incandescent lights mentioned. He runs two Motiographs. Miss Julia Romary, presiding genius at the box office, demanded honorable mention. She is hereby accommodated. Incidentally the Colonial admission should be raised at least to 10 cents, if for no other reason than the beauty of the box office "scenery" is well worth the added nickel.

Too Much Piano Light in Lyric.

The Lyric, Oscar Wobrook, manager, seats 900 at 15 cents admission. It is a combination house, running three acts and three reels. Brilliancy and tone of projection light are excellent. The piano light also was brilliant—and copious. The woman pianist literally had light smeared over about everything in sight. Her lamp illuminated a space fully 4 by 6 feet. Apparently she labored under the delusion that the audience paid its admission fee to enjoy a silhouette of herself. In addition to this utterly useless piano light crime there seemed to be no effort whatever made to reduce the other lights to their lowest practical value or to hide them from the audience. From each bunch of sheet music light blared back into the eyes of the audience. As is usual in combination houses, where it is supposed to be 50-50 with pictures and vaudeville, the picture gets the worst of it, the projection room being located at the extreme top of the high balcony, and none too large at that; also the projectors are in sad need of repairs, or rather thorough overhauling. In fact it would, I am sure, pay the management well to install two new projectors. Charles Hosford, operator, is producing as good results as any man could be expected to deliver under the conditions—much better than friend manager has any right to expect when the utterly wretched condition of the machines is taken into consideration.

Orpheum Provides Recreation Room for Employees.

The Orpheum is a large, very cozy-looking theater, owned by the Bankers' and Merchants' Theater Company, of which A. F. Bentlinger is general manager and C. W. Mason, local manager. Its brightly illuminated front can be seen for blocks at night. Its auditorium seats 1,200, mostly on the main floor. There are no lights near the screen. The company has provided a large, comfortable rest and recreation room for its men employees, and another for its women workers. General Manager Bentlinger believes in securing interest and hearty cooperation from his employees by considerate, courteous treatment. He is right, because the man or woman who will not respond to this sort of treatment will not respond effectively to any treatment, and is a mighty good subject for discharge.

The projection room is 12 feet deep by 22 feet wide, and has a 10-foot ceiling. Its observation ports are glass-covered, but are too small. Simplex projectors are used and neither head has been off the stand in four years; also there have been no repairs except new sprockets, tension shoes and aperture plate tracks. The machines seem to be in good condition, and are still doing good work. The men can get any repairs they need. E. A. Karns, president, and E. J. (Baldy) Kirk, vice-president, Local Union 466, are the operators. They work five-hour shifts, delivering excellent screen results. There is a five-piece orchestra, situated on a raised platform to the right of the screen, that does remarkably good work. For its size it is the best I have yet heard. Miss Frieda Weingart, vocalist, contributes a song to the program. The screen illumination was brilliant, and the light tone pure.

Projection Expert Talks.

At midnight every operator and with one exception every exhibitor and theater manager gathered to "hear Richardson talk." At least one exhibitor carefully warned us that he would simply have to go before we were finished. He did not go. Afterward I asked him why, to which he replied: "I just couldn't."

Well, Richardson "talked." We turned our rapid-fire language gun loose in setting forth certain facts concerning theater practice. It was served boiling hot and all ready to be swallowed whole, a painful process indeed. But the Fort Wayne men are as game as they make 'em, and though many a pet corn got squashed there was no baby act staged. Why they actually, and I believe sincerely, thanked me for doing it; and that is the sort of men who can and will profit by constructive criticism. While in Fort Wayne I had the privilege of taking dinner with President Karns and his family.

BUCYRUS, OHIO.

IT WAS in Bucyrus I found one of the most remarkable little theaters and exhibitor-managers, everything considered, I have encountered to date. As soon as my route was published in the Projection Department, a letter from the Hippodrome theater, Bucyrus, Ohio, signed W. P. Newman, arrived, asking that I stop in that city. Whether Mr. Newman was exhibitor, manager or operator I did not know, but finding it possible to lay over in Bucyrus from 10 a. m. to 3.19 p. m., I agreed so to do, Bucyrus being but a small city with three theaters. I shall always be glad I complied with Exhibitor-Manager Newman's request, for I got a story in Bucyrus, and that story hath moral of weight.

Yes, W. P. Newman proved to be an exhibitor-manager; also he is a showman, in all that that term implies. He is also a competent business man Bucyrus can boast of but 11,000 population, and the Hippodrome, Mr. Newman's theater, has two competitors, the Grand and the Southern, each of which is a more modern theater than the Hippodrome. All three houses are on the main street of the city, and you could toss a stone from one to the other with ease. And now I want some of you "sob-sister" exhibitors who are eternally complaining that "business is dull," "of too much competition" and that "business is going to the everlasting bow wows," to read the following over very carefully once each day for at least six hundred days:

Newman Makes Success of Hippodrome Theater.

Eight years ago W. P. Newman, a circus man who had fallen upon evil days, as circus men often do, and was flat, stone and every other kind of dead broke, landed in Bucyrus, Ohio. He had not a dollar, no job or any particular knowledge of anything except the circus business. It so chanced that a small and very crude little motion picture theater was lying idle, the last tenant presumably having failed to "make it go." It was fitted with a projector, kitchen chairs and a crude screen. Its owner, seeing the thing lying idle, knowing Newman for a "showman," proposed that he open it and try it out. And this Newman did, with scarcely a dollar of capital, and with no knowledge at all of motion pictures. There were even some debts of the circus to pay. This all happened eight years ago. Mr. Newman paid his circus debts, and today owns one of the most remarkably equipped theaters of its kind and size I have as yet seen, the Hippodrome; also a large automobile and a new home, which might well please the most fastidious. It is a home of which any man might well be proud. I, of course, do not know what else in the way of goods and chattels Newman has, but that much I saw with my own eyes, and was given to understand it was free from debt. And every cent of all this has been coined from that little Hippodrome theater, which, while it now seats 453, was but recently enlarged to that capacity at 5 and 10 cents admission in normal times; 6 and 11 now. And mind you all this has been done in a town of 11,000, with two competitors, each with a better theater (but not better equipment) than his own.

Equipment of Hippodrome Its Dominant Feature.

The Hippodrome is of the storeroom type. The auditorium itself is not in the least degree remarkable, unless it be in the fairly good results Newman has secured under very adverse circumstances, the building being itself not at all adapted to the purpose to which it has been put. Viewed merely as a theater auditorium the Hippodrome is distinctly less desirable than either of its two competitors, and its location has no advantage over that of its rivals. It is its remarkable equipment which makes one sit up and take notice. Remember we are speaking of a rather small 5 and 10-cent house of the storeroom type, and then read this: The Hippodrome has a nice but not remarkable front. Entering its lobby we find local and long distance telephones just inside the door. At the left of the lobby, which is necessarily restricted in both length and width, is Manager Newman's office. For brother Newman is right there on the job from 10 a. m., until closing time at night, giving every detail his personal attention. In programs Mr. Newman excludes the sensational. His acid test is: Would I want my wife, my mother and my daughter to see it? And that is some test, if you ask me.

Mr. Newman has the hearty good will and cooperation of his employees, whom he treats as friends rather than as employees. But to get back to the lobby. On each side are small but comfortable rest and retiring rooms for men and women, and on the right wall is a line of hooks such as we often see in restaurants, upon which you can place hat and overcoat, lock them fast and take the key with you to your seat. I do not know whether it is necessary to deposit a coin to unlock the hooks or not. On the lobby walls are pyrene tubes, a copper tank fire extinguisher, and fire hose attached to standpipe.

To the right of the theater one may pass through a door into an open court, where in a brick building is housed a ventilating and heating plant, consisting of a six-foot electrically driven fan, which forces air into the theater through a diffuser. In winter the air is driven over heating coils, which raise its temperature to any desired degree. The fan changes the air in the theater every eight minutes. In another room is the light plant, for Newman has installed his own lighting plant. He did this because the local line voltage was too variable to give the continuous excellence in screen results he demanded. And it is some plant, too, let me inform you, considering size and type of the theater. A 30-horsepower, two-cylinder gas engine pulls an 18 K. W. d.c. generator, to which it is directly connected; speed, 300 r.p.m. The voltmeter stands as steady as though its hand were glued to the dial, and one can scarcely hear the engine running twenty feet from the room, with the door wide open.

Operating Room Is Small But Fireproof.

The projection room is of brick, with cement floor. It is small, but not so bad in that respect. It opens outside the building. It is off center with the screen, but Newman's operator squared the screen with the lens, and so cleverly has it been done that I myself did not notice it at first. The throw is 80 feet and the screen is set in black. The observation ports are too small. A window in the projection room opens out of doors, but is covered during matinees with a removable iron plate, which excludes the light. Lamphouses are piped to vent flue. L. B. Newman, operator, has the reputation of putting high-class results on the screen. He has to have that reputation to work for friend Newman. In the projection room is a well-thumbed handbook and a set of electrical guides. Simplex projectors are used. They are equipped with pasteboard revolving shutters, made by the operator from the latest shutter idea published recently in the Projection Department. They work finely; also they are set the correct distance from the lens. Operator Newman was using five-eighth-inch upper carbons. He should use three-fourth inch. He was having trouble breaking condenser lenses. That most likely was the cause—carbon overloaded and flaming.

As to music there are two organs in use, one to the right and one to the left of the screen. One is a Seeburg; the other a Welte.

And what is the answer to all this? I asked Exhibitor-Manager Newman this question. Here, in substance, is his reply: "Screen results! That is what I sell. I am a crank on projection, and spare no effort or expense to put on as nearly as possible perfect projection. That is what I have to sell, and that is the answer."

Now, some of you exhibitors and managers who are not so particular read that last paragraph over again. Read it several times. Here is a man who for eight years has sold projection, and the excellence of his goods is such that he has accumulated many thousands of dollars at a five and ten-cent admission, with limited capacity and heavy competition, while others have sneered at projection and failed. They have howled about "poor business" and shouted "rotten" when anyone asked them how things were going, when the only rotten thing was right there on their own screen all the time. And that is why Mr. Newman wrote, asking me to stop, as soon as he learned I was to go his way. He was selling projection, and thought I might tell him something of value in bettering his goods.

My compliments to Mr. Newman. I had dinner at his home and can vouch for the fact that even as he puts "the goods" on his screen, so also does Mrs. Newman put "the goods" on her home screen—the table.

Observation Ports Too Large.

The Grand, managed by C. I. Beach and W. F. Whitemaire, who also run a garage, is a really charming little theater, seating 345. Both its lobby and auditorium decorations are delicate and beautiful. The show had not yet started for the day at the time of my arrival, hence I cannot comment on screen results. The operating room is excellent as to construction and size, except that instead of observation ports there are two square knot holes in a thick brick wall. Those ports should be cut out to 12 inches square. Don't expect high-class work on your screen until you enlarge those ports, gentlemen! You will most likely be disappointed if you do. Your operator might give fair results as it is, but he is a wonder if he does. This fault is further aggravated by the fact that ventilation is by means of a large window, opening on the roof, so that the room is flooded with daylight during matinees. With this combination it is utterly impossible for the operator to have any proper view of his screen, especially as the throw is, as I remember it, a rather long one. Simplex machines are used, but, due to lack of technical knowledge, the operator is cutting a decidedly abnormal and unnecessary percentage of his light with his revolving shutter. They were having trouble with variable screen illumination, which was, I think, due to a motor generator set working right up to capacity, with heavy fluctuation in line voltage.

Too Much Daylight in Operation Room of Southern.

The Southern theater is owned by the Marion Photoplay Company, Marion, Ohio, H. Sharp, local manager. It has a good lobby and auditorium. The clock illumination is objectionable. Amber sidelights supply illumination for the auditorium—bad. Halfway down the length of the auditorium is a bank of loges on each side. Manager Sharp was busy and I did not learn how they were used. The picture was excellent, as to definition and lighting, but was racing when I entered. It slowed down immediately. Wonder why! Sidney Smith is operator. Projection room is large and has good ports, but is flooded with daylight during matinees; also three utterly useless incandescent lamps blazed away, wasting our scant supply of coal and adding brightness to an already far too light room.

Learning that I was to be in Bucyrus, R. S. Slagle, operator, traveled from La Rue, Ohio, forty miles, just to meet and shake hands with me. Brother Slagle belongs to Local Union 576, Mansfield, Ohio. I enjoyed my visit with him immensely.

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.

IN PITTSBURGH I stopped to visit the Westinghouse plant, but it was not deemed advisable to have a meeting of theater men just then, particularly as I will have to return to that city soon. Ralph Freeman, business agent, and A. G. Williams, financial secretary, Local Union 171, together with our old friend, L. C. Van Orsdale, member Local Union 306, New York City, met me at the station. Local Union 171 is getting along all right.

Next morning I went out to East Pittsburgh, where is located the Westinghouse works. There is just one trouble with that plant, viz., one needs a trolley system to get around it. In the General Electric Works at Schenectady, the only other I have seen comparing with the Westinghouse in size, the thing is spread out into detached units in separate buildings, with streets and everything, so that one may travel about the plant in a bubble. But here the entire plant is almost literally under one tremendous roof and it is walk, walk, walk.

I had expected to have both H. A. Campe of the industrial department and H. M. Wible of the illuminating department as my guides, but the former was called out of the city, so Mr. Wible did the honors, at which he is an adept. The net result of our visit to this plant will appear in the Projection Department in due time.

When we were through at the plant Brother Wible took us down to Wilkenburg, half way to Pittsburgh, to dinner at the Elks' Club. On our way from the station to the club we dropped in at the Rowland theater, owned by Rowland & Clark. The Rowland is a really beautiful theater, seating 1,200, but alas, the light was sadly discolored several times as we watched the screen for maybe ten minutes; also there was heavy flicker. The reason for the light discoloration was made evident when we mounted to the projection room at the top of a high balcony. It is about eight feet square, with a seven-foot ceiling and is flooded with daylight at matinees by a large window at the rear. And as if this were not enough to discourage good work, the sin is added to by two fair-sized square knot holes where observation ports 12 inches square ought to be. Instead of a vent flue there is a metal wheat straw about eight or ten feet in diameter—no exhaust fan. And all this in a house seating 1,200, costing tens of thousands of dollars, the entire income of which depends upon what is shown on the screen. An operator who could or at least would put on a good screen result under the conditions would be a stem-winding wonder. O. B. Clark, operator, was working at something on a bench at the rear of the machines, his back to the screen, when we entered, while a motor ran the show.

And then it was a Pullman for mine at 9.30 p. m. At 8 a. m. a vigorous dig in the ribs was followed by the most welcome words I had heard in five weeks, viz.: "New Yawk, boss. We'll be in in an hour!" A peek out of the window and there is the Woolworth building. Hurray, I am home again!

How World Film Catalogues Locations

Has Filed Away Photographic Records of All Outstanding Backgrounds in Fifty-Mile Radius.

THE job of selecting locations is at the best a difficult one, and in order to aid their directors and assistants to find suitable spots for their productions World Pictures has had a special scenic cameraman photograph the entire district within a radius of fifty miles of New York City where there were backgrounds which might prove of value in future productions.

Meadows, residences, forests, streams, bridges, brooks, parks, estates, fountains, factories, hills, and a score of other unusual topographical features have been carefully photographed and filed away under their classification at the World Studios.

Each photo has been mounted and contains a statement on the reverse side of the distinguished characteristics of the places, the distance from the studio, the means of transportation, the hotels and restaurants nearby, and all other information which will assist the director and his staff in determining whether or not the place is suitable for their purpose.

These photos are filed away under their generic title and when a scene in a scenario requires a special background or exterior, the director consults the file containing the photos under this classification and picks out the spot that satisfies his purposes.

The job of the location man and the director in this manner is considerably facilitated and the studio companies can now make their exterior with one-half the trouble and confusion as heretofore.

Many Stolen Films Found in Cleveland

Joe Tomarowitz Convicted Following Search by General Film and Essanay.

WITH the conviction of Joe Tomarowitz, also known as Morrow, and the recovery of scores of stolen films, the authorities of Cleveland, assisted by the victims of the thefts, believe they have cleared up a bad situation.

The search for these films was pushed by the General Film Company and Attorney Callaghan of Chicago for the Essanay Company. Not only did they recover a big batch of stolen films, but they also obtained ten or fifteen prints of films stolen in other cities and sold to independent exchanges in Cleveland under false pretenses. The exchanges having the films gladly gave them up when they found they had been duped by companies in New York and Chicago who sold the pictures to them.

The result of this campaign also brought forcibly to the attention of exchange managers the bad practice which many exchange employes have of throwing reels into the halls, when they have been returned by exhibitors or the messengers to the wrong exchanges. That has given the thieves a chance to pick them up and in this way many reels have disappeared. The proper thing to do, according to Mr. Callaghan, when a reel is returned to the wrong exchange is to call up the exchange which owns it and then keep it in the exchange until it is called for. This matter was brought up to the attention of the Exchange Managers' Association.

Testimony at the trial of Tomarowitz, who was found guilty of contributing to the delinquency of a boy employe of the Mutual exchange, developed that Tomarowitz induced the boy to take films which were returned by mistake to the Mutual.

Ontario Also Increases Film Tax

New Impost Expected to Net Government $100,000 More a Year—Operators Also Hit.

FOLLOWING up the announcements by A. K. McLean, acting minister of finance for the Dominion of Canada, of the decisions of the federal government to impose a tax of 15 cents a reel a day and also to increase the duty on imported films from 2 to 5 cents a foot, T. W. McGarry, Ontario provincial treasurer, came across with the announcement that the Province of Ontario would impose a new scale of license fees "in addition to the recent dominion tax." It is expected the new tax will net the Ontario government $100,000 a year.

The license fee system has been changed from a flat charge on a theater as a whole to a tax on the seats, based on the size of the local population.

The new fee in all cities having a population of over 10,000 will be 25 cents a seat. This will mean that several large Toronto theaters will pay about $400 a year. The former license fee was $150 a year in the larger centers. According to the new arrangement there is a minimum fee of $135 a year for smaller theaters having a seating capacity of 545 or less.

In cities where the population is from 5,000 to 10,000 the license fee is 20 cents a seat. In all municipalities under 5,000 population a provincial license fee of 15 cents a seat is charged.

The provincial license fee for film exchanges has also been raised from $150 to $250 a year.

Traveling moving picture shows will have to pay a license fee of $200 instead of $150, and they receive the same privileges as the film exchanges permanently located in the Province.

Even the moving picture operators have been hit by the new Provincial scale. The annual license fee for operators was $5. They will now pay $8 a year.

The new schedule of fees goes into effect at the end of May, when the annual dues in Ontario become payable.

OFFICIAL FILMS PLEASE WESTERN EXHIBITORS.

Sol L. Lesser, Chairman, Division United States Official War Films in California, reports, due to the co-operation of the film exchanges in California, great progress in the booking of the United States Official War Pictures in the West.

There are twenty-six one-reel productions, showing the life and training in every branch of Uncle Sam's service. These pictures are snappy and full of "pep," and exhibitors are expressing great satisfaction as to their qualifications as live, breezy fillers.

MISS CONOVER JOINS WORLD PICTURES.

Theresa Maxwell Conover has cast her lot with World Pictures and in the future will appear in important supporting roles. Miss Conover received her training under Augustin Daly and had prominent roles in many of the plays of Charles Frohman.

World Pictures feel that the high quality of Miss Conover's acting will add distinction to the releases of the company and will aid materially toward the creation of supporting casts of unusual calibre.

LONE STAR REDEEMS A TENTH OF ITS STOCK.

Ten per cent. of the outstanding preferred stock of the Lone Star Corporation, a $1,500,000 concern, will be redeemed at 110 plus accrued dividends May 15, according to announcement issued from the offices of the corporation in Chicago.

The Lone Star Corporation is the concern organized for the merchandizing of the series of twelve comedies featuring Charles Chaplin produced by the Lone Star Corporation and released through the Mutual Film Corporation.

A large percentage of the original capital represented by the preferred stock has been returned to the stockholders. Meanwhile the pictures are said to have a long working life ahead.

Publicity Director Gives and Takes

By Tarleton Winchester

Disagrees with "Press Agent," but Agrees with "Managing Editor" Large Share of Submitted Matter Is Unsuitable

INTEREST in the discussion between "Dramatic Editor of a Newark Newspaper" and "Press Agent" is increasing rather than decreasing, and since the writer has wanted to say something on the subject from the beginning, the article by "Managing Editor" in your recent issue has crystalized desire into determination.

In the first place, we agreed with the gentleman from Newark when his article first appeared—to such an extent that he is now a member of the publicity department of which we are endeavoring to make an efficient news bureau—one of the two departments to which he referred in his article as being satisfactory.

Also we did not agree with "Press Agent" (whoever he may be). The objection is not so much to his words as his attitude.

Our opinion is that the whole matter cannot be put upon the basis that the publicity man is in most instances higher paid than the motion picture editor and is therefore a better man—and on that "Press Agent" practically rested his case.

Further, since at one time the writer held down a desk to which press material was sent in enormous quantities, he agrees with "Managing Editor" that the larger share of it is not suitable for publication, at least as submitted.

However, in all fairness, the varying likes and dislikes not only of papers but of individuals make the task of the publicity man a difficult one if he be expected to furnish material that will go verbatim everywhere.

It seems to us that the anonymous discussion should now be brought out in the open, and we are writing you this letter to express our personal ideas and point of view for whatever slight interest they may have.

We look upon the publicity department as a very important one to a motion picture concern since motion pictures depend upon the great public for their existence.

We look upon it also as an important one to newspapers since it enables them to obtain information and material more easily and quickly and cheaply than would otherwise be possible.

We say all this with the mental reservation "a good publicity department."

Let us explain that we do not hold our department up as the standard by which all should be judged. We do say that if hard work and the sincere desire to give the editor what he wants no matter how much trouble that that entails and complete absence of the mental attitude revealed in "Press Agent's" article will help, we will go on improving in the next months as we have in the past.

"Newark" is not the only newspaper man in the Pathe Publicity Department. We are all newspaper men, though the department head has been in the film business about five years.

While he wants only newspaper men writing newspaper copy he would not put one of them in charge of a general publicity department unless he had had considerable experience in this highly specialized and altogether strange industry.

That may sound inconsistent, but we think it is the following point which has not been covered by any of the writers on this subject:

We have found that the film point of view and the business instinct are absolutely necessary in handling the executive work of a department which means the preparation and distribution of all newspaper publicity, all trade paper publicity, all "fan" magazine publicity, "campaign books" (to use the name we gave them), etc.

At Pathe we endeavored to make fan magazine and trade paper stories different in style and often in conception.

Sometimes we succeed admirably; sometimes we don't, but we are working with a definite aim and we are improving (according to our friends at least).

We make most of our newspaper stories exclusive to each paper in a given city, and we send to more than one paper only news stories of general interest and short items for "the colyum."

We aim to give the photographs something more than a mere "portrait" vein. Above all we endeavor rapidly and capably to give an editor satisfactory service in answer to a specific request.

In other words, in accordance with a definite plan worked out some years ago by the writer, we are trying to remedy defects of the past which we realize fully.

But there are difficulties.

The studios across the continent, the element of time, the person who wants publicity but won't lift a finger to help us get it for them.

Our broad highway is not strewn with roses.

In no business in the world do things happen as fast as in ours.

A release is shoved into the program at short notice almost with regularity, in even the best film families. It all means a rush job, sloppy workmanship of which "Managing Editor" complains, but there are mistakes in newspapers, too.

I know this:

Some film editors are not up to standard just as some press agents are not up to standard, but we must work on the theory that they are, that we are their New York correspondents from whom they should feel free to ask anything and get it—quick.

Newspapers are beginning to see what motion pictures can do for them, they are beginning to put good men, men of the calibre of "Newark" and "Managing Editor" on film work.

Of his own knowledge the writer is aware that the photoplay editor on the leading daily in Cleveland is one of the highest salaried men in the place. So, too, in Minneapolis, Newark and Seattle.

The photoplay editor on a certain paper in St. Louis receives a higher salary than the news editor or the city editor.

A photoplay editor on a certain daily in Chicago holds the only contract existing between that paper and any member of the editorial staff, not even excluding the editor-in-chief and the managing editor.

We at this end must be on the job to welcome them and to do what we can to help.

We're not all satisfied with ourselves, because when a man's satisfied he's going down.

Let the motion picture editor come to us with as open a mind as that with which we come to him, and we are sure that before long we will be working together in a way that will eliminate the condition complained of on a basis of mutual satisfaction. It can be done.

Selig to Release Through Capital

Part of the Polyscope Product Will Be Issued By the New Indianapolis Concern.

WILLIAM N. SELIG, president of the Selig-Polyscope Company, has concluded negotiations with the Capital Film Company, of Indianapolis, whereby a portion of the Selig studio output will be released through the Indianapolis concern.

Mr. Selig, who was in Indianapolis Thursday, May 9, to complete arrangements for the transaction, said it was his opinion that one of the great drawbacks to the motion picture business has not been so much the exorbitant salaries paid to the stars as to the paucity of plays for the use of the stars.

"Directors," he said, "have been without proper mediums for the exploitation of the featured players employed. As a result, and since their salaries were going on, they have thrust them into such plays as came most readily to hand. The result has been bad for the stars and bad for the producer and bad for the spectator."

Mr. Selig is firmly of the conviction that the demand for short subjects is rapidly increasing. He says we must have shorter films and good films.

Just how much of the Selig product the Indianapolis company will absorb has not been definitely determined, but it is quite likely a large number of the films will be used. This new arrangement, according to Ike Schlank, manager, does not in any way affect the production plans of the Capital company. The negotiations with Mr. Selig, he said, are for the purpose of increasing the Capital company's releases.

Chaplin Grotesqueries Fit in War Zone

And Now Dramatic Editor Cannot Think of Comedian's Feet Without Also Recalling Raiders and Exploding Shells.

Edwin Carty Ranck, in Brooklyn Eagle.

ONE doesn't usually associate Charlie Chaplin with air raids, but in the future I shall never see the eccentric movie actor fall over his own feet without thinking of German raiding airplanes, exploding shells and men and women burrowing their way into subway entrances like rabbits entering warrens.

The second night after I landed in Paris I went to a funny little movie house called the Cine Opera on the Boulevard des Capucines, where the best seats are the worst and the worst seats the best. By that I mean that they charge you more the nearer you are to the screen and much less when you are seated ten rows back, which are, after all, the best seats for movie fans. The cheapest seats in the Cine Opera were two francs seventy-five centimes, which approximates fifty cents in our money. The best seats are five francs; about a dollar.

Bessie Barriscale was there in a clever Irish comedy with French captions, which was, to an American, a rather amusing incongruity. They flashed on the screen the message of General Pershing, offering all of his available resources to France. This brought forth a storm of applause, the first spontaneous applause of the evening, by the way. Then American boys were shown at the front and there was more applause. They love Americans, do these warm-hearted French people.

Then there was a prolonged shout of merriment and the cause was soon apparent. There walked out upon the screen, queer feet and all, Monsieur Charlot. That's what they call him over here. They don't know anything about the Chaplin part of his name. But the French people adore Monsieur Charlot.

It was an outrageously funny Chaplin picture. Charlie had returned home intoxicated and couldn't get upstairs to save his life. He also had weird experiences with tiger rugs and bear rugs and a clock, the pendulum of which had a queer way of getting out of the clock case and striking Charlie on the nose. You have probably seen the picture. It was played in New York last winter.

Well, the French audience simply "ate it up," as we would say in America. They laughed! They shrieked! They roared with mirth. Every failure of Charlie's to get upstairs was greeted with hysterical gaiety. There was a large sprinkling of American officers in the audience and they had as much fun as the French people, whose mirth was contagious. Even if you didn't care at all for the Charlie Chaplin brand of humor you would have had the time of your life just watching those Frenchmen laugh, while seventy miles away a German gun, facetiously dubbed "Big Bertha," was sending shells into Paris at regular intervals.

At last it was all over. Charlie Chaplin finally succeeded in getting into his moving bed, and the last laugh vanished into air. Stepping outside into the April night the contrast with the lighted movie house was uncanny. Paris was a phantom city, dark and mysterious. Here and there greenish lamps shone like queer, Poe-like worms, and automobiles, sans lights, sans horns, sans everything except motive power and chauffeurs, crept along silently. In doorways pedestrians crouched, looking up expectantly.

We were talking of Charlie Chaplin when it happened. As if it had all been prearranged there came three shots from a French "75" and then the hoarse shriek of a steam siren. Two venturesome Boche airplanes had invaded the overhead region of Paris.

Out in the open square, in front of the silent and massive French Opera House, men and women were staring up into the air. Others were crowding into the subway station at this point, the mouth of which was marked with a greenish light "Refuge." We looked up, and while we couldn't see much of the aerial combat; we saw the spraying light of exploding shells and the peculiar deadened concussion of the anti-aircraft guns as they poured a steady stream of projectiles at the two Boche beasts.

It was about 10:15 when the firing first began. I lingered around for a while and then went back to my hotel, where I found that all of the guests had taken refuge in the cellar. I stood at the window of my room for some time, looking out over the darkened city and seeing at intervals the spray of an exploding shell falling in the darkness like fragments of a Fourth of July skyrocket. The deadened din of the anti-aircraft guns was continuous.

Then, suddenly the clamor ceased. It was then twenty minutes to eleven. Suddenly a dead silence descended upon Paris. Then, sharp and clear, like the ancient call of a Highland chieftain, there came a bugle note. Some French Paul Revere was riding through the streets of Paris on a big red fire truck, not so romantic as a neighing steed, but much more efficient. He was notifying the residents that all was clear. The German menace had passed. The wakeful French 75's had performed their faithful watchdog service and driven off the two Boche beasts.

Almost instantaneously the city came to life again. It was just as if Paris had been holding its breath. Outside the window I heard a French hotel maid laugh merrily. A man's voice was heard singing a stave from "Samson et Delilah." Relieved voices of men and women were heard passing my door. The hotel guests had emerged from the cellar.

Then, suddenly, without any particular reason, I found myself thinking of Monsieur Charlot Chaplin and his absurd feet, and I began to laugh as I stood there at the window, watching Paris awake from the shadow of the German menace. It was a grotesque thing to do. But then this war is grotesque. The bombardment of Paris by a gun seventy-five miles away is grotesque. The world is a grotesque place in which to live nowadays. But as long as Monsier Charlot is still in it, one can laugh, and laughter keeps one from going mad, doesn't it?

Daylight Saving and the Airdomes

Working "Hobs" with Theater Men Who Operate Park as an Adjunct to Theater.

THE new daylight saving proposition is "working hobs," as one man put it, with the exhibitor who operates a park during the summer months as an adjunct to his theater, and the further south you go the worse conditions will become. It is now 9 o'clock before an exhibitor in that section can screen a picture outdoors. That is one difficulty, but there is another one—that of timing the pictures so that the exhibition in the park will progress just one reel ahead of the theater.

The greatest strain is on the man who shows nothing but features or a combination of a long feature and single reels. If he does not figure to keep the park a reel ahead of the theater his troubles will come when it starts to rain and the park patrons make a rush for the house. It will mean that these patrons, crowding into the theater, may have to wait through the better part of a full show, straining the seating capacity and making it impossible for the exhibitor to do anything near a normal business.

If the exhibitor will keep his park show a little in advance of the theater he can move the patrons of the former into the latter without confusion and they can pick up the succeeding reel without missing anything or having to wait through a number of reels in order to see the whole feature.

A group of Washington exhibitors were discussing this problem when the Moving Picture World correspondent joined them. The troubles expressed by some of these were amusing, but nevertheless if one does not watch his step he will find, as in this territory where there are many unpleasant nights in the course of the summer, that he is likely to "sell the house out" by having the park audience merged with that of the theater.

KRUMMECK LEASES FLUSHING THEATER.

The Murray Hill Theater, Broadway and Fourteenth street, Flushing, L. I., has been leased by Charles Krummeck from Walter Lee. The theater has been entirely redecorated from pit to dome, and will play a policy of pictures booked through the exchanges of Paramount, Artcraft, Metro and Bluebird. Charles Ruffle has been appointed resident manager

In addition to managing the Murray Hill Theater Mr. Krummeck will still conduct the Krummeck Studio in the Savoy Theater Building, New York.

HEYES RETURNS TO FOX FORCES.

Herbert Heyes, capable leading man, returned to the William Fox forces after long absence, will be seen opposite Gladys Brockwell in "The Bird of Prey," a new picture that Edward J. Le Saint is directing. Mr. Heyes did all of his previous work in Fox plays in the East.

The Experience Column

Views of Our Readers Who Are Using Motion Pictures in School and Church Work.

WE ARE glad to publish the following letter showing how energy and purpose can succeed. The example set by the Williams Bay, Wis., Consolidated School may be profitably followed in many places. We commend their plan as a most worthy one and hope there may be many followers and splendid efforts to use the moving pictures in schools deserve every encouragement.

We are interested in educational moving pictures, but having only a short experience we cannot give you more than our initial experience.

When we built our new one-story school house last year, we had it wired for a motion picture apparatus, with the thought that it would eventually be used. Since the district was going to great expense in building, and in developing a high school department, it hardly seemed right to ask for the installation of a machine for some time. But finding that our state-owned films could be used where admission was charged, provided the admission money was used for paying for the outfit, a plan was worked out whereby no money should be asked of the district.

The business and professional men of the community were asked to underwrite the purchase of a moving picture outfit to the extent of twenty-five dollars each. No money was to be put up, but a paper was signed to this effect by eighteen men; an organization was effected and officers elected. These officers signed a note, attached to it the signed paper, and readily borrowed the amount required to buy a first-class outfit, about $450.

The school laws of Wisconsin allow the trustees of a school to give the use of the school house for entertainments and charge admission therefor, provided they are given under the auspices of the school authorities and are for the benefit of the school. Operating under this law the trustees (who were all members of the movie organization) asked the organization to give a series of entertainments in the auditorium of the school house—the only available hall in the village.

Owing to the war, there were vexatious delays, but we finally started in February and have been running about twice a month ever since. The move has been a popular one and we can generally count on a fifth of the inhabitants of the district at every entertainment. This attendance could easily be stimulated by advertising, or pushing, but it has seemed to be wise to the officers not to "hog the stage," for there are many other community enterprises that would suffer from such a course.

We clear from five to ten dollars on each show. During the summer we shall run once or twice a week, as this village is then a summer resort and will have a large floating population. There is no other motion picture house in town.

Perhaps you would be interested in reading our resolutions. They are:

WHEREAS, The use of motion pictures for educational purposes is now becoming almost universal in well-equipped schools, and

WHEREAS, There are a large number of state-owned films and slides which are free to any community desiring them, and

WHEREAS, The Trustees of the school have expressed their desire to use these materials, and

WHEREAS, There are now, in addition, many firms which issue high-grade films suitable for the education and entertainment of both school and community; therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That we, the undersigned, residents of Williams Bay, Wis., assured of the co-operation of the school board, do associate ourselves together for the purchase of a moving picture outfit to be used for the education and entertainment of the community, and ultimately presented to the school, and

RESOLVED, That, after the purchase of the machine, a series of entertainments be given under the auspices of the school authorities for the purpose of reimbursing the members of the association for the expense of the undertaking, and,

RESOLVED, That we bind ourselves severally, to the extent of twenty-five dollars each, to pay any deficit that may arise due to unforeseen difficulties in carrying out this plan, and

RESOLVED, That no profits shall accrue to any member, and that all net proceeds shall be applied (1) to paying for the outfit, and (2) to promote some community enterprise after the association is free of debt, if thought best by the association, and

RESOLVED, That within one year from the time that the members of the association have been reimbursed, the outfit shall be turned over to the school district free of charge for the benefit of the school district and the community.

We hire an experienced operator, but depend on local volunteer talent for the music. Our only overhead is heat, light and janitor service.

Our difficulties have begun to shape themselves, but we can talk of them more intelligently after we have had more experience. The most vexatious one at present is to get a list of possible features that can be obtained without signing a long contract. As you see from our resolution, we aim at both entertainment and education. So far we have not given many of the strictly educational films for the reason that we think these should be given in the afternoon when the children are at the school, and the expense of fitting the auditorium with dark curtains is at present prohibitive.

We are getting in touch with those who are working under similar conditions, and have already received very valuable suggestions from Mr. Aughinbaugh of Mingo, Ohio. We read your department in the World carefully each week, and shall ask questions later.

Trusting that I have not wearied you with this long account, I am,

Very truly yours,

STORRS B. BARRETT.

The chief of the department of Visual Instruction in a western college sends us the following:

I am sending you herewith a list of motion picture programs we have sent out to about thirty-five schools during the past six months.

Every comment from the persons who have written us concerning the use of the programs in their schools has been favorable.

We thought you might be interested in seeing what we have done to help further the cause of motion pictures in the schools.

Yours very truly,

CHAS. ROACH, Visual Instruction Service.

Interesting Educationals

Two Zoological Subjects, One Mining, One Agricultural, One Geographical, One Travel and One Military Subject.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"Small Birds of Warm Climates" (Pathe).

IN THIS picture, which encompasses material that is not new but which still remains interesting, we meet with various beautiful birds in their native haunts. The film is colored in nature's own tints and close-ups of feathered songsters include members of the senegal family, among them the dotted monk and Cuban singer. Other varieties of tropical birds of brilliant plumage are also shown.

"Wild Babies" (Educational-Ditmars).

One of the most entertaining of recent Ditmars' releases is "Wild Babies," which introduces us to the young of various kinds of animals including the deer, which is both awkward and amusing, the porcupine and mountain sheep. The mothers of the latter teaching them to climb the rocks is one of the features of the picture.

"Marble Quarrying" (Universal).

An interesting and well-illustrated subject appearing in the 72nd release of the Screen Magazine gives us an insight into marble quarrying in Vermont, the granite state, from which shipments are made to all parts of the country. Scenes showing the channeling machine at work cutting the marble into blocks are followed by others in which we see the holes being drilled in the face of the marble. Wedges are then driven into the holes to split the rock, after which a steel cable hoists the great pieces of marble away from the ledge. Small pieces which have been broken off in the drilling are shoveled into tubs and made use of at a later date.

"Everybody Helps in the Big Farm Drive" (Universal).

This subject, appearing in the 72nd issue of the Screen Magazine, shows how boy scouts, young men from college and others are getting busy on the farms. One of the interesting features of the picture is the spraying of fruit trees to rid them of pests. The harnessing of mule power as well as tractor power for the great agricultural drive of the present year is also dwelt upon.

"What the Ice Age Left" (Educational-Bruce).

Instructional and entertaining is the attractive Bruce scenic entitled "What the Ice Age Left." It opens with information concerning the ice age and chooses Great Glacier Park in Montana as one of the best illustrations of what the title of the picture proposes to explain. This picture should be seen by public school students as a lesson in physical geography.

"Spain the Land of Enchantment" (Beacon Films, Inc.).

The region of Saragossa, Spain, with its beautiful grottos, waterfalls and other interesting sights is presented in this picture. Diana's Bath, the Horse's Tail a fall some 174 feet in height and very beautiful, the Artist's grotto, and the falls of Elvado are among the featured beauties shown.

"Britain's Bulwarks" (Pathe).

This second number of the series gives some comprehensive scenes taken on the British front behind Messines. The soldiers are seen playing tug-of-war, running races, moving artillery and the like. Pictures are shown of several ruined villages. Numerous famous Irish regiments are seen on the march, including the Inniskilling and Royal Dublin Fusiliers.

Wild Animals of the Rockies

"Bob" Bakker and "Jack" Allen Give Realistic Demonstrations of Capturing and Photographing Denizens of Mountains.

ONE of the novelties of the season is a four-reel series of wild animal pictures which has been brought here from the Montana Rockies by "Bob" Bakker, ranch owner and wild animal roper, and Major Allenbaugh, known familiarly as plain "Jack" Allen. An advance showing of these pictures convinced the writer that in them things are painted as they really are in the Montana mountain region.

The first reel has to do with the roping of a mountain lion single-handed, by Bakker. One of these ferocious beasts is shown perched on a lower branch of a tree lying in wait for a deer, upon whose back he purposes to leap in an effort to secure its owner as a choice dinner morsel. Later we see the lion devouring the freshly-killed deer. The real feature of this reel is, of course, the lion-roping act, which is altogether thrilling. Bakker, with the aid of a pack of fox hounds, which, by the way, also do duty in pulling the expeditionary sled over the snow, trails the lion to the top of a pine tree, where he lassos him, pulls him to the ground and ties first his hind feet and then his front feet and muzzles him. The lion is then placed on the sled, the dogs are harnessed and the party is off for the ranch where the "butcher of the woods," as it is called, is crated and shipped to the zoo.

The second reel, slightly less thrilling than the first, covers the details of a bear hunt, in which the hunters lasso a big black bear in his den under the upturned root of a hollow tree, and handle him much in the same manner as the lion.

The third reel gives an excellent idea of the daily duties of Mrs. Bakker, who looks well to the affairs of her family, including a husband and two children. One of the first duties of the day is rowing the children across the Kootenay river to school. On the way a lion is encountered and is sent to his last rest by a bullet from Mrs. Bakker's gun. During the winter season traps are set for the wild game that gives this sturdy-hearted woman her pin money. In the picture we see her making the round of her traps and bringing home a fine Canadian lynx. Then there is the deer hunt with her husband in which they both together fell sufficient deer to keep the little family in excellent food for some time afterward. A bear in the chicken house is put an end to by her, when he is quickly shorn of his skin and his fat rendered for use in the family frying pan or as a substitute for lard. There is much that is of interest in this reel.

The fourth reel covers an interesting and unusual subject, the rocky mountain goat being the center of attraction. Opening with a view of the Kootenay river, with its background of mountains, we shift to Granite Lake at an altitude of 5,000 feet. Here we soon come in view of the rocky passes where the shy mountain goats climb nimbly about. At a range of 300 feet the camera catches some excellent snaps of these timid mountaineers, which, with the darkening storm approaching, gradually fade from view as the photographers hurry to a point of descent. The spectator will be interested also in the difficulties of the mountain climb over loose slag and jagged rocks.

The channel of distribution of these pictures has not yet been decided on. They will, however, be exhibited as a series at the Strand theater, New York City, very shortly.

Salvation Army and War Work

Motion Pictures Give Evidence of Splendid Preparations for the Aid of Men in the Trenches.

FOR the first time in the history of the Salvation Army in America, the activities of the great organization are shown in motion pictures. In Paramount-Bray-Pictograph, Release No. 120, the noble war activities of the Salvation Army, which are not confined to this country, but to the very front line of the trenches in France, are pictured. The Salvation Army, under the command of Evangeline Booth, has eight hundred devoted women operating more than four hundred huts just behind the battle lines in France—huts frequented by American troops, in which they find companionship which inspires the noblest sentiments, improves their morale and which is to them a constant reminder of the loved ones at home. The organization has given these devoted women a special training which has placed them among the most efficient war relief workers in the world today.

Evangeline Booth, Commander of the Salvation Army, is pictured at her home in White Plains, N. Y., just before her departure for New York City, where the headquarters of the Army is located.

She is next seen in her New York offices at the army headquarters, where she proves herself to be the dynamic force which operates the entire army machine. Under her direction the needy poor are aided, volunteers for war work in France are given first aid instructions, and then they are shown darning and mending to prepare them for practical aid in repairing soldiers' clothes overseas. Cooking classes are conducted for the instruction of canteen workers, instructions given in the making of surgical dressings, musicians prepared for entertainment work and Salvationists are instructed in the difficult task of making socks and the like on knitting machines.

An important feature of Commander Booth's war work picture is the distribution of uniforms and bonnets to the women Salvationists preparatory to their departure for the front, and their solemn consecration to their work by the Commander, who charges them to be true to their God and country. The devoted young women kneel as the dedication service proceeds and with the benediction they are seen leaving headquarters for their steamer. The final scene of this unusual picture shows the Salvationists carrying banners and headed by a large band, marching through the streets for the piers where the steamship that is to convey them to France is awaiting them.

New Series for Pictograph

Study of Character by Shape of Hand Subject Which Opens Entertainingly in Pictograph No. 120.

DR. WILLY DE KERLOR, a psycho-analist of note, is collaborating with the Bray studios in a series of pictures describing the significances of hands of different shapes. Commencing with the thumb of the chimpanzee he tells us that the short thumb of this class belongs to undeveloped intellects and is also a sign that the possessor is weak-willed and easily influenced. The long-thumbed person on the contrary is apt to be the possessor of superior intellect and strong will power. The hand of the gambler is shown in this instalment, which, by the way, appears in the 120th release of Pictograph, with the wide spaces at the finger-bases, which denotes laxness in money matters. The hands of financiers, successful business men, diplomats, artists and artisans, all of which have their distinctive differences, are shown in this picture. These studies in character analysis will be found intensely interesting to the majority of theater-goers.

The Depth Bomb

E. Dean Parmelee, of the Bray Studios, Makes Convincing Animated Drawing for 120th Release of Pictograph.

A TIMELY subject presented on the 120th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph acquaints the spectator with the mechanism of the American-made weapon known as a depth bomb, and which has been used effectively in dealing with the German submarine. It is designed to be carried by destroyers and hydroplanes doing patrol duty in the danger zone. The bomb, which is dropped into the water as near as possible to the spot where the submarine is submerged, is operated by water pressure, which intensifies the explosion many times. Two types of depth bombs are shown, that used by the destroyer and also the one used by the hydroplane. This subject is clearly illustrated by E. Dean Parmelee, of the Bray Studios, and speaks loudly for American inventive genius.

Items of Interest.

"Pershing's Crusaders," a series of pictures in seven parts consisting of propaganda in the shape of speeches by prominent people intersected with scenes of war activities in America which covers about five reels of film, and two reels showing American activities in France can be had from the Bureau of Public Information at Washington. A full review of these pictures appeared in our issue of May 25.

The Universal Screen Magazine No. 73 for release May 31 has more than one attractive subject to offer. Among these will be found "Chemistry for the Kiddies" in which they are taught the secrets of the making of soap and also ink; "Planting for the Future Generation," showing the rearing of trees from seed and also the planting of the partly grown trees; and "On the Trail of the Sea Cow, or Manati."

The Educational Films Corporation are about to present a series of remarkable pictures photographed in Mexico. These pictures are probably the first truly illuminative moving pictures that have come to us from Mexico, and will be greatly appreciated by the average audience.

Raw Film Exports Show Increase

Statistics of First Nine Months of Fiscal Year Also Indicate Falling Off of Exposed Stock.

AN increase in the exports of raw film is shown in statistics gathered by the Department of Commerce at Washington for the first three quarters of the fiscal year 1918, as compared with those of the corresponding period of 1917. Exports of exposed film, on the other hand, continue to fall off, although the greatly increased costs of this film have kept the value from falling as heavily as the quantity.

During the nine months ended with March, 1918, exports of raw stock amounted to 35,887,793 feet, valued at $917,591, as compared with 27,124,283 feet, valued at $691,791, for the same period of 1917. Exports of exposed film amounted to 35,887,793 feet, worth $4,117,316, against 92,561,725 feet, with a value of $4,975,134 in 1917.

Of the countries to which this exposed film went only one, Canada, showed an increase over 1917. That country, which in 1917 took 10,186,214 feet, with a value of $781,911, this year took 12,132,861 feet, valued at $909,206.

France and Italy showed heavy losses. The former took but 1,468,884 feet, valued at $149,135, this year, against 4,533,404 feet, worth $246,947, last year. Italy took but 1,704,199 feet, worth $49,274, this year, although last year she took 12,273,003 feet, with a value of $326,584.

The United Kingdom this year took but little more than half of the footage imported from this country last year, but the rising costs kept the value up pretty well. The total last year 23,313,168 feet, was worth $1,765,812, but this year's total of 12,046,393 feet was worth much more per foot, the aggregate value being $1,218,927.

Newfoundland and Labrador show a greatly decreased consumption of American films, this year's imports being only 666,418 feet, value at $15,214, while last year the provinces absorbed 1,495,370 feet, valued at $76,119. Australia, also, cut her imports by nearly 50 per cent., taking but 3,589,605 feet valued at $279,463, against last year's total of 6,726,470 feet, worth $501,724.

A decrease in quantity was more than offset by higher prices in the film exported to other and unspecified countries. The total of such exports this year was 30,833,153 feet, against 34,034,096 feet, but the value was $1,496,097 against $1,276,037.

Imports of raw stock and of positive film for the first three-quarters of the fiscal year show an increase, according to the statistics, but those of negatives exhibit a decrease. The total imports of sensitized unexposed film during that period amounted to 41,491,333 feet, valued at $638,548, as compared with 30,220,240 feet, valued at $471,623, during the corresponding period of 1917, and 48,988,080 feet, worth $607,058 in 1916. It will be noted that here, too, the increased costs more than offset the decreased quantity, comparing the imports of 1916 with those of 1918.

Negatives imported, although less than in 1917, were greater, both in quantity and value, than those of 1916, when the total was 602,444 feet, valued at $144,616. In 1917, imports of negatives amounted to 776,256 feet, with a value of $423,565, which this year fell to 619,714 feet, worth $1[illegible]3.

Positive film imported this year amounted to 2,761,272 feet, valued at $133,433. This was slightly lower in quantity, but higher in value than the imports of the first three quarters of 1917, which totaled 2,788,761 feet, with a value of $126,520, and much lower than the imports of 1916—5,456,205 feet, valued at $181,344.

British Notes

By J. B. Sutcliffe.

"IS THE close-up being overdone?" The question has been precipitated into discussion in the trade and press innumerable times of late. It originated, I believe, about Christmas time in the comment of a member of the London Exhibitors' Association, who was showing a four-reel drama with thirty-three "close-ups." The exhibitor thought a real injustice had been done to him by the way he ventilated his objection which in its career through the industry has gathered impetus and encountered restraint alternately. Some of the objections are rather curious and their diversity weakens their power as an argument. "The close-up is almost a fetish with certain American producers," says one well-known London showman, "and tends to exaggerate the emotions of the actor." Another does not like to see the make-up on the faces of the players. To this last remark a lady exhibitor added the delightful remark "it does destroy the effect of natural beauty of the features obtained at stage distance."

But by far the prevalent view inclines that the close-up is a first-class excuse for padding, and this accusation brings up the exhibitors' controversy of three years ago. Then, it was the superfluous sub-title. Six feet was considered too much for a short sub-title, so manufacturers reduced to five, some to four and a few to three. Now comes the sequel. The Kinema Commission recommended titles of sufficient length to enable children to read them without eye strain and Will Barker propounded a set scale of lengths for the guidance of manufacturers. A similar counter-complaint might conceivably follow the abolition of the close-up. The close-up is admittedly an elaboration, but not infrequently a necessary one. "Intolerance" would be very obscure shorn of some of its close-ups.

One of the minor worries of exhibitors centers around the poster. The first order issued by the Paper Commission has been considerably altered by various additions and revisions sufficient to demand a new interpretation. One of these made in October last restricted the size of posters advertising films to a four-sheet and only one poster for each film could be exhibited on public billboards. In November a supplementary regulation was brought into force permitting the unrestricted use of posters providing the size did not exceed a four-sheet and that the posters were in stock before March, 1917. This left the exhibitor wondering what will happen when films of recent date have to be advertised. Clearly another revision will be necessary, meanwhile a branch of the Exhibitors' Association in the northern counties has resolved to discontinue, for a time, the use of posters anywhere except for lobby displays.

This is truly the day of the topical film. The average English moving-picture program is now composed of 20 to 30 per cent. topical subjects excluding the multi-reel special war features issued by the War Office. There are occasions when a single reel topical provides bill matter as attractive a bait to the public appetite as the finest super-feature. A case in point was the release of a thousand-foot scenic of Jerusalem the week of its capture by Film Booking Offices, the Essanay-Kalem-Biograph exchange. The lightning demand employed scores of copies. Another excellent and novel use of the topical, evolved by Arthur Northam, of the London Film Co., but now engaged at the Department of Information, gives the lie to enemy airmen's claims of damaging architectural London in conclusive fashion. After any particularly thrilling description in the "Zeitungs" or "flying-sheets" behind the Rhine of the destruction of buildings or thoroughfares in the Metropolis the irrefutable evidence of the Kinema camera is now immediately placed before the provinces and distant cities. Major Paul Kimberley is responsible for their distribution and the hustle in which he accomplishes his task was exemplified in a recent raid. The film was taken the day after the visitation and 48 hours later was on show with the German press claims included at Scottish picture theaters.

The deliberations of the Kinema Commission, the tribunal appointed by the National Counsel of Public Morals to investigate charges made against moving pictures are already bearing good fruit, but none better than the following: "After giving due consideration to the excellent report of the commission on the question of Kinema theaters and their influence on the young we have come to the conclusion that there are no grounds for general condemnation and that the adverse reports were much exaggerated. . . . The Church Army now realizes the great value of the kinematograph and its far-reaching possibilities for the highest educational purposes." The author of this tribute is the Rev. Prebendary Carlile, secretary of the Church Army, a sworn and active enemy of the moving picture a year ago. The spirit in which the admission is made as embodied in a letter to the Exhibitors' Association, London Branch, is all the more creditable to the organization from whence it originates and more so in view of an accompanying expression of regret for any annoyance the attitude of the Church Army may have caused the kinema trade.

London renting establishments have, during the past six months, experienced a small but perceptible improvement in the condition and treatment of prints returning from engagements. Toward the close of last year the film anarchist became such a spectre to the exchangemen that the exhibitor who required a new copy had often to give a guarantee. The chief and most dangerous type was the hole-punching maniacs, usually a victim of incompetence, a man or youth hurriedly taught the rudiments of operating to relieve a man called up for service and left to discover for himself the fact that projection is a distinct and complicated branch of science. Believing him a victim of genuine ignorance some of our leading exchanges commenced a publicity campaign exclusively for his benefit. One of the most effective appeals I saw was in the form of a label for film cases in transit. A picture of a masked man pointing a shooting-iron at the person opening the case. The illustration orders three fiends to hold up their hands: firstly, the hole-punching fiend; secondly, the oil fiend, and thirdly, the perforation fiend.

Indian Notes

By S. B. Banerjea.

THE Indian cinema bill has at last been passed into law. The bill had been circulated among the provincial governments and administrations and the leading public bodies for opinion. The select committee duly considered their opinion and submitted their report. At a recent meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council, on Sir William Vincent's motion, the said committee's report was taken into consideration. He said the report was unanimous. He declared that the bill would come into operation in July next, as the machinery to carry it into effect would not be ready till then. The Honorable Mr. Ayangar observed that the bill was giving a blank cheque to the executive. There was not a word in it to show what was to be considered objectionable. He moved an amendment. In reply Sir William Vincent said that the bill had been carefully considered by the select committee. If the amendment was accepted it would impair the utility of the bill. He reminded that the board, which would be the final authority, would not consist of one man, but contain a strong body of non-officials. The amendment was withdrawn. The Honorable Mr. Khaharde, in moving his amendment, said he looked upon the bill as putting a limitation on public liberty. The bill was something like preventive action under the criminal procedure code. He argued that the word "suitable" was not properly defined. He strongly maintained that appeals from the decision of the board should lie with the high courts. Sir William Vincent said whether a film was suitable or not was scarcely a matter of judicial decision. The judges would not have the materials before them to guide them in their decisions. They would also not be willing to undertake it. There was absolutely no curtailment of public liberty, and the fears of the mover were somewhat exaggerated. The final authority was the local government and not the high court. The amendment was put and negatived. The bill as amended was then passed. The act will come into operation from July next. In the meantime the local governments will form boards of film censors and frame rules governing the working of cinema theaters, etc.

Your readers will shortly have an opportunity of seeing a rather unique film. Colonel Milne, I. D. F., of Bombay, is going to the U. S. A. to show his Mesopotamia films and deliver lectures on behalf of the funds of the war for the sick and wounded. Mr. Milne recently showed his film at the Theater Royal to a crowded house. His narrative was fully appreciated. It is to be regretted that he did not arrange to screen the film at one of the Indian theaters. He would then have materially benefited his fund.

The Bijou theater has exhibited the following films to crowded houses: "The Greatest Power," "Stranger from Somewhere," "Ultus and the Three-Button Mystery," "It is Always the Woman," "Trail of the Shadow," "Facing the Music," "Tarantula," "Little Meena's Romance," "The Country That God Forgot," "The Social Secretary" and "The Field of Honor." They have also screened the universal screen magazine and a number of excellent American comics.

* * *

At his Picture Palace Mr. Madan has shown the following: "Miss Jackie of the Navy," "Romeo and Juliet," "The Challenge," "Eternal City" and a large number of American comics.

At his Cornwallis theater we have seen "The Ludora Mystery" serial. Another serial, "The Goddess," is now being screened to overcrowded houses.

At his Ripon theater we have seen "Not Guilty," "The Cowardly Way" and a serial, entitled "Our Mutual Girl."

At his Albion we have seen Chaplin's "Count," "Enchantress" and several two-part comics. "The Shielding Shadow" is now being screened. The theater being a small one this film is also being shown at the Picture Palace and at the Ripon.

The Presidency theater authorities have become formidable rivals of Madan. They are screening "Jimmy Dale," a film never shown in Calcutta before. Every Sunday they exhibit one or other of the old favorites—"Liberty," "Peg o' the Ring," "Trey o' Hearts," etc. They are acting in co-operation with Mr. Ardeshir of the Bioscope theater, where every Sunday one has an opportunity of seeing a complete serial from 11 a. m. to 7 p. m., plus singing and dancing by native girls—all for eight annas (16 cents).

The Picture House people have shown us "Max Comes Across," "When Woman Hates," new Protea series in twelve parts, "Playdell Mystery," "Fantastic Ship" and the "Eternal City."

* * *

The authorities of the Theater Royal have opened their cinema season. They have already screened a number of excellent American films like "The Barren Gain," "The Knotted Cord," and so on. Serials seem to be taboo to them.

* * *

The Cinema Palace is doing well. I would advise its management not to screen old serials, but to purchase new ones. The advertisers of the "Moving Picture World" have many exeellent things to offer. These should be secured, and I dare say the management will have the satisfaction of seeing overcrowed houses.

* * *

The Empire theater authorities lately started what they styled "cinematinees." I regret to say that some of the films exhibited by them did not at all please me and several of my friends, whom I induced to see them. They can well take a leaf out of the books of the Bijou people.

* * *

I should advise American film makers to explain purely American words on the films. "By Heck" and similar American expressions are not understood here. So far I have seen the makers of the "Liberty" film explain the Mexican word "gringoes" on the screen. Films are intended for universal, not home, exhibition. When such is the case, why give cause for grumbling?

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Bad for Airdomes.

YEARS ago W. S. Gilbert wrote that a policeman's life is not a happy one. Were he writing Pirates of Penzance to day he probably would have added that it was not to be considered alongside the lot of the Motion Picture Exhibitor. War taxes and rising costs have helped to make the exhibitor's lot not one of ease, and now comes the daylight-saving law to kick the bottom and all four sides out of the airdome. No one wants to go to an outdoor showing of pictures at half-past seven, even though the clocks may declare that it is half-past eight, and at half-past seven, normal time, it is far too early to show pictures, at least with a normal screen and under the usual conditions. But much can be done to make the best of the matter by making the daylight pictures a novelty, and it may even be possible to give matinees in the airdomes. The best investment would be one of the so-called "daylight" screens, and of those we have seen the ones with the ribbed surface seem to give the best results. If it can be arranged to project from behind the screen, so much the better, taking the proper precaution to get the film so that the leaders will be displayed normally to the audience. The ribbed translucent screen and the projection from the rear, with a shadow box in front are the ideal condition, but something can be done with usual front projection and the ordinary screen if care is taken to arrange the details properly. First of all, the naked screen may not be used. This must be masked in with black cloth, either a flaring shadow box of unglazed black cloth or a wooden frame painted a dead black, or a succession of drops may be used, each opening rather larger than that next nearest the screen, or the entire stage may be painted a solid black, top, sides and floor. More than this, a shelter should be built out as far as possible toward the audience, and this, too, painted black inside; the idea being to get the screen in as deep a shadow as possible. The western side of the seating space should be screened to shut out as much as possible the light of the setting sun, and, if possible, there should be a black or dark blue awning to go over the seat section until darkness comes. Then work the papers and the billboards and all the other advertising mediums you employ to boom the "daylight" pictures, and make all the capital you can out of what at present looks like a misfortune. Use redoubled efforts to capture the automobile trade, and leave no stone unturned to get and hold business. You may not make as much money as you have in previous years, but if you make money instead of losing some, you are at least that much better off.

Invitations.

A mid-west exhibitor writes to the Chicago office—which is not correct—that he has bought a couple of houses and wants to open one of them with a proper flourish. His letter reads:

> Having bought the Opera House and Eagle theatre here I am renovating and redecorating them, and I wish to give a formal opening to the Opera House. Will have some noted players in pictures, present carnations, cigars, etc., and would like to have you send me the form of invitation I should use. Should I put admission prices in the invitation? Could it be worded, "To meet Mary Garden in such and such a play," or whatever star I have? I should like help with my advertising besides what I get through the World. Have you a book on that subject?

Most assuredly we have a book on that subject, and for several years the advertisement of the same has been run at the end of this department every week, and yet only lately one of the oldest readers of the department was surprised to know that there was such a volume as Picture Theater Advertising. He got a copy and wrote back that there was enough material in the volume to keep him supplied for the next five years.

But we take it that this exhibitor may have his house open before he can send for the book, and others than he will be interested in the general subject of invitations. But is it an invitation or an announcement that this correspondent asks for? It makes a lot of difference. An announcement tells the prospective patron that the house will be open on a certain date and solicits his patronage. This is frankly an advertisement, and there is no objection to the statement of the scale of prices; indeed, this is a part of the announcement to be considered essential. On the other hand, an invitation is a request that the recipient be the guest of the management on what is intended to be a notable occasion, and here the prices of admission should be dropped as in bad taste, just as would be a statement that a wedding breakfast was to be supplied by a caterer at $1.35 a plate. A lot of cards we have seen lately have erred in this matter. On the other hand, there is no objection to an envelope insert announcing the house policy and the scale of admission. It would be better, however, to let this be given out at the house the opening night.

Invitations should be done in imitation of those issued for social events. Preferably they should be of a size to go into a square envelope, and may be either a double fold sheet of paper, printed on one face only, and folded once, or else a stiff card, just fitting the envelope and matching its container. The invitation itself may be used to gain admission, but it is better form to issue a smaller card, admitting one or two persons, or to issue as many cards, each good for a single admission, as the judgment of the exhibitor dictates. The cards or sheets should be printed in imitation of copper plate, but should not be printed in Old English, Flemish, Cloister or similar face. These types are obsolete. They have been replaced by Typo, Copperplate Gothic, a legible script, or any one of the growing family of "shaded" faces. The text should be simple and done in the third person as:

MR. JOHN JONES
Requests the Pleasure of Your Company at the
O P E N I N G
of the Pickbanks Theater
Monday, March Twenty-first Promptly at half-past eight

This should be accompanied by cards, or else in the lower right-hand corner should be printed, in small letters: "Present this invitation at the door," or "This invitation will admit two if presented at the door."

An anouncement, on the other hand, need not so closely follow the society usage. A greater variety of type faces is permissible since this is merely an advertisement, and while it is best to adhere to the general size of an invitation, a four sheet, if used, may convey the announcement on the first page and use the other three pages for an elaboration of the house policy, a list of coming attractions, or anything else the exhibitor may require. The general form of an announcement may be:

MR. JOHN JONES
Begs to Announce the Opening of the Pickbanks Theater
Monday evening, March 21
The opening attraction will be
MARY GARDEN
In her greatest and most picturesque operatic success
T H A I S
For this special feature the prices will range from fifteen to fifty cents
Matinees, 10 or 15 —Regular Prices— Evenings, 10, 15 or 25

In this case the recipient is not invited since the invitation implies the relation of host and guest.

Fictitious invitations—"To meet Miss Garden" or some other star—should not be used for an opening but after the house has been running, and then prices should be stated to make certain that the recipient does not regard it as a real invitation instead of an advertising novelty.

From a New Angle.

Here is the old "phonograph record" argument from a new angle, A. L. Middleton, of the Queen, De Queen, Ark., is going to have one twenty-five cent day each week, and he starts his announcement in this fashion:

FOR THE SAME REASON that the grocer keeps two kinds of coffee, two grades of canned peas and two grades of flour, we
DIVERSIFY OUR PROGRAM
That's why we are establishing a super de luxe feature day once a week.

It is easy enough to tell that one picture show costs more than another and so must be offered at an increased admission, but when you translate that fact into the terms of the corner grocery, you are far more likely to be understood. Everyone knows that the grocer has two or more brands of flour at different prices, and they know why. They can apply the same reasoning to the pictures if the reference is suggested to them. Mark this paragraph of Mr. Middleton's for future reference.

Mr. Middleton writes:

> I get so much good from the Advertising for Exhibitors' Department of the World that I would feel that I was a slacker if I did not send in my stuff. If a line of it should prove worth while to some exhibitor through your columns as many a line from the other fellow's has to me I would feel well repaid.

We wish some other slackers would read and note.

Ahoy!

H. B. Hearn, of the Old Mill, Dallas, Texas, sends in a photograph of his street display for "The Submarine Eye." The crowd of sailors standing by will give an idea of the unusual length of the structure, but the United States has no "U-Boats." Only Germany has "U-Boats" (unterseas), the initial being used for the generic term. Other nations letter their boats according to type or series, but none has gotten down as far as U in the progress. The house was oddly decorated. Above the marquise a painting showed the surface of the sea, with sailing boats and the rest of the marine scenery. The lobby itself was decorated with underwater stuff except for the box office, which was a pilot house, with a "real" wheel and other details. Green lights were used to suggest sub-surface illumination, and the watch bells were struck and called every half hour. Green lights were also used in the auditorium, and the house attendants were dressed in nautical uniforms. The scale of admission was worded "First Cabin, Lower Deck, Upper Deck and Steerage." It was a very consistent working out of the scheme, and will suggest ideas to others who may get this film later.

Paramount's Convertibles.

Here is a sketch of the new Famous Players-Lasky stock twenty-fours that are to be used for the stars, with the addition of a special sheet for the current attraction. The announcement says that the special is an eight sheet, but the space looks more like a six. At any rate these will be issued for each attraction, and are to be pasted in the upper right-hand corner. Houses having storage room could get up a set of twenty-eight sheet boards, one for each star, varnish down the stock sheets and work this very nicely; but we think that the artist made a mistake in planning the design so that a twenty-four has to be bought with the additional cost of the six or eight sheet. It could have been arranged to have the eight supplement a stock sixteen, to be pasted as a whole. The idea is good, but it might have been made more practical with a little thought, as we get the idea. At any rate it provides a twenty-four for practically all Paramounts and Artcrafts.

Too Ornamental.

A. E. Ableson, press agent for the Zelda, Duluth, Minn., says such nice things about this department that we are sorry to have to chuck a couple of small rocks at his work that he asks for an opinion on, "no matter if it be good or bad. It is by such methods that we find our faults and try to keep from repeating them again." That's the right way to look at it, but too many who send in seem to want all praise and no criticism. Mr. Ableson's faults are easily dropped. He has only to hold up his right hand and solemnly swear that he is not going to use so much trick stuff and he will be headed on the right track. We show three two-column advertisements, running from six to eight inches deep. The one on the left is the best of the three because it is the simplest and most easily read. We get at the first look the house, the star and the title of her play. To a slight extent the ornamental border cuts the star from her play, but the three panels hook together fairly well. The middle cut is poor. The name of Mary Pickford will pull harder than that supposedly ornamental frame, yet this is obscured by lining and the title, for which few care. It is given much more prominence than the name of the star. That frame has no business being there, and the line portrait of Miss Pickford gives her the expression of the leading soubrette with a turkey burlesque show. We don't know where this cut material came from—possibly from Paramount—but it never should have been used. Plain type-set advertisements are infinitely to be preferred to such poor work. Probably some hard-working and well-meaning printer sat up nights to make that easel for the right-hand display, but he need not have taken the trouble. It serves only to confine the text instead of displaying it. We give another example—a three fives. Here, too, a mad passion for fluffy stuff discloses itself. Good advertising is good argument well displayed. Ornamental rule work is NOT good advertising. It is merely a waste of money unless it helps to gain a better display than can be had from straight type, and here the rule work is detrimental rather than helpful. A Pickford picture can still draw on the strength of the star's name. Give that name plainly, tell something of interest about the play, and it will not be necessary to use libelous portrait cuts or type material to gain attention. Now and then a great deal can be done with panels and rule and border in general, and we have shown some excellent results in various samples reproduced in this department, but this sort of thing should be used sparingly unless it is certain that the effect of the advertisement will be enhanced. From the enthusiastic endorsements of the play we gather that Mr. Ableson has the bad habit of announcing each offering as the greatest ever since one advertisement announces that this is "Greater than 'Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm'; greater than 'Stella Maris.'" And another says that when the history of the screen is written "Amarilly" "will be the standard by which historians will judge all Mary Pickford pictures." This is plain rot. If a standard is sought it will be found in some of those old Biographs, when Miss Pickford was an actress and not merely a star.

Mr. Hyman's Latest.

Edward Hyman, of the Victoria, Buffalo, has dug up another make-up scheme. It may add a couple of dollars to the cost of the program, but if it adds more dollars than that to the box office statement it doesn't seem a bad investment. Assuredly, novelty make-up does help a house bring out its good points, and will catch the eye where a more orthodox make-up would be passed over unnoticed. Another thing in the program is one that should be read with thought by other exhibitors.

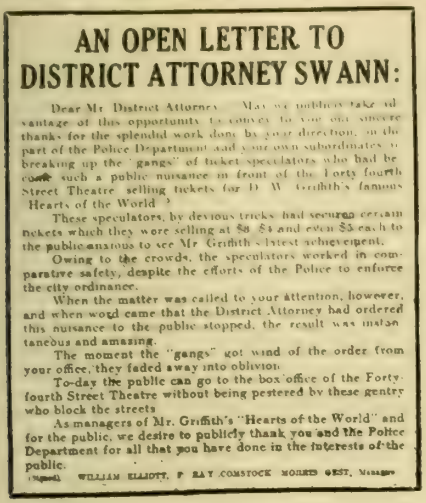
Establish a few new favorites before the old ones grow stale. This is run as a footnote to the program for the day Miss Reubens appears.

NOTE. I am introducing Miss Reubens, knowing that too much exhibition of the old favorites wears off their attractiveness often. It is my desire to present all the "finds" of the season, and Miss Reubens, I believe, is the one this year. E. L. HYMAN, Manager.

We do not like quite as well a reference to the late Vernon Castle in connection with Mrs. Castle's appearance. This is not in good taste.

Readers for "Hearts."

Elliott, Comstock & Gest, who are handling Griffith's "Hearts of the World," are using readers in the New York papers somewhat along the lines of the appeals used by the Fox press department to boom "The Honor System." The cut shows the regular advertisement, $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches, single column, which gives the detail, and the double column, five-inch space, the latter being run directly about the house advertising. This



AN OPEN LETTER TO DISTRICT ATTORNEY SWANN:
Dear Mr. District Attorney: May we publicly take advantage of this opportunity to convey to you our sincere thanks for the splendid work done by your direction, on the part of the Police Department and your own subordinates in breaking up the "gangs" of ticket speculators who had become such a public nuisance in front of the Forty fourth Street Theatre selling tickets for D. W. Griffith's famous Hearts of the World."
These speculators, by devious tricks had secured certain tickets which they were selling at $3, $4 and even $5 each to the public anxious to see Mr. Griffith's latest achievement.
Owing to the crowds, the speculators worked in comparative safety, despite the efforts of the Police to enforce the city ordinance.
When the matter was called to your attention, however, and when word came that the District Attorney had ordered this nuisance to the public stopped, the result was instantaneous and amazing.
The moment the "gangs" got wind of the order from your office, they faded away into oblivion.
To-day the public can go to the box office of the Forty-fourth Street Theatre without being pestered by these gentry who block the streets.
As managers of Mr. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" and for the public, we desire to publicly thank you and the Police Department for all that you have done in the interests of the public.
(Signed) WILLIAM ELLIOTT, F. RAY COMSTOCK, MORRIS GEST, Managers

example is addressed to the district-attorney, and thanks him for checking the speculators who sold tickets for "$3, $4 and even $5 each" to those who came late, and alludes to the ease with which the speculators transacted their business, "owing to the crowds." The same "even $5 each" was used the day before in a card urging the public to buy in advance at the box office and avoid this extortion. In both instances, beneath the surface reading, was the suggestion that many persons considered this $1.50 attraction worth the $5, which doubtless had no little effect upon the reader, as was intended. It is clever wording. It does not say that the show is worth $5, yet you are made to feel that you are getting for $1.50 what others consider worth much more. In other advertisements the arrival and departure of the producer were announced; he regretted his inability to admit the public to the private showing and regretted that so many were turned away the opening night. There is no direct advertising in any of these readers, but they are the more valuable because there is not. Such advertising, it should be remembered, is good only once in a while; perhaps once or twice a year. It must be personal in its appeal, and it must not be so long continued as to become a joke to the reading public. If these precautions are observed there is no better "just once" way of reaching the public for a special attraction. Ever try it? A few worked it after the Fox examples were shown here, but apparently not very many.

Well Planned.

Here is an advertisement which very narrowly escapes being something extra good. It is six five and a halfs. If the printer had done his work as well as the pressman, or if the pressman had marked his type faces we should have had something better than usual. It is good fight. The highly decorative border, which is well exemplified in some recent Universal advertisements, is growing increasingly popular with advertisement writers; but as a rule only drawn designs should be used and set borders be avoided. There are several reasons for this, the chief being that the design should match the text.

Unusual Publicity.

Poli's theater, Scranton, Pa., recently put out an unusual piece of publicity matter. It is a four-pager, 6 by 9, the front of which carries, in large type, "The Devil Has Resigned," and below, in modest letters, "Compliments of Poli's theater—where shows are better." Inside is a reprint from a western paper of a letter, presumably from the Devil to the Kaiser, resigning in his favor and turning hell over to him a bit prematurely. If the Devil will wait a little while the Kaiser will arrive and take it from him whether he wants to let go or not. The satire is keen and the article will be carried in the pocket for weeks and even months. The back page tells the reader to see "The Slacker" and then go see the recruiting officer. The effect is good, but it would have been even better had the back page carried straight talk about the house, for that advertisement will be carried long after the playing of the Metro film.

The Test.

A good advertisement is not one that looks pretty in the proof or in the paper. It is one that brings all your regular patrons to the house and a couple of new faces in addition. You can make your good advertisements attractive as well, and so make them even better, but pulling power and not pictorial effect should be the first test.

Confidence and Egotism.

CONFIDENCE is one thing and egotism is something very different If you have no confidence in yourself, you probably have no respect for your work, and cannot possibly do justice to what talent you may have, nor properly appraise your work, but even a lack of confidence is not so fatal to your chances of success as egotistical belief that you can do no wrong. The letters we get would seem to suggest that about seventy-five per cent. of the writers are egotistical and ten per cent. lacking in confidence. Only the other day we got a letter from a woman who wanted to know the good markets. She had a story that was "better" than half a dozen she named. It had the Auction Block beaten to rags; it had another story backed off the dock, and so it went. The woman, to judge from her braggart letter, had done no more than take half a dozen recent screen successes, magnify the point of each almost to the verge of caricature, and was ready to offer the whole as something so superior to all recent productions that producers would be fighting to gain possession of the script. She could not realize that she had taken such varying elements of plot that they could not possibly be made to mix. She lacked the knowledge of the art and could not understand that she was offering so much story that, even had it been coherent, the mass of incident would have smothered interest. All she knew was that this and that and the other story had all been successes, and that if she mixed the three and made the elements a little more emphatic, she must have a vastly better product. Not all egotistical writers go to this extreme, but all lack the ability to judge values. Whatever native ability they may possess is rendered valueless by this overconfidence. They cannot select the fairly good from the palpably bad and seek to improve this suggestion into something really good. They have written a story. It must be good because it is the product of their genius. If they see something like it on the screen—as doubtless they will—then the story has been stolen. If it does not sell, it is because editors are envious or stupid. It cannot, by any possibility, be the fault of the story, because it is "better" than the stories after which it has been patterned—and almost always, consciously or unconsciously, the egotist patterns after some recent hit or perhaps makes a grotesque stressed travesty of two or more. Less conceit would enable the would-be writer to see that perhaps too great a stress had been given. Still less conceit would lead the author to make an honest effort to originate and not merely copy. And it is newness of idea which commands the better market. Originality of thought is always at a premium; provided that it is originality and not mere craziness, but there is a too-common belief that originality is extravagance rather than newness of thought. The novice sees a story in which the dissipated father makes a pawn of his beautiful daughter. He pelts home and writes a story in which the same type of father seeks to drive a wholesale trade in from three to half a dozen beautiful and innocent young daughters. Strength has not been gained. There is a greater multiplicity of incident, but it is all tiresome, since the affair of each daughter must, in a general way, follow the lines of the experiences of the other daughters, and the telling of the same story over and over again becomes tiresome. Yet the egotist does not realize this. He has thought of a new development, even better than the original. If it is not immediately snapped up, it is because there is no longer any appreciation of true genius. He may not even realize that we can be sorry for and sympathize with one daughter where we have not the time to become fond of and sorry for all six. On the other hand, the timid author thinks out a plot. He goes to the theater and sees a play. At once he decides that this play is so much better than his own that the latter must be poor. He does not realize that most stories are thin and weak at the early stages of their development. He does not stop to consider that he can build up his idea. He throws it aside and starts on another that may, perhaps, hold his fancy until he again sees some screened play when once more confidence flees to be replaced by discouragement. One writer is in as deplorable a state as the other. One can see no good in his work; the other can see nothing that is bad, but both are handicapped by a lack of judgment that prevents correct appraisal and therefore improvement. Few authors can accurately judge the value of their own work, but all trained writers can tell in a general way if a story is poor or otherwise. There are certain general rules of criticism that apply to the majority of the stories. The rest: the keen appreciation of the finer points, is what marks the difference between the practical writer and the novice. One has learned through experience to judge values; has acquired a standard of measurement. The other is still going through the experiences that will eventually lead to this personal judgment if the exercise is persisted in, for it is only through self-examination that real appraisal may be arrived at. The advice of the average literary critic may be well meant and, to a large degree, accurate, but it is only the opinion of one man or woman, and is influenced by the opinions of that one person, just as a physician may forbid his patients certain foods that disagree with himself, though they may agree perfectly well with the patient. Criticism by rule is mechanical, at best. We hold one criticism that finds a score of faults. When it first came in we took the current magazines and were able to show that every single rule set forth had been violated one or more times in the various printed stories of the month. The rules were all sound and based upon good usage, but each rule is sometimes better broken, and experience alone tells the worker when to abide by the rules and when to break them for the greater good of his story. If the author loses faith in himself and his work he never arrives at the point where he is able to judge his effects and therefore write really good material. He must have confidence, but not be over-confident; modest, and yet not be over-modest. The two extremes can never win.

Our Thanks.

Will the several writers who were good enough to send notes of sympathy please accept our warmest thanks. Their letters were very much appreciated.

Name Values.

Bertie Badger Moyer writes that not long ago a play was returned to her because her name lacked advertising value, and yet she has written more Drew comedies than any other author, and some of them have been above the Drew average. It seems absurd that at this late day an editor should turn back a story simply because the writer was not known to the readers of the magazines, yet it is indicative of the present state of the market. There was a time when people went to see plays of a certain make because they knew that those plays were good. Many writers can recall the Pathe Weeks and the Biograph Weeks of 1910, when the fact that the story was a Pathe or a Biograph was a sufficient guarantee of excellence. Other companies later attained the same standard and maintained their brand as the feature. Today this holds good only to a very limited extent, for the use of fiction material, and the humoring of the directors' eccentricities has made the product even of the best established companies uncertain and uneven. In the early days the companies were more willing to trust to the judgment of their editors. They employed men who were supposed to know, and took their word for its face value. Today the average editor is little more than a script clerk who passes the stories around to the all-important stars and directors for their approval or rejection. He has little authority, and many of the present day editors have little judgment. There is no uniformity in the film product because there is no uniformity in the selection of the scripts. One story is weak, but it is taken because it gives the star a chance. A second is selected because it offers pretty locations, and a third because it has a big punch if no plot. Many stories are written along stereotyped lines because some imperious star will have no other type of story, or perhaps insists upon the work of one writer. The powers that be keep on announcing that the play's the thing, but we get few real plays in spite of that, because the powers that be have small authority over their stars and directors. They may know that good plays are required, but if a $5,000 a week star will not take the play, they must let her have what she wants, and most stars do not want plots. They want a more or less connected series of tableau in which they occupy at all times the central position. It was not so long ago that now and then we got Mary Pickford and Florence Lawrence in the same Biograph production, and they had no voice in the selection of the play, either. Half the time they did not even know what the play was about. They simply did as they were told. Today we need only to be told the name of the star to know that the play will be along certain general lines. There will be little variety at best. The star made a hit in a certain part, and all plays must carry a similar part or go into the discard. There is no reason why the name of the star, the company and the author should not be factors of equal value, and yet stories are being turned down because the author's name has no advertising value. Why not make a few names valuable? It will be cheaper than the star system, at any rate.

Reasons Why.

The Maple Leaf Pictures, of Vancouver, in the magazines has been taking an almost touching interest in the author. Now authors are receiving a circular announcing that J. Arthur Nelson (remember him?) will take a limited number of pupils on installment payments. Of course J. Arthur's book will be the foundation of the system, and there goes three dollars to start with. And he cites "Joseph Pollard, an eighteen year old elevator boy, in a Los Angeles hotel four years ago," who today receives "an income twice that of any public official in B. C." If J. Arthur does not look sharp he is liable to find all the public officials in British Columbia sitting on his doorstep, eager to double their incomes. But we thought that that historic elevator boy's name used to be Posner.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Matters Optical.

Burton Benwell, Los Angeles, California, writes:

> Have been a reader of your department for many years, and having received from it and your Handbooks practically all the projection knowledge I possess, am almost ashamed to admit that I have never written before and tried to help those who have helped me. Have always been an experimenter, particularly with different designs of shutters. I think the fact is established that, given a 3-wing shutter with blades the same distance apart it does not matter what the width of the blades be, provided they all have equal witdh. In other words a shutter thus designed may have blades one, two, three, four or five inches wide without changing the flicker tendency or anything else except amount of light passed. It follows that, this being true, the faster the intermittent movement the more light we may utilize, since the narrower the shutter blades may be. Of course there are objections to fast intermittent speed, but longer tension shoes and more intermittent sprocket teeth engaging the film will lessen them some. As it is now, with slow intermittent movements the projectionist is compelled to speed his projection to eliminate flicker, until the strain on the movement is as great as it would be if materially increased in normal speed. The recently introduced shutter of the Simplex (main blade as wide as necessary, 60° openings on either side of main blade, 60° flicker blades and third opening, opposite main blade, equal to balance of distance) is a large improvement. But even this is far behind the perfectly balanced three-winger, or the once-and-a-half around type. What do you think of the English plan of having both upper and lower sprockets double size? Don't you think that with twice the number of sprocket holes in use pulling film down from upper magazine and withstanding the pull of take-up there would be less damage? In closing let me say that if it were not for the good old Moving Picture World and its Projection Department we projectionists would surely be in a bad way. May the department and its editor be rewarded in every way for keeping up the good work!

As to the shutter blades, I must take issue with you in one point. The ideal shutter is a three-blader (more blades reduce flicker but are impractical), having all wings and all light openings equally spaced and of equal size. As you depart from this condition either way you increase flicker tendency. In other words if you maintain equi-distance between blades, but makes blades of greater or less area than openings you make for flicker, though not so greatly as when you throw the blades themselves out of balance. This is my understanding of the matter . As to you not writing, why I second your views, but will forgive you this time, provided it don't occur again. With regard to the sprocket size, the plan is all right, provided trouble be not encountered through film shrinkage.

Wants Advice.

T. J. Trabue, Biloxi, Mississippi, writes:

> Want your advice as to an outfit for traveling exhibitor. Want to show in school houses and churches where electric current will be available. Will you supply address of maker of most approved outfit for this purpose? Have a Power's 6. Could I equip it with calcium light, or would you advise trading in on a new outfit? What size screen would you advise?

Certainly you can equip your Power's 6 for calcium light, and when so equipped it will be as good an outfit for the purpose as you can get, always assuming it to be in good repair. Will have the Nicholas Power Company send you information as to calcium burner, etc. Use a two-wing shutter with blades considerably more narrow than the regular two-winger. The light is very weak and travel ghost won't show up nearly so easily. Cut out a paper pattern of the two-wing metal blade and install it in place of the metal blade. Then, using a light film (bright sunlight scene with white objects in it), trim down a very little at a time on both sides of the main blade until travel ghost (white streaks up or down or up and down from white objects in the film) appear. A title having white letters on an opaque (black) background is even better for this than a light screen, provided it be one in which there are lines of letters near both top and bottom. Having trimmed down the main blade until travel ghost appears, then, using the paper shutter as a pattern, trim down the main blade of the metal shutter until it is a little wider than the paper blade (a little wider because you trimmed the paper blade until you got travel ghost), and then trim the other metal blade down to match the main blade. This will give you a maximum of light, and every bit of added light is extremely important when using such a weak illuminant. Would advise a metalic surface screen and a picture not to exceed ten feet wide; eight feet wide would give you a brighter picture, but is rather small. Why don't you get one of the new Mazada generating outfits? The United Theater Equipment Company puts out such an outfit, see adv. for address; so also does the Independent Motion Picture Supply Company. These outfits are portable, easily handled and will give you good results.

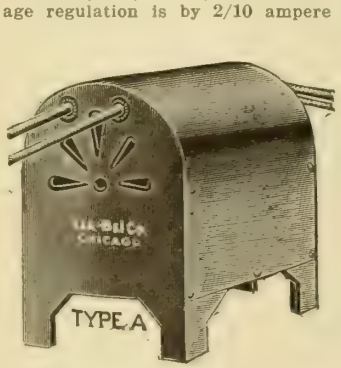
Grease for Small Motors and Electric Fans.

Leonard's specially prepared motor cup grease, sold by up-to-date supply dealers, including the United Theater Equipment Corporation, is an excellent article for use in grease cups of electric fans and small motors. This article has stood the test of time. It is made by the chief electrician of the Nicholas Power Company. and has the recommenadtion and approval of this department and its editor. Don't use oil on small motors or fans. Oil is apt to seep out of the bearings, get into the coils and causes serious damage. A grease is the only thing for such purposes, and the Leonard grease is the best we know of.

The Lea-Bel Transformer.

The Lea-Bel Company, Chicago, is placing on the market, or rather has placed on the market, a new type of Tungsten filament projection lamp controlling device, to be known as the Lea-Bel Transformer. The apparatus consists primarily of a shell type auto-transformer, enclosed in a sheet steel casing, which has ample opening for ventilation. The transformer is sturdily built and is made in three different capacities. It is therefore available for any type or size of Tungsten filament lamp, and for either one or two lamp installation.

The transformer itself is 6x9 inches by 9½ inches high. An integral part of the apparatus is the controlling device, which is in the form of a small wall switchboard, 7x12 inches in size, carrying an ammeter having coarse graduations suitable for reading small changes in the amperage, and a controlling knob which starts the current flowing at 10 amperes, raising it to 12 and then 18. From then on the amperage regulation is by 2/10 ampere steps, there being enough of these



For Two Machines.

For One Machine.

to take care of fluctuations in line voltage from 100 to 125. The switchboard is well built, the contacts being enclosed, and as far as I can see, everything about the apparatus is very well constructed.

The Lea-Bel Company is pushing this apparatus, which is recommended by this department to consumers for their consideration. It seems to be compact, and as well built apparatus of this kind as I have looked at, but it should be clearly understood that the apparatus is not automatic in its operation. It is designed that the switchboard be placed within reach of the projectionsts, and where he can watch the ammeter and by hand regulation compensate for fluctuation in line voltage to keep the amperage steady.

Australia—6,000 Foot Spools.

Mack Langley, North Fitzroy, Melbourne, Australia, says:

It is a goodly while since you have heard from me, but here I am again. In July 21st issue is a letter in which I expressed hopes of securing a new motor drive. As soon as friend boss saw that in the Department he sent for me and gave me an order to buy a motor. Am I a staunch supporter of the department after that? Well, ask Me! Am enclosing photo of my plant. The motor is presumed to be about 10 h. p., but I think eight of them have succumbed to the heat. When I got this billet (Over seas for "job."—Ed.) about 14 months ago the motor would get hot as the hub of His Satanic Majesty's dominions. To remedy this I got a fan and installed it on the shaft between the motor and generator, as shown. Since then I have not had a particle of trouble with heating. I got the idea out of the English publication Kinematograph, which I get every week, in addition to the Moving Picture World. (All right, friend Langley. We don't claim a patent right to ALL the ideas in the world. Every once in a while we let the Other Feller spring one, just to keep him hoped up.—Ed.) You will observe the metal guard over the fan. The guy with his hands down south is the boss, and he is the goods, all right. (Looks it; also I'm predisposed in his favor. Any man who reads this department and then gets busy, as he did, is a frien' o' mine. Shake, friend boss. You're all right.—Ed.) The goof holding his hinges from falling apart is I, Me and Co., Esquire. No, it isn't a silver shilling over my eye—just the sun on my glasses. Couldn't get camera back far enough to show all the generator. The small fan does its bit by keeping the bearing cool. The trouble is, I think, that the motor is too small. There is no rating (we call it name plate.—Ed.) plate attached to motor, and I'm not certain what it is. The generator is a Lanchaster, 100 amperes at 65 volts output (less than 9 h. p.—Ed.) and don't give a bit of trouble. Have just installed a new Power's 6-B and like it very much. I am not much stuck on the automatic loop setter, though. It does a bucking bronco stunt. Followed instructions in your "Bible," and it works better now. But they are mighty good machines all right. Now don't laugh, brother, when I tell you that nearly all of us are getting 6,000 foot spools. (Reels.—Ed.) Phew! What? Yep, and we go right through a 5 or 6 part picture without a stop. And when we are not switching with anybody we take off the ends ("End part I," etc.—Ed.) and the leader (Where it says Part I, etc.), which leaves us just one big reel, with the main title and last-reel tail piece. Between the reels, or parts, we splice in a piece of spacing, marked off so it won't need to be masked as it goes through. (Don't quite understand that last.—Ed.) What is your opinion of it, Brother Richardson? Now don't you fly off the handle and tell us it is hard on film, because it turns easier when full than when empty, and, of course, they are kept in a fireproof spool box. As for taking up, I, personally, have a takeup boy, and when the spacing comes he breaks it and puts on another 14" spool—we only take up on 14" spools. (Do you mean to tell me you put a 6,000 foot reel (spool) in the upper magazine and then rewind it in the lower magazines (takeup) on small reels? I can't see that stunt with a telescope; also if anything happens to your carbons, your lamp or your machine, you are stuck and must switch the whole works to the spare projector, even though you might be right at what would be the end of a reel. Your plan has disadvantages, friend Langley. But I would rather let our U. S. and Canadian projectionists set forth their views than deal with the matter myself.—Ed.) "Switching," at least here in Melbourne, is defined as follows: The city shows (Downtown houses. Ed.) run all the films first. Then they go to the suburban houses. Suburban theaters show only at night, with a Saturday matinee. Well, I get a five part star (meaning feature, I take it. Ed.) and have to run it in my first half. At any rate I start my program at eight, run the Hearst Gazette, which takes until 8.10. Then I put on my star, and as soon as the first two parts are run a motorist takes them to a theater with which I am switching, usually located in a nearby suburb. By the time he gets there, there is about three parts of the second star (feature) off, which he fetches back to me. By then I am about through with my first star, which he takes over and brings back the rest of the second star. As far as our show is concerned we run 12,000 foot programs, starting at eight and finishing about 10.45. (About 72.5 feet per minute. Not so bad.—Ed.) But many shows run up to 16,000 feet in the same time. We usually have a topical, a one or two part comedy and two five-part stars. We change Monday and Thursday. Admission over here is 6p. 1 — 1 6 2 — and one penny war tax for each six pence above the first one. Well, Friend Richardson, I would imagine it would be a bit of consolation to know, after doing the work you have, that there are some crank twisters even in this faraway land who are learning all they can from your department. As for myself, I have gained about fifty per cent. of what I know from you, and expect to gain more. Keep on with the good work, "carry on."

Truly a most interesting letter. Yes, it is encouraging to know that one is really accomplishing something, even in other far-off lands. If I have helped you, Brother Langley, and other projectionists of your country, I have also helped the exhibitors of that country and the motion picture industry, because they are helped in exact proportion as you are made more efficient. Sorry, Old Man, but I can't see the advantage of the 6,000 foot reel, at least the way you boys do it. Then, too, if ever a fire gets into the upper magazine when there is 6,000 feet of film there, g-o-o-d night shirt! Some considerable loss, my boy, quite some considerable loss. And what do you gain in return for the labor of splitting up your reels and incurring additional danger of loss as above? Absolutely nothing at all, so far as I can see, except saving the bother of making the change-overs. Our men here make the change-overs without even the very slightest evidence of the act on the screen. Time and again I have set through a six-reel feature (star, you call 'em) without being able to tell when machines were changed. As to the motor, your installing the ventilation fan was excellent. But unless the motor is working on a cycle of current it was not designed for, or is overloaded, which seems unlikely, as I understand it to be a regular motor generator set, there must be something pretty radically wrong. Would suggest that you go over the General Instructions, pages 368 to 381, of the Handbook; meanwhile I will refer your letter to the office here in New York and ask them to write you, giving any possible suggestions. Seems to me such extreme program length is unwise. We don't do it over here. Many theaters with an 8,000 foot program are getting 15, 25 and even 50 cents here in New York City. My best to you, Brother Langley, and to all my Australian friends. Come again. Glad to have you call!

Do the Job Right.

Sidney P. Levy, Pensacola, Florida, says:

Am about to open an air garden for the showing of high closs pictures during the coming summer. Air garden site will be occupied by a new theater I am to build in almost five months Am very anxious to know just what sort of material to construct the air garden screen from. It will be exposed, hence must withstand the elements. It has occurred to me that a wood frame covered with canvas, properly sized and calcimined, would serve. I did think of sheet tin, soldered together very closely and then painted. I want a screen which will give good projection results. Will build a shadow box of thin lumber, painted black. I guess you will agree with this.

Yes, you could build a frame, cover it with canvas, size the canvas and paint, not calcimine, it. Calcimine would wash off when it rained, or at least discolor badly, unless thoroughly protected from the wet. I would refer you to "The Airdome," pages 669 to 674, the Handbook. But if you had a copy you would not have had to ask questions. My advice is to do the job right. You propose giving "high class pictures." Well, to do that you MUST have a good screen. One comparatively cheap way is to build a frame of wood, back it with rough lumber and nail thereto, running up and down, 1½" furring strips, upon which you nail ordinary wooden lath. Now plaster this foundation with two coats of strong cement mortar, or with lime mortar strongly tempered with cement, the last coat troweled down smooth. Paint this three coats as follows: First coat white lead mixed with boiled linseed oil and just a little turpentine. Second coat: white lead mixed with half boiled linseed oil and half turpentine. Third coat: either all white lead or half white lead and half white zinc, mixed one-third boiled linseed oil yand two-thirds turpentine. Use enough ultramarine blue in last coat to give the paint quite a distinct blue tint while in the pot. It will then be dead white on the wall. Box the screen at sides and top with a shadow box at least six feet deep, flaring outward at sides, but almost flat at top, painted dead black inside, black to extend right up to the picture, and you will have a really good airdome screen. Tin will almost surely show the seams, no matter how well put together.

From the Southland.

George L. McBath, Press Secretary Local Union 321, Tampa, Florida, having first addressed the Chair, secured recognition and made his bow, addresses the assembly as follows:

Local Union 321 has elected the following officers for coming year: President, W. E. Sullivan; vice-president and business agent, Robert Lane; secretary-treasurer, W. J. Paleveda; press secretary, George McBath. The writer has been honored by the Mayor, who appointed him to the Examining Board to fill the vacancy caused by retirement of Manual Nosti (your old friend and mine) from the movie game. (Not so, or at least he has re-entered it and is now projecting pictures in your city if I am rightly informed. Ed.) The writer will serve on the board with City Electrician Bartholomew and Mr. Kane, manager Alcazar theater. Local 321 has on its honor roll the following: Harry Kerr, Navy; Sisto Lopez, Army; John Fethi, Navy; George Griffith Navy, and Ben Lanes, Army. They have all joined with intent to help in final celebration in Berlin.

Both myself and Brother Crespo, my brother projectionist at the Strand, are readers of the department, and frankly we would not be without it. I also have the late edition of the Handbook and depend on it and the department to show me the what for and why. I own the only Third Edition Handbook in Tampa, and consider that fact an honor. The bunch here wishes to tell you that there is a standing invitation to yourself, the man who alone is fighting so bravely for the projectionist, to visit Tampa.

Just one thing, Brother McBath, with regard to your official position (congratulations, by the way); as examiner you are an officer of the law and there can be absolutely NO partiality shown by you in your official capacity as between a union and an non-union man. I know of one or two instances where unions have secured the appointment of a member to the local Board of Examiners and have then demanded that he shut out all non-union men by an examination so stiff they could not pass. Please understand that I do not for one moment think that either you or Local 321 would countenance any such procedure. I speak only to warn you against even an unconscious leaning against the non-union man. The unionizing of the man is up to the local. You as an officer of the law can have absolutely nothing to do with that.

Wants to Know If It Will Work.

J. P. Sarvis, Hedley, Texas, says:

> Am thinking of connecting a 45 h. p., 4 cylinder auto engine to my 5 k. w. 125 volt generator direct. Do you think it would be O. K.? Am now using an 8 h. pr. single cylinder engine, with batteries and vibrator. Am 65 feet from the Albastine screen. Get a good picture, though had quite a time getting dark ghost out of center of screen. Finally built extension to machine table so could get lamphouse six inches further back, and friend ghost departed. We are using a Model 1A Motiograph. Have put on late model shutter; also late model star, cam and fly wheel. Do we need a new machine?

That I cannot say with certainty. Very good results can be had from an old type machine, if it be kept in first-class shape, handled intelligently and modernized so far as possible. Broadly, considering the excellence and cost of modern photoplays, it pays to keep up to date in projection equipment. But to say definitely with regard to an individual case I would have to know all the circumstances. There is no reason why the engine you name will not operate the generator all right, but whether or not it will do so when direct connected will depend on whether you can make the engine run at approximately the speed at which the generator is made to operate. Find out your generator's normal speed (should be marked on name plate) and then test your engine under load, which may be done by using a speed indicator.

Makes His Own Juice.

F. D. Tallman, Converse, Indiana, sends in subscription and says:

> Am located in a small place and business none the best, but think I am putting on the best and clearest picture in the state. At least I have been told so by traveling men. Make my own juice with 5 k. w. (60 amperes), 115 volt generator, pulled by an 8 h. p. gasoline engine. It bucks sometimes, but on the whole I don't have much trouble, and she certainly does produce the light. But one thing puzzles me. With nothing but my arc on it is all the engine can do to pull the load until everything gets warmed up. Then it works easy. Think I have too much of a generator and too much resistance to cut it to 60 volts. Perhaps one reason is that the generator runs 1,150 r. p. m.

If your dynamo only generates 115 volts, and is a 115 volt machine, that indicates correctness in speed. Very likely you are using too little resistance. You say "she certainly does produce the light." Well, quite probably that is the answer. Fifty amperes at 115 volts is approximately 8 h. p., the capacity of your engine. Now suppose your resistance is such that when it is hot it just delivers to the arc electrical energy which, added to its own consumption of energy, equals the capacity of your engine. Working against a given voltage a rheostat delivers very considerably more current when cold than when it is hot, and the total electrical energy is equal to amperage times voltage (generator voltage). If your rheostat delivers 50 amperes when hot (generator voltage 115), then the normal generator output is 115 x 50, or 5,750 watts, or about 8 h. p., but if it delivers 60 amperes when cold, then that is 115x60, or 6,600 watts, which is more than one added h. p. Do you see the point?

Tinhorn Operator.

Joe Welch, Brooklyn, N. Y., sends in examples of film "spliced" by means of brass paper binder thrust through, and several poor cement patches. He says, in part:

> Enclosed are shining examples of perfect (?) inspection. The fact that it was an old print does not excuse such utterly rotten inspection, which, it seems to me, is a crime. The abuse of the film itself was doubtless perpetrated by some tinhorn projectionist, whose rank incompetency would qualify him to "operate" a No. 2 shovel in a sewer, rather than a projector. The projectionist has every right to suppose his "show" has been inspected and is ready for projection when received from the exchange. (Right.—Ed.) You can imagine what would happen when the paper backet came along and tried to dive through the projector. You will do me a great favor by forwarding attached envelope of film faults to Trimmer main office.

Can't accommodate. You have sent no data such as date of receipt name of subject or even exchange received from. The splices are an outrage, but quite possibly some half baked and half paddy was the guilty party. But anyhow this does not excuse the lack of inspection, and either you can execute the exchange sending film in that shape without warning of non inspection.

Cannot Recommend Them.

The Elpaso Film Service, El Paso, Texas, by James C. Quinn, send in some film patches, together with the following letter:

> Attached at least is something new under the sun. What do you think of a film exchange which will feature freak splices such as these? Surely they must be pretty nearly out of legitimate selling arguments. These artistic endeavors come up from Mexico.

The splices are just like any others, except that they are made diagonal. The cut starts below a sprocket hole and runs across to between the third and fourth hole further up on the other side. I cannot recommend them. They are bad, because if adopted and a projectionist happened to put them together the wrong way there would most likely be a split film, caused by the sharp point coming loose and catching on an idler. Also a stiff patch of this sort would make an awful row going through, and probably would cause the film to crawl on the sprocket. "Freak" is right, Brother Quinn.

New Quarters.

The Examining Board for Motion Picture Machine Operators, New York City, recently sent an invitation to the editor to visit its new quarters. When they mentioned the thirty-fourth floor I thought they were kidding me, but there is where it is allright—34th floor, count em, 34, the Municipal Building, in Park Row, by Brooklyn Bridge. And you may take it from me, the new quarters have real class. A whole floor of the tower is set apart for Chief Examiner Brown and his inquisitors, not forgetting Peaches, the clerk. And you can just naturally see almost all over creation from that high spot. Congratulations, Brothers Brown and Coghlan. I'm thinking strongly of going after your jobs myself. Thirty-fourth floor, a view of the world and monarch of all you survey. Huh! Incidentally, Chief Examiner Brown told me my article on the Vancouver examination equipment helped him a lot in getting additional and needed equipment for the New York Board. I will describe the new home in detail when it is all fixed up.

Possible Seat of Trouble.

Some time ago several samples of film were sent in from various sections of the country, all showing the same damage, viz., chipped sprocket holes, one on side of the film only. In one case of this sort of damage, in which the Power's machine was the guilty wretch, it was found that the small bushing next the guide roller at the left on top of gate was set so as to push the roller over toward the right 1/32" too far, which caused the film to be out of line with the intermittent sprocket. This resulted in chipping the sprocket holes on the right side. The Power's Company have, so I understand, changed their gate in such way that this cannot again occur.

From an Old Friend.

Manual Nosti, Tampa, Florida, an old correspondent of the department, who we thought had crawled back into the hole and pulled the whole hole in after him, makes his bow with a request that we start another series of questions.

Glad to hear from you, friend Nosti. Would start the republication of the series, but have not the room. It is very difficult to take care of the mail in the space at our disposal. With one page used up in questions and answers I would be in a mess indeed.

Grinding Down Condenser Lenses.

Perry Sherman, Corpus Christi, Texas, says that he has had condensers ground down and repolished. Says it is not expensive, and that in this way a good lens which has become pitted may be saved.

Certainly, it could be done, but I doubt if it would pay. Of course there is the advantage that the resultant lens would be not only as good as new, but better, in that it would be seasoned and not so apt to break. The number of times it could be ground would depend on the thickness of its edge.

From the 351st Aero Squadrom.

Aviation Camp, Waco, Texas,

Department, Motion Picture Photography,
Motion Picture World.

Well, here I am at last. Put me down on the correspondence club list and I will try to keep up with the amount of letters I am looking forward to. I may have some interesting matter to tell the boys in the near future, and feel we should get acquainted before I start to spring anything.

Before I was assigned to this branch of the service I had been in one of the remote spots of the globe (Alaska), getting into places where the average cameraman does not have the opportunity, owing to scarcity of time and the enormous expense there is attached to a trip of that kind.

It has been my pleasure to crank, develop, print, and project my own film as far north as the Arctic Circle, and the fun I have had getting around some of the many difficulties that one will meet away from all source of supplies, chemicals, etc. My printing machine was a novelty, and I am glad Edison hasn't been able to see the mess I made out of one of his early model projection machines. It was something like this: All the people up there would say they had had their pictures cranked a dozen times, but had never seen them projected. So I set about the task, tearing out the intermittent gear and the shutter out of an old Edison projector and making a new film gate out of a piece of brass; then a long tube to transmit my light to the film, and lastly, a pair of light-tight boxes, and my printer was complete. A couple of tests and away we went. Outside of having to stop at times to thaw out some more ice, we were O. K. Titles were a task for quite awhile, but I discovered that by racking out my two-inch lens I was able to throw up typewriter print to a readable size. To give you an idea of the distance I was away from any market, I will cite one case where I sent a film of the Midnight Sun to Gaumont; the exposure was made on June 22, 1917, and mailed that week, and I received a check for same in September. I am not trying to register a kick, for if a fellow is fool enough to go into the wilds so far after pictures, he will have to dance to the music of the North. All the film I exposed this winter was lost in shipwreck en route to Seattle, but the same places are still there and as soon as this war is over I will be again packing a little Davasco around the Artic Circle on the trail of the moose and caribou. Some of the film I lost showed the killing of a moose with Mt. McKinley for a background, bear within three feet of the camera. And the end of one picture was when bruin kicked the tripod out from under me.

A lot of my film was exposed to 60 below zero, and I have yet to find my first trace of static out of the little Davasco.

One of my pleasures is to get into a good cigar and a Motion Picture World and go through it from start to finish.

Some of the boys may see Burton Holmes's Travelogue, which shows considerable Alaskan scenery. I have the pleasure of knowing Louis Francis Brown, and sold him some film while he was making the Holmes travelogue in Alaska.

If I run across anything new in photography while in this branch of the service that will be allowed publicity and that will be of interest, I will shoot it over, as I, like all other crankers, am always on the lookout for something new. Trusting I will hear from some of the bunch, I remain,

Respectfully yours for better pictures,
G. F. COGGAN,
Sergt., Aviation Section, Sig. Corps.

A mighty interesting letter, and some of you readers who enjoy the tang of adventure couldn't do better than to write Coggan a few lines and let him know that you found it interesting reading. The brightest spot in army camp life is when the mail arrives with letters, and the gloomiest when the others all around you get mail and there is none for you. Many of the readers of these lines are somewhere in the field themselves, and if you are one of them you know that "grand and glorious feeling" when you get a bunch of newsy letters from friends on the outside. Let's hear from some more of Uncle Sam's photographers. You're sure welcome here.

E. L. K., Kansas City, Mo.:

> I read your department in Motion Picture World with much interest. Wish I might contribute in some way to its benefit. Am desirous of obtaining formula or information about reversing negative to positive. Understand there is a company or party in Spokane, Washington, who sells a chemical for this purpose. Any information you can let me have on the subject will be greatly appreciated.

The problem of successfully producing positives direct in the camera is one, the solution of which would prove of incalculable value to the many photographers who require only one print of what they take and advance the showing of local events from an almost prohibitive thing on account of cost and time and equipment necessary, to a comparatively simple operation, which would render it feasible for all except the most humble theaters to take and exhibit their own local events of interest.

Some time ago a letter from Abraham Nelson, was referred to me on account of some samples of film and a paragraph in regard to a positive process used by him. The samples were lost somewhere in the opening of the mail and I did not get to see them, so I wrote to Mr. Nelson for further particulars and more samples. The following letter was received from him:

> Responding to your letter of the 24th, relative to the reverse negative process used by me.
>
> I requested Mr. A. L. Smith, who is the owner of the process, to come into my office. He called this morning, bringing with him the samples, which are enclosed, and explained the practicability of his process at length. He has attempted to have the process patented, but inasmuch as he refuses to divulge the ingredients of the solutions to the Patent Office he has been unable to do so.
> In Mr. Smith's process there are three solutions used: 1st, developing; 2nd, reversing; 3rd, control solution, which are applied to the film in the order named. The film stock upon which the process works most successfully is the Austin Edwards Ensign brand, Mr. Smith claiming it has finer grain than either the Eastman or Lumiere. He has not been able to obtain this stock on the Pacific Coast lately, however, and the enclosed samples are not of that brand. The pink is a Lumiere, non-halation, the other of Eastman stock, which has been toned. You will note from the samples that a film which has been reversed can be detected by the dark border.
> Mr. Smith contends that his process is entirely reliable; that he has perfect control over it under all conditions, whether a film is under or over exposed; that the film can be toned, intensified or reduced in the ordinary manner, and that the film when subjected to the heat of the projecting machine stands up as well as if it had not been treated. In photographing the subject, Mr. Smith uses one stop number higher than usually required for the purpose of preventing excessive contrasts, a matter which must be given attention when the reverse negative process is to be used.
> Mr. Smith advises that he has taken over 6,000 feet, all of which was very successful. He desired that I call your attention particularly to the fact that the high lights in the film are perfectly clear and that the emulsion is not in any way clouded by the reversing solution. This is all the data I have been able to gather from Mr. Smith.

The two samples received compare very favorably with prints made from negatives in the ordinary way.

There have been many previous attempts to produce positives direct in the camera both with the ordinary camera and the motion picture camra, but with very little success. I lately saw some samples made by a firm in Cleveland, Ohio, who have been working on this problem for several years. The samples were made on a special film coated by them, which, I understand, is to be placed on the market as soon as the machinery for making it in commercial quantities can be installed. These samples were very good indeed, and except for the black edges along the perforations—which in no way harms the picture for projection purposes—could not be told from an ordinary positive print from a negative.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON.

Notice.

QUESTIONS regarding music, addressed to this department, will receive a carbon copy of the department's reply by mail, when 4 cents are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matter which cannot be answered in this column $1.00.

What Availeth It?

WITH all the facilities that New York offers in procuring music, with the eloquent examples of picture presentation of the Strand, Rialto and Rivoli, with good musicians looking for work and in spite of what we are trying to do to elevate the standard of music in the picture theaters through the columns of The Moving Picture World, we have at our door an exhibitor who has evidently closed his eyes and ears. The saddest part of it all is the fact that he alone suffers for his negligence.

This theater is situated on Broadway and draws its patrons from one of the best residential neighborhoods in the city. Riverside Drive is only a short block away, and picture fans abound in great numbers in this district. The exhibitor books Paramount, Vitagraph and other big features. The theater has a roomy, comfortable and well ventilated auditorium. Its entrance and lobby is attractive, while the best taste prevails in its advertising. It is up-to-date in everything but its music.

Such music! It is hardly conceivable that a theater could be so lax in this most important phase of picture presentation. No fault can be found with the instrumentation. An orchestral organ of the best make and a good piano play the show, sometimes together, but as a rule one relieves the other.

Saturday, May the 11th, feeling the need of relaxation without too much exertion to obtain it, we visited this theater and noted that Ethel Clayton was billed in "The Journey's End." We arrived in time for the beginning of a new show and immediately the Screen Telegram began showing us the news of the week. The pianist tackled the job of playing the News, and although he improvised, his work showed a clear comprehension of what was needed. His changes of music were well timed and sanely suitable. The comedy followed and was treated in the same careful manner. Of course it was slapstick humor and required only light music. We were pleased and contented. Nothing could be better.

Then came the feature. This picture is a society drama, the locations being in New York and Palm Beach. The heroine, finding that her husband is a philanderer among women, decides to gain a separation agreement much against her inner desire. The agreement is made and she leaves for Palm Beach, while hubby, the hero, moons about New York, wondering what he has lost. The villainess, his particular friend, begins to pall and he hastens after his wife, finding when he arrives that she is evidently interested in somebody else. The plot thickens and is well sustained in suspense.

The organ was used to accompany the feature, and opening up all the stops he lit into it with the energy derived from a long rest. We guessed he was exercising the beast to find out if all its joints were in trim. He was evidently feeling out its good points and testing its volume, preparatory to its long grind. Thoroughly satisfied that every register was in working order and the sleigh bells, chimes and steam whistles could be relied upon, he gracefully glided into a light fox trot, while the heroine despondently held conference with her attorney relative to a separation agreement. After that he never looked at the picture except once, and played whatever came into his head, irrespective of the screen situations presented.

Everything played was popular and melodious. When the heroine was seen in a speedy motor boat he struck up that old familiar ballad entitled "Row, Row, Row," and our inclination was strong to go down and yank him out of the pit for daring to burlesque the picture.

When the girls were leaving the Hotel Ponciana for a surf bath, he regaled our ears with "La Paloma," and was not satisfied until he had played it through twice. "La Paloma" is Spanish or Mexican in its atmosphere and had no place in the picture. The girls found no Spaniards on the beach, nor was there even a cactus plant in sight. In the hotel lobby, however, there stood a rubber plant, which our worthy organist may have mistaken for a cactus and based his theme thereon.

While the hero, who had followed his wife to Palm Beach in spite of a separation agreement, was arranging a day's outing (getting a boat and fishing tackle) we were treated to "The Glow Worm." It is true worms were used for bait, but they were not glow-worms. Visualize the situation. A down-hearted hero desiring the seclusion of the open lake for a day's fishing and mental deliberation, while the music says "Shine little Glow Worm, glimmer, glimmer." The absurdity of it all is almost terrifying.

The picture producer should have some legal redress against the exhibitor for holding up his good picture to ridicule. We are all known by our works and yet a producer can be seriously misjudged when a picture is musically mangled by an insensate and insipid saphead.

When the villainess calls on the heroine to flaunt her love for the hero and the scene is fraught with pent-up emotion, shrewd innuendos, and looks that speak volumes, the music that should have raised this dramatic scene on its crest was "Mighty Lak a Rose" by Nevin. Poor Nevin!

As the picture progressed, the fag ends knotted together, and the climax in sight a one-step was used to convey the anticipatory suspense. Then when her rival cleverly induces the heroine to go to a gentleman's home at a late hour expecting to find her husband there and finds it a trap—when hubby comes and attempts to break in the door while they let the wife out the back door—when the hero gets in, draws his revolver and is about to shoot his best friend thinking evil of him, the organist suddenly remembers a beautiful little bell solo and forthwith inflicts it on the audience.

These are only a few examples of what the music did to the picture.

After the plot is ironed out, explanations have been made and the hero has spurned the villainess a sub-title was thrown on the screen. It proclaimed "Morning" and showed the bad woman leaving for parts unknown, husband and wife united and a wedding of "best friend" and "sister." The organist, feeling that it was full time the picture was over, glanced up and caught the title. Instantly he dashed into Grieg's "Morning." As every one knows, this delicate number is pastorale, light and airy, significant of hills and valleys, sheep and their shepherd, and all that goes to display the glories of Nature.

As the people left the theater we heard from all sides audible and bitter complaints about the picture. The fault did not lie with the picture. Its story, action, locations and camera angles were good, while its detail, with but few exceptions, was true to life. It was above the average good feature, but was killed by the bad music which accompanied it.

There is only one ultimate end to a place of this kind if such noisy and noisome picture fitting be allowed to continue. Appropriate music for pictures is the call of the day and people will not long stand for bone-headed carelessness, especially when they must pay for it. Exhibitors everywhere should keep in close touch with their music, cooperate with their organists or leaders and make every effort to safeguard and enhance the feature which has cost so much to produce for the pleasure and edification of their clientele.

Music at the Strand.

During the week of May 12 the Strand theater offered one of its standard performances that one can always rely upon to be interesting. The overture, "Light Cavalry," by Franz Suppe, was given a beautiful setting with special lighting effects that made the old "war horse" sound like something new. Oscar Spirescu interprets the number a little differently from what we have become accustomed to hear and it was a new delight from that standpoint also.

Miss Irene Audrey, a soprano of great promise, sang "The Villanelle," by Del'Aqua, in an artistic and pleasing manner. She found instant favor in the eyes of her audience and sang with an easy grace that went far to make up for a little huskiness in the early part of the song. "The Villanelle" is by no means a selection for beginners in the gentle art of singing. It requires a bel canto that can readily change to delicate staccato without any apparent effort. Miss Audrey possesses the very voice for this kind of work and showed clever dexterity in her florid passages.

The feature was fitted with the same care that always prevails at The Strand. Nazimova in the Gypsy character of Zorah in the "Toys of Fate" provided a splendid opportunity for atmospheric music. The violin solo that comes as a direct cue throughout the picture was well played and followed the action minutely. We hoped that we were to hear Dvorak, Liszt and excerpts from Bizet's "Carmen," but were disappointed. There could be no fault found with the setting as Mr. Edouarde had arranged it, but a little music more familiar to the public would not have come amiss.

There was one effect in the picture that had to be done off stage and through an accident of some sort was late, causing a laugh all over the house. It was really funny. In the court rom scene where a jury has just acquitted Zorah of the murder of her husband, her Gypsy lover suddenly rises and shoots her. We saw him do it. We saw the smoke lift and clear away. The culprit was seized by the police and Zorah had swooned in the arms of her lawyer. Then we heard the long delayed shot. Fortunately the climax had been reached and the faux pas proved a blessing in relieving the tension of one's nerves.

Henry Miller, bass, sang "God Be with the Boys Tonight," by Sanderson. The only reason why the song should be, lies in its patriotic appeal. It lacks melody and is distinctly mediocre in composition. Mr. Miller did not help it any by his rendition.

The balance of the program, consisting of the Strand Topical Review, Outing—Chester and the Comedy, were well played by the Strand Symphony Orchestra, assisted by our worthy friend and able organist, Ralph H. Brigham.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

HOW COULD YOU, CAROLINE? (Pathe—Five Reels). Theme—Moderato. Suggest "Song D'Amour"—Schuberth, "Canzonetta"—Nicode or Eleanor-Deppen.

The picture is light and should receive similar treatment. Use melodious music. A few agitatos of the lighter variety are needed toward the close of the picture. Cue sheets may be obtained from the Pathe Exchange.

MEN (Bacon-Backer—Six Reels). Theme—Andante. Suggest "Claire de Luna"—Massenet, "Intermezzo"—Wholpley, or "Elysium"—Speaks.

The chief emotion in this picture is Pathos. A little of the dramatic music will be needed and a few misteriosos and agitatos can readily be used. For a general presentation play selections from Manon.

MILLION DOLLAR DOLLIES (Screen Classics Production—Five Reels)—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest "Canzmetto"—D'Ambrosio, "Chanson Sans Parole"—Tschaikowsky, or "Spring Song"—Mendelssohn.

This picture is a brillante extravaganse requiring light treatment. Note the act shown at the Palace theatre, consisting of four numbers, a one-step, waltz, fox-trot and Oriental dance. Immediately following this scene the atmosphere changes to Oriental and continues so until the end of the picture. Cue sheets may be obtained from the Metro Exchange.

OLD WIVES FOR NEW (Paramount—Six Reels)—Theme unnecessary.

The atmosphere is American and Venetian. In the main the picture is light and lacks the element of melodrama. No hurrys or agitatos are needed. In the fourth reel the Victrola plays "You're Here and I'm Here." During this scene a fight between two girls take place ending with a shooting. At the end of the scene a flash of Victrola grinding out "You're Here and I'm Here." This should be handled very deftly—following the picture closely, graduating from pp to ff; an agitato during the fight and at the close of the scene an imitation of the Victrola run down, producing that scratching effect. This is very important. Cue sheet may be obtained from the Paramount Exchange.

RESURRECTION (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Andantino. Suggest "Moments Musical"—Moskowski, "Serenade"—Tschaikowsky, or "Cradle Song"—Tschaikowsky.

This is a picture of Russian atmosphere through the entire production, and to obtain a good musical accompaniment it is absolutely necessary to play as much Russian music as possible. Watch closely where the religious selection appears and play up to the last flash, making a big and glorious finish. The following numbers are needed in this picture:

"Largo," Maestoso .....Haendel
"Serenade," Tempo di Valse.....Rachmaninoff
"Solonelle March," Maestoso .....Tschaikowsky
"Andante Cantabile," from 5th Symphony.....Tschaikowsky
"Hymn of New Russia".....Gretchininoff
"Valse Triste," Lento .....Sibelius
"Largo," from New World Symphony".....Dvorak
"Song of the Boatman of the Volga".....Cady
"Prelude," Moderato .....Rachmaninoff
"In the Steppe," Moderato.....Gretchininoff

Close the picture with the "Hymn of New Russia." Cut sheet may be obtained from Paramount Exchange.

ROSE O' PARADISE (Paralta—Six Reels)—Theme—Moderato Violin Solo. Suggest Allegretto from the Violin Sonata—Grieg.

The opening is intensely agitato and continues till the story proper begins. Then light music for the first three reels. The last three are dramatic and need heavy treatment. The continuity is excellent and there are few flash-backs to confuse the leader. Use long numbers in every instance. Close with the theme. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paralta Exchange.

SOCIAL BRIARS (Mutual—Five Reels)—Theme—Andantino. Suggest Love Song—Flegier, Consolation—Liszt, or Melody—Lederer.

Church hymns are needed throughout this picture and we suggest the following:

D. When children sing—Precious Jewels.
D. Jim and Mrs. Kane praying—Rock of Ages.
D. Interior—Jim and Mrs. Kane—Nearer My God to Thee.
T. But the great city—Organ voluntary.
D. Choir singing—Come Ye Disconsolate.
T. Rehearsal—Te Deum.

There is also opportunity for using Love's Old Sweet Song. He's a Jolly Good Fellow and When You and I Were Young, Maggie. Cue sheets may be obtained from the Mutual Exchange.

TEMPERED STEEL (First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.—Five Reels)—Theme—Andantino. Suggest Reverie—Corelli, Heart's Desire—Losey, or A Little Song—Erdody.

This picture is largely dramatic, with locations in the South and New York City. The opening should be characteristically Southern. Note the direct cue for My Old Kentucky Home. Cue sheets may be obtained from First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

TOYS OF FATE (Screen Classics, Inc.—Six Reels)—Theme—Andante and Gypsy. Theme must be violin solo to do the picture justice. Suggest Second Nocturne—Chopin.

The picture deals with gypsy life interwoven with society, and wonderful results can be obtained by changing from one to the other at the proper moment. You will need some gypsy dance music, and many excerpts from Carmen will fit nicely. The last three reels are intensely dramatic and big stuff is required. Note the pistol shot towards the last reel. Disregard the violin solo at the last and play some pleasing melody to show the happy ending.

TRAIL TO YESTERDAY (Metro Six Reels)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest Yester Love—Borch, My Paradise—Zamecnik, or Gardenia—Densmore.

This is a Western drama abounding in big scenes of violence and pathos. Note the direct cue—D. When Sheila takes guitar play Silver Threads Among the Gold. Use guitar effect by using pizzicato strings if possible. Cue sheets may be obtained from the Metro Exchange.

TRIUMPH OF THE WEAK (Vitagraph—Five Reels—Theme—Andantino. Suggest Extase D'Amour—Roze, Moonbeams—Keiser, or Salut D'Amour—Elgar.

Pathos is the keynote to this feature and sob stuff should prevail. Dramatics, a few agitatos and misteriosos will be needed also. Cue sheets may be obtained from the Vitagraph Exchange.

Leaders' Service Bureau.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. Do you consider it necessary to have music between the hours of five and seven? I have been using pianist during these hours, but the receipts are so small that they do not cover relief pianist's salary. It seems my patrons could be notified of the fact that there will be no music between the hours of five to seven and not expect it. What do you think?

A. We regard the notifying of your patrons that there will be no music at the supper hour as very poor business. Your show should be kept up to standard at all hours and the overhead charges should not be charged to that hour. Music should be your big feature, and a good pianist can handle the show nicely during the off hours without letting down in your standard of efficiency. By no means allow your people to consider that you are classing your theater as a cheap house.

Q. What is your opinion of an electric piano as a ballyhoo in the lobby?

A. You are not running a circus and there seems to be no need of a clap-trap caliope to notify the townspeople that you are in business. The money that you would spend could be put to greater advantage by using it in a dignified form of advertising. The picture industry is too well founded to require such bizarre methods of exploitation.

Q. Sometime ago there appeared a question in your Leader's Service Bureau regarding jazz music. I've heard quite a number of jazz orchestras and the music sounds much like scrambled hash. Are the orchestrations written as the music sounds, or do the players fake in most of the wind notes?

A. Jazz music is generally played by players that have little experience in the better class of music, and they are inclined to fake a considerable portion of it. Jazz really means go-as-you-please and make all the noise you can.

Q. Where can I get a good flute and piccolo player?

A. If it be a union player that you want apply to the union local in your town. If a non-union player is required we can furnish you with a list of names and addresses and you can communicate directly with them.

* * *

Q. Have the pictures at the cantonments orchestras, and do they supply outside musicians or only those connected with the army?

A. The orchestras are made up entirely from the ranks of the army or navy. No outsider has any opportunity of playing with these musicians.

Q. What do you think of illustrated song slides? Do you think they will ever come back as an attraction in moving picture theaters?

A. Illustrated song slides are distinctly passe, and you would be foolish to attempt their use. The songs of today are put into moving pictures showing the story of the music and are used by many exhibitors with some success. A good singer is always an attraction, and this new idea is sure to meet with some approval from your patrons, but be sure of your singer.

Q. In playing the Trio in a march don't you think it more effective to "soften down" the first time then come out full in the repeat?

A. That is the usual way to play the Trio, but it largely depends upon your interpretation and the effect that you wish to convey.

Q. What are the literal meanings of D. C. and D. S. Of course I know what these indicate, but do not know their literal definitions.

A. D. C. is an abbreviation of the Italian words Da Capo, which means from the beginning, while D. S. (Dal Segno) means from the sign. G. Schirmer has issued a pocket manual of musical terms by Dr. Theodore Baker that will meet your every need in the derivation of technical words.

Q. "Is it true that Puccini's music cannot be played for pictures without paying royalty?"

A. "Puccini and his managers, Ricordi Brothers, regard the playing of an operatic selection to the picturization of a play which the composer has written with operatic form as a production of the opera. If you play Madame Butterfly music to the picture called Madame Butterfly you must pay royalties for so doing. It is an infringement of performing rights. They cannot prevent you playing any part of the opera as a separate selection."

Q. Will you please give me a list of some of the bigger overtures suitable for pictures?

A. The following list we believe will be a splendid addition to your library:

Athalia .....Mendelssohn
Adagio Lamentoso .....Tschaikowsky
Down South .....Myddleton
Egmont .....Beethoven
Freischutz .....Von Weber
Fifth Nocturne .....Leybach
Il Guarany .....Gomez
King Mydas .....Eilenberg
Lenore .....Beethoven
La Forza del Destino.....Verdi
Prelude du Deluge.....Saint-Saens
Rondo Cappriccioso .....Mendelssohn
Pathetique Symphony .....Tschaikowsky
Pique Dame .....Suppe
Ruy Blas .....Mendelssohn

Chicago Organizes Branch of Affiliated

Twenty-nine Exhibitors Subscribe for Stock on Co-operative Plan of Distributors' Corporation.

A MEETING of Chicago exhibitors, members of the M. P. E. L. of A. and of the M. P. T. O. Association, was called Friday, May 10, at Fraternity Hall, 19 W. Adams street, to hear a discussion of the co-operative booking plan of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation. The hour fixed was 1 o'clock p. m., and over forty exhibitors were present, an unusual attendance seeing that the call for the meeting was sent out from Minneapolis, by long distance phone, Thursday evening, May 9.

Henry A. Brink, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and C. C. Pettijohn, the president and the general counsel, respectively, of the Affiliated organization, were present to explain the new booking plan thoroughly. Mr. Pettijohn was the principal speaker, and in a direct, simple, conversational way he outlined the operation of his organization. He was open for questions from all angles and succeeded in satisfying every questioner in a between-you-and-me fashion.

President Brink, now and then, would supplement Mr. Pettijohn's explanation by a few remarks which made it still plainer, and his strict business attitude evidently favorably impressed all interested.

The discussion lasted several hours, and at its close exactly twenty-nine out of the forty exhibitors present signed up and became stockholders of the Chicago Exhibitors' Booking Corporation. A period of 125 days has been offered by the parent organization for the state of Illinois, but the local concern will ask for 200 days (which will mean a total subscription of $8,000) and also a change in the territory covered by Chicago, so as to exclude Southern Illinois and to substitute therefore Northwestern Indiana, Southern Wisconsin and Eastern Iowa. It is believed by those interested that the changes mentioned will be arranged by the parent company.

Byron Park, secretary of the Salt Lake City booking organization, was present at the Chicago meeting, having arrived from Pittsburgh, where he addressed a convention of Pennsylvania and West Virginia exhibitors on the plan of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation. He returned to his home city Friday night.

Following is a list of Chicago exhibitors who signed up with the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, after the Friday meeting:

Louis H. Frank, Halsted theater; J. Cooper, Twentieth Century; E. Thomas Beatty, the Linden; Charles Abrams, Americus; Nathan Wolf, the Vision; Philip Banovita, the Harmony; M. A. Choynski, the Newberry; H. J. Corbett, Harper; L. Siegel, president Vernon Theater Company, Vernon theater; William Rohe, Liberty; Joseph Hopp, Ideal; Andrew Karzas, Woodlawn; W. D. Burford, secretary Aurora Theater Company, with five theaters; James J. Chrissis, Queen; Henry Lutz, New Illinois; H. A. Gundling, Bryn Mawr and Regent; H. Treulich, Kriterion; Max Hyman, Avon; Harry Lindner, Janet; H. Kahn, Argmore; Clyde R. Bates, Jefferson; Charles and A. Nuccio, Winchester; A. Ostrovsky, White Palace; M. S. Wells, Vista; Sam and Max Gold, the Gold; H. Von Meeteren, Rainbow; John Bobeng, Crown; J. J. Rubens, Fox Theater Company, the Armitage, and A. Zilligen, Rosewood and Drake theaters.

W. J. Clark, secretary and treasurer of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, came on from Grand Rapids, Wednesday, May 15, to attend another meeting of the stockholders and other exhibitors in Fraternity Hall, at 1 o'clock p. m.

At this meeting about forty were present, and William E. Heaney acted as chairman and H. A. Gundling as secretary.

A board of directors was elected, which includes Messrs. Heaney, Hopkinson, Burford, Gold, Cooper, Frank, Bates, Choynski, Hyman, Ostrovsky and Gundling. Each of these directors was elected from the floor, fifteen being nominated and four withdrawing.

A constitution and by-laws were also adopted at this meeting.

A recess was then taken until 1 o'clock Wednesday, May 22. In the meantime, the directors will meet and elect officers.

Major Funkhouser Still on Top.

It would appear from proceedings which took place before the judiciary committee of the city council on Tuesday, May 14, that Alderman Maypole's ordinance restricting the powers of Major Funkhouser in the censorship of moving pictures has a poor chance to get by.

On the date mentioned Assistant Corporation Counsel Frank D. Ayers showed the members of this committee that the powers of censorship taken from Major Funkhouser by the proposed Maypole ordinance would be vested in the courts.

Alderman Maypole was in Washington at the time on official business, so it is expected the matter will be taken up fully when he returns.

Before Mr. Ayers' statement was made to the members of the judiciary committee the Rev. Father F. J. Dinneen, S. J., representing Archbishop Mundelein and all the Catholic societies in Chicago; Anthony Matre, Knight of St. Gregory and national secretary of the Catholic Federation of the United States, and the Rev. John Donald Laughlan, an Episcopal clergyman and the official of an Episcopal society, had made a strong protest to the judiciary committee against any change in the present censorship ordinance.

"We have made a study of the censorship matter for the last five years," said the Rev. Mr. Dinneen, "and under the present system of censorship Chicago has the cleanest set of motion pictures of any city in the country. The present ordinance has worked out admirably. I speak officially for the Catholic people on this matter."

Mr. Matre next read resolutions adopted at a meeting of twenty Catholic organizations, which praised Major Funkhouser and asked that the censorship matter be left untouched.

"Over the Top" at Auditorium for Two Weeks.

Vitagraph has secured the Auditorium for two weeks, starting Sunday, May 26, for the presentation of "Over the Top." Manager T. W. Chatburn, of the Chicago office, states that the film will be presented in fine style, with special orchestral music, and it is hoped that Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, who is featured in the film, which is based on his book of the same name, will be present for the first day's showings. Two presentations will be given daily, at admissions of 25, 50 and 75 cents.

A. N. Braun Enlists in Navy.

A. N. Braun, middle western managers for the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, will leave this city about Wednesday, May 22, for his home in New York City, to enlist in the navy. His leaving necessitates the closing of the Chicago office of that company. We wish Mr. Braun the greatest good luck and a chance to get in action.

Brisk Bookings for "The Unbeliever" Here.

M. E. Smith, district manager for the George Kleine System, announces that the Chicago bookings of "The Unbeliever" on Saturday, May 4, amounted to 90 days, on May 15 to 160 days, and 85 days on the latter date for surrounding territory in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. The release date is May 20, and twelve working prints will be in use after that date in this territory. Every first class, first run theater in Chicago, Mr. Smith says, has booked the film and houses which customarily change their programs daily have booked the picture for two and three days.

Flaherty Buys State Rights of Feature.

F. J. Flaherty has purchased the rights of the six-reel film, "Nine-Tenths of the Law" (Atlantic Distributing Corporation), for the territory of Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota and North and South Dakota, and he will release the picture through Foursquare Pictures, Inc., for which company he is Chicago manager.

"The Revelation" Shows to Fine Business.

"The Revelation" (Metro), featuring Nazimova, has been showing to fine business at the Playhouse, where it opened May 12 for a week's run. It was followed by "The Million Dollar Dollies" (Metro), which features the Dolly sisters Sunday night, May 19.

"The Blue Bird" Popular in Chicago.

"The Blue Bird," which opened at Orchestra Hall for one week's run only, has been continued for a second week because of numerous requests. Indeed, it seems to me, it would have been good for at least four weeks. It will make way for "Pershing's Crusaders," a government official picture, which will open a two weeks' run on Monday, May 20. Thereafter, Paramount and Artcraft pictures will be shown exclusively at Orchestra Hall throughout the summer.

A. F. of M. Hold Convention in Chicago.

The American Federation of Musicians opened their annual convention at the Hotel Morrison, Monday, May 13. Two hundred and fifty women members of the Chicago branch acted as hostesses to the women delegates and guests of the convention. The woman's committee of the Chicago branch was headed by Miss Katherine C. Melcher, well known by moving picture theater musicians throughout the country for the valuable aid offered in selecting nontaxable music.

"Tarzan of the Apes" at Colonial.

"Tarzan of the Apes," released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, opened a two weeks' run at the Colonial theater, Monday, May 13. It has been showing to excellent business at 25 and 50 cents, from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m.

Goldwyn's President Goes to Los Angeles.

Samuel H. Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures, Inc., stopped over for a few hours in the city Friday, May 10, on his way from New York to Los Angeles, where he will inspect the building operations now in progress at the new Goldwyn studio, which he expects to be ready some time in October. He announced that he had just renewed contracts with Mabel Normand and Madge Kennedy, and that Geraldine Farrar will begin a feature under his management in June, while Pauline Frederick will join his forces about the first of September. Geraldine Farrar spent several days in the city last week with her husband, Lou Tellegen, who closed his engagement with "Blind Youth" at the Powers theater, Saturday, May 11, after which they left for Los Angeles.

C. C. Pyle Resigns Position With Commonwealth.

Charles C. Pyle resigned as treasurer of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, this city, Saturday, May 4. Mr. Pyle has been with the company since March, 1917, and is leaving because his entire time and services are required by the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, of which he is general sales manager.

Cohen Optimistic on Co-operative Idea

President of Exhibitors' Booking Syndicate Claims Plan Is a Big Success.

THAT the day of co-operation between the manufacturer and the exhibitor is at hand is the firm conviction of Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Exhibitors' Booking Syndicate. In an interview Mr. Cohen, who also is president of the New York State League, said:

"Co-operation between the manufacturer and the exhibitor is proving a bigger success than any of us—optimistic as we were—had dreamed of. We launched this plan after reviewing Harry Rapf's two productions, Florence Reed in 'The Struggle Everlasting,' and Captain Robert Warwick and Elaine Hammerstein in 'The Accidental Honeymoon.' We arranged the co-operative booking plan with exhibitors in New York and our initial efforts are now a matter of history.

"The results already attained show that we entered upon the plan at the psychological moment, that manufacturers and exhibitors were in a receptive mood for it, and that its future is one that can be forecast in no limited way.

"Working with those two pictures as our nucleus, we guaranteed Mr. Rapf 225 days' booking on each, and already in three weeks we have played 175 days on each production. We have on our books over 200 additional days and we have not yet reached one-half of the exhibitors in New York.

"Several new pictures have been offered us, but we are considering only the best. We are also negotiating with Mr. Rapf to produce another picture for us."

Hayakawa to Release Through Mutual

Will Provide Eight Productions a Year of Five or Six Parts in Length.

EIGHT Sessue Hayakawa special productions, produced by Haworth Pictures Corporation, will be distributed through the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation. The first of these pictures, now under the working title of "His American Birthright," has been completed and will shortly be ready for screening at the Mutual exchanges projection rooms.

The first picture will be released July 15, and will be available for prerelease to the leading exhibitors throughout the United States by special arrangement. These special arrangements will be handled through the representatives of Haworth or by application to Mutual. The eight productions will be released at intervals through a period of forty-eight weeks. They will be presented in five or six parts.

The negotiations for the distribution of the pictures have been conducted by Charles Greenberg, secretary of Haworth Pictures Corporation, and James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual Film Corporation.

"We have set out to make Hayakawa pictures with a greater attention to vehicles and the refinements of production than he has ever had before," said Mr. Greenberg. "He has been thoroughly established with an earned reputation. For a long time it has been true that his name on the billing means a big house and a long run.

"We have proceeded therefore to lay out a line of production for him that will enable his box office value to demonstrate itself and exploit itself unhampered by any parallel releases or releasing conditions.

"The cast in the first picture is certainly ample evidence of our sincerity of purpose in giving Hayakawa the ample support that will enable his best work. The cast includes Marin Sais and Tsuri Aoki—Mrs. Hayakawa—Mary Anderson and a number of others who have played 'on their own' in productions of feature merit. The direction is by William Worthington."

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of May 19 at New York's Principal Motion Picture Houses.

THE STRAND.—Pauline Frederick in Tolstoy's "Resurrection" was the leading attraction at the Strand the week of May 19. As Katusha, the Russian peasant girl, the star does some of the best work of her career. The fourth of the Outing-Chester travel pictures, Smiling Billy Parsons in "Matching Billy," another chapter of Raymond L. Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature," and the Strand Topical Review were the other screen features. The solos were contributed by Grace Hoffman and Arthur Aldridge.

THE RIVOLI.—"Old Wives for New," from the novel by David Graham Phillips, was the picture featured at the Rivoli. Elliott Dexter, Theodore Roberts and Tully Marshall head the cast. Cecil De Mille was the director. A Fox comedy, "Wild Women and Tame Lions," and the Animated Pictorial were also shown. A dance number and a solo by Winfred Marshall were on the program.

THE RIALTO.—Norma Talmadge in "De Luxe Annie," a Select picture, was the film star at the Rialto. Eugene O'Brien, Frank Mills, Edward Davis and Edna Hunter are in the cast. The Katzenjammer Kids in "Up in the Air," and the Rialto Animated Magazine were also shown. Greek Evans was the soloist.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET THEATER.—Douglas Fairbanks in "Mr. Fix-It," for the entire week.

KNICKERBOCKER.—Tenth week of "My Four Years in Germany."

FORTY-FOURTH STREET.—Seventh week of "Hearts of the World."

LYRIC.—"Pershing's Crusaders."

BROADWAY.—"A Soul for Sale."

SUNSHINE JOINS NATIONAL ARMY.

Harry Sunshine, well known among exhibitors in the metropolitan district through his activities as head of the poster and advertising accessory department of the First National Exchange, New York, recently resigned his position to become a member of the National Army. Sunshine was given a farewell dinner by Sales Manager Cary Wilson and his associates prior to his departure. He was presented with a handsome wrist watch and other tokens of esteem. He is now at Camp McClellan, Anniston, Alabama, as a member of the 1st Company, Recruit Detachment, 58th Brigade.

Tally Outlines Circuit Plans

Says First National Is Considering Project of Booking Musicians for Tour of Members' Theaters.

ONE of the announcements made by T. L. Tally, vice president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, since his return to Los Angeles is to the effect that Frederick L. Collins, general manager of the McClure publishing interests, has offered to back any star whom the circuit may engage, both by financing the productions and by launching publicity campaigns through the McClure publications.

Another disclosure of Mr. Tally's is that the Circuit expects shortly to book well known, even famous, musical artists over its circuit. Negotiations looking to this end are under way with half a dozen musicians, including singers, organists and violinists, and with negotiations between the Circuit and the two noted organists, Clarence Eddy and Edwin Lemaire, already begun. This plan is feasible, say the directors of the Circuit.

Regarding the engagement of picture stars by the Circuit, Mr. Tally declares the organization, according to recent agreement of its members, is in the market for the best pictures, irrespective of stars, but states that it is likely that one star in addition to Charles Chaplin will be engaged during the coming year.

Industry to Get Together on War Work.

A movement has been started by persons prominent in the motion picture industry to amalgamate all branches of the moving picture war relief under one heading. To that end the Motion Picture War Relief Committee has been formed, with Lois Weber as chairman, assisted by Committeemen Walter Edwards, Reginald Barker, James Young, S. E. V. Taylor, Frank Beal, Robert Vignola and Joseph De Grasse.

It is the intention of this committee that all war work of whatever nature, be it buying Liberty Bonds or collecting tinfoil, shall be done through one organization. In that way the concentration of all the national needs of our country by a united motion picture industry will be more productive, with all consolidated in one body instead of striving to aid through individual channels.

Clifford Company Announces Plans.

W. H. Clifford, the scenario expert, announces that he has formed his own company, which in the future will be known as the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company. The incorporation was recently made under this name and the officers of the organization consist of Frederick Post of Chicago, president; W. H. Clifford, vice president and general manager, and John McGonigle, secretary and treasurer.

The new organization will continue the production of Shorty Hamilton five-reel comedies, which Mr. Clifford has been doing of late. The first three of this series are now on the market under the titles of "Denny from Ireland," "The Snail" and "The Ranger." At the present time the company is working under the direction of Lyn Darling in another five-reel comedy for release on the state right market, entitled "The Pen Vulture."

Sol Lesser, of the All Star Features Distributors, has contracted for the entire series of the twelve Shorty Hamilton comedies.

In addition to this output the company will specialize in the creation of dramatic spectacles, which will be directed by Mr. Clifford in person.

At the present time the first of these multiple reel features is being produced under the title of "The Black Boomerang."

L. G. Meyberg has been appointed by Mr. Clifford as the company's traveling sales representative.

Triangle Players Work Hard for Loan.

Triangle went "over the top" for the Third Liberty Bond Loan. The film players and other employes at the Culver City studio set $50,000 as their minimum mark and they went $3,000 over it.

To stimulate interest in the campaign to which only those employed by the Triangle Film Corporation were eligible, General Manager H. O. Davis had a huge Liberty Loan bulletin board erected near the studio entrance. Beside the name of each subscriber was placed an honor mark in red. As each department scored 100 per cent. in subscriptions it gained the additional honor of being designated by a small American flag.

There was keen rivalry among the departments and the illness of several employes alone prevented these units from gaining the honor flags and giving Triangle the coveted 100 per cent. mark.

Arthur Horsley Acquitted in Court.

Upon motion of the district attorney's office, Superior Judge Willis has dismissed the case against Arthur Horsley, the head of a local motion picture laboratory, charged with having received a quantity of film stolen from a local picture studio. It was stated an investigation had shown there was no evidence that Horsley had knowledge the film was stolen. Alfred Davies, formerly property man for a picture company, recently pleaded guilty to a charge of having stolen several thousand feet of film. His application for probation was under consideration.

William California Wing Writing Polo Serial.

William E. Wing, the psychological writer, is doping out a circus serial of eighteen episodes for the Universal star, Eddie Polo.

Mr. Wing's latest story, "Social Ambition," with Rhea Mitchell and Howard Hickman, is soon to be released by Goldwyn.

Florence Reed to Make Picture for Rolfe.

Florence Reed, the star of "Today," who is now in Los Angeles, announces that she is to make one picture under B. A. Rolfe's management, with an optional contract at the conclusion of its making.

The Rolfe company will move its studio staff to Philadelphia in September, where Miss Reed will be playing in "Chu Chin Chow" and will make the film during the day.

It is reported that Carl Anderson, recently president of the Paralta, will be associated with Mr. Rolfe, but so far this rumor has not been verified.

Palmer to Write for Lyons and Moran.

Frederick Palmer, who wrote nearly fifty comedies for Lyons and Moran under the Nestor brand, has been engaged to take charge of the Star Comedies scenario department. Mr. Palmer is one of the best known writers in the motion picture colony, having been a feature writer for Sennett-Keystone, Triangle, Fox and Universal, as well as being a prolific free-lance in newspaper and magazine work.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Lack Lannon, of Greater Features Company of Seattle, Washington, has renewed his contract for Christie Comedies and reports a greatly increased business for Oregon, Washington and Idaho.

* * *

S. F. Blachley, formerly representative of the All Star Features Distributors, has left that concern to go out on the road as special representative for Paralta Plays.

There are now a total of forty-nine stars in the service flag floating over the Triangle Culver City studios. More than 10 per cent. of the company's employes have left to serve and fully a score more are planning to go within the next month.

* * *

A. S. Dowd, general sales representative of the Universal and Jewel Productions, has arrived on the Pacific coast.

* * *

Irving Lesser, manager of the Los Angeles branch of the All Star Features Distributors, has been called to San Francisco, due to the departure for New York of Sol L. Lesser.

* * *

Co-directors Wilfred Lucas and Bess Meredyth have taken the company making the sequel to "Tarzan of the Apes" to the Modjeska ranch near San Diego. With Mr. and Mrs. Lucas went Cleo Madison, Enid Markey, Elmo Lincoln, Monte Blue, Colin Kenny and a supporting cast of fourteen others.

* * *

Recent additions to the Universal roster include Bernard McConville, well known screen author, and Helen Jerome Eddy, who was for a long time George Beban's leading woman with the Lasky-Paramount company.

* * *

Manager Edward O'Neill of Clune's Broadway Theater will for the present see personally to getting the pictures of his stars into the papers, B. C. Kiesling, former publicity director, having enlisted for service in the army. Mr. Kiesling will become a member of the Ordnance Officers' School at Camp Hancock, Augusta, Ga.

Howard Gaye, who directed the Mena Company's nine-reel feature "Restitution," is busy at the Mena plant with Studio Manager G. S. Driscoll putting into readiness a second feature picture.

Plans Ready for New Lasky Building

Details of the Concrete Structure to Be Erected on the Site of the Recent Hollywood Blaze.

NO sooner had the smoke from the smoldering ruins of the burned section of the Lasky plant at Hollywood blown away, than a crew of laborers were put to work to clear away the wreckage to make room for the new buildings. An area of 40 by 200 feet was destroyed. A few more of the temporary buildings adjoining will be torn down and in their place will rise a three-story, concrete, all-fireproof edifice.

This new building will house the complete force and head of the purchasing department, and will contain an especially equipped room for the still photographers and a complete fireproof storeroom for the upholstery, wall paper, drapery and embroidery departments; a tinting room for the special color process, an invention of C. B. deMille and Alvin Wyckoff, director of photography, and a complete dark stage for reproducing night effects. This stage will have a temporary floor which can be removed—seats placed in and a stage erected, with a greater seating capacity than the present room used for that purpose.

One of the unique features of the new building will be the stock room. So many things are required around a motion picture studio that the stock room has contained practically everything found in the average small sized department store. The stock department will occupy three floors, as well as containing a huge vault on each floor for the storage of the more valuable supplies.

A special automatic sprinkler system will be installed as an additional safeguard. To prevent the loss and damage to draperies, special fire and moth-proof cases will be built in the drapery department. In addition to an automatic passenger elevator in the building, a huge freight elevator will be installed to move the heavy articles from floor to floor.

On the hitherto unoccupied square of ground at the southwest corner of Selma and Argyle streets a 50-feet extension to the laboratory will be built, three stories in height and forty feet in depth.

The exterior of the new building will be built on the same dignified and artistic plan as is the exterior of the concrete laboratory.

Jack Barrymore Again with Paramount

After a Successful Return Whirl on the Stage Actor Comes Back to First Screen Love.

JESSE L. LASKY, vice president of the Famous-Lasky Corporation in charge of productions, announced a notable addition to the list of stars appearing in Paramount Pictures in John Barrymore, whose dramatic work on the stage and screen has placed him in the foremost rank of leading actors. Mr. Barrymore has signed for a series of pictures, work on the first of which shortly will be commenced in one of the eastern studios of the company.

John Barrymore.

This engagement marks Mr. Barrymore's return to the screen as a Paramount star. Several years ago he made his motion picture debut under this banner, among his initial film hits being "The Man from Mexico" and "Are You a Mason?" His work before the camera immediately proved his adaptability to motion picture acting and he rapidly became popular among followers of the photoplay. After a triumphant season in the silent drama for Famous Players, Mr. Barrymore returned to the stage to take up engagements which resulted in several other big successes on Broadway.

Mr. Barrymore's initial picture will be an adaptation by Charles E. Whittaker from Willie Collier's play, "On the Quiet." The story deals with Robert Ridgway, who is in love with Agnes Colt, an heiress whose guardian is her brother and who desires his sister to wed a nobleman and frowns upon her attachment for the Yale student. By the terms of the will the girl must marry a man approved by her guardian or lose sixteen million dollars. Amusing complications result in which the brother is cleverly trapped into giving his consent to the marriage. To direct this picture Chester Withey has been engaged.

STOREY TO MAKE JUVENILE PICTURES.

A. D. V. Storey, who has handled the Baden-Powell Boy Scout serial, "Boy Scouts to the Rescue," booked under the auspices of the Boy Scouts of America, by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is leaving the latter company to produce and market a number of juvenile pictures, a new Boy Scout serial short production and "Boy's Life Screen Review," a combination news weekly and screen magazine, named after "Boy's Life," the official magazine of the Boy Scouts of America. "Girl's Life Screen Review" has also been copyrighted and will be released in conjunction with the "Boy's Life Screen Review."

Universal Takes Over Branch Offices

Company's Entire Product Will Be Distributed Under the Hand of One Central Management.

ONE of the most complete changes ever attempted in the moving picture industry is being completed by Universal Company in its distributing organization for the purpose of promoting economy and efficiency in that branch of the service for the betterment of the corporation and to the advantage of exhibitors.

The change in the Universal Distributing organization went into effect on May 20, when the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., took over the business of all of the branch exchanges distributing Universal products in the United States with the exception of a few exchanges not controlled by the producing company.

After the change goes into effect not only will Universal attractions be handled by Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., but these exchanges also will handle the output of Jewel Productions, Lois Weber Productions, Bluebird Photoplays, Century Comedies, and Lyons and Moran Comedies.

It is in combining the numerous interests that the economy in distribution will be practiced. For a long time Bluebird controlled its exchanges and Jewel also had exchanges entailing a large overhead expense in rents, salary of office force, deliveries and incidentals too numerous to designate.

With the combining of the exchanges this excessive expense will cease. Eventually the saving will be felt by the exhibitors who will be given the benefit of the economies caused by the new system.

On May 20 Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., which is a New York corporation, took over the business of Universal exchanges in the following cities: Pittsburgh, Detroit, Kansas City, St. Louis, Oklahoma City, Fort Smith, Wichita, Chicago, Milwaukee, Denver, Salt Lake City, Butte, Portland, Seattle, Spokane, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Phoenix, Minneapolis, Omaha, Sioux Falls, Des Moines, Cincinnati, Columbus, Louisville, Indianapolis, Evansville, Albany, Buffalo and Cleveland.

C. H. MacGowan, assistant general manager of Universal, on Saturday, May 18, accompanied by six assistants, left New York for a trip around the entire circuit for the purpose of effecting the taking over of the exchanges by the new corporation. Before leaving, he said that the change would automatically be effective as of May 20 and within a few weeks from that date he expected everything would be working smoothly in every one of the exchanges.

Notwithstanding the amount of detail work necessary to bring about the change the preliminaries have been so carefully arranged that no confusion is anticipated.

The change in the method of distribution does not mean that changes will follow in the Universal sales organization. All of the branch managers will retain their positions, but hereafter will be given assistance by the home office that will lead to greater possibilities for themselves and for the exhibitors served by them.

Affiliated Increases Capitalization

New Distributing Corporation Raises Investment from $100,000 to $250,000.

ALTHOUGH scarcely a month old the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation last week increased its capitalization from $100,000 to $250,000. This addition to the original investment was deemed desirable, according to Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Affiliated, to take care of the response with which the co-operative plan back of the Affiliated has been received by exhibitors.

"We want to be in a position to meet every demand that will make for the furtherance of the 'direct from producer to exhibitor' idea," said Mr. Pettijohn. "While we thought our original capital was more than ample to take care of the development of this idea, three weeks of operation has shown us that this movement is going to grow much faster than our most sanguine expectations and that additional capital is desirable to take care of this expansion.

"The founders of the Affiliated are determined that the desire on the part of exhibitors in sections not yet organized into booking associations for participation in the benefits of this organization shall be instantly heeded

"It takes money to send organizers into these sections and get these local bodies under way, and this added capital is to be devoted in part to seeing that such bodies are properly placed on their feet. Since the Affiliated is absolutely paying its own way, without calling on exhibitors for a penny for promotion expenses, this recent action of increasing the capitalization in so short a time shows how much confidence we have in the soundness of our plan.

"Those responsible for the organization have been so encouraged by the way it has been received that they have expressed a willingness to put unlimited funds into the project, if necessary, to make its advantages operative immediately on a nation-wide scale."

Meetings for the purpose of perfecting arrangements for the association of exhibitors booking organizations with the Affiliated were held last week at Chicago and Indianapolis. The Chicago gathering, in Fraternity Hall, resulted in more than one half the trust fund necessary to complete such an affiliation being paid in at the meeting.

Other territories well on their way toward the consummation of their trust funds are Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Minneapolis, Salt Lake City, Philadelphia and New York. Meetings this week are scheduled for St. Louis, Kansas City and Cedar Rapids.

Merl La Voy to Visit Battlefronts

MERL LA VOY, war camera correspondent, is leaving shortly for his third tour of the European battlefronts, on an engagement with Burton Holmes, the lecturer. Mr. La Voy will travel in company with Mr. Holmes in their excursions along the battlelines. La Voy's camera work is well known in the motion picture industry in connection with the film entitled "Heroic France," released through the Mutual Film Corporation.

Merl La Voy.

More recently, returning from his second journey to the front, Mr. La Voy completed "Heroic Serbia," a picture portrayal of the personalities and activities of the Serbian front. The Serbian pictures were made under the auspices of Howard Logan of Chicago, who has presented the American Red Cross with the film.

In his work for the screen Mr. La Voy has visited the French, English and Serbian fronts, spending nearly two years in France and England and a year in Serbia. He has posed many of the great men of the war including Asquith, Bona Law, Clemenceau, Castelneau, Briand and many others. His exploits in affairs photographic have ranged from a climb of Mount McKinley in Alaska to looping the loop in an allied war plane over Mount Olympus in Greece.

An infantryman's heavy marching outfit weighs 70 pounds. La Voy's consists of about 150 pounds of camera and equipment.

HAYAKAWA ADDRESSES IMPERIAL'S PATRONS.

While Sessue Hayakawa was in San Francisco with his company making a number of exterior scenes for the first of his new feature productions he visited the Imperial theater, with the patrons of which his picture always have been extremely popular.

Some one in the audience discovered the Japanese actor while one of Uncle Sam's Four-Minute Men was making a speech in behalf of the Liberty Bonds and informed John Partington, manager of the playhouse, asking him to urge Hayakawa to take the stage and deliver an address. Hayakawa, when approached by Partington, agreed and made a strong appeal for the bonds. He had spoken a number of times in Los Angeles and neighboring cities to large crowds while the drive was on and on each occasion had made a distinct impression with the earnestness of his remarks.

BROWNING TO MAKE BLUEBIRDS.

Tod Browning has been added to the Bluebird directorial forces. The first production in which his efforts will show on the screen will be Ella Hall's latest photodrama, made under the title of "Nobody's Bride," in which the Bluebird star is supported by a cast headed by Eddie Ring Sutherland and Priscilla Dean.

Browning comes to Bluebird direct from Metro. His last picture with that organization was Edith Storey's "Legion of Death."

Paramount Managers Holding Conference

District Heads Considering Company Activities for the Coming Year.

WALTER E. GREENE, managing director, and Al Lichtman, general manager of the distribution department of the Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation, have called a meeting of district managers of that concern throughout the country. The managers convened at the New York City headquarters at 485 Fifth avenue Tuesday, May 21. Several highly important matters concerning the distribution activities of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures are to be discussed. Labor Day will mark the commencement of a new year for the Famous Players-Lasky Distributing organization, and plans which will be set in motion at that time will be carefully worked out at the convention in New York this coming week.

It is definitely understood that the stars series booking system, inaugurated last August, will not only be continued the coming year, but owing to its great success will be enlarged. Service to the exhibitors will be the keynote of the meeting and various novel ideas making for increased exploitation facilities for theater owners will be passed upon. The big advertising campaign now being waged will also be taken up with a view of further enhancing its effectiveness in drawing people to the exhibitor of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

Among the film men who are in New York taking part in the conference are Harry Asher, in charge of the Boston, Portland and New Haven branches; A. G. Whyte, of the New York offices; W. E. Smith, of Philadelphia and Washington; James Steele, of Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Detroit and Cleveland; Max Goldstine, of Chicago, Minneapolis and Milwaukee; A. D. Flintom, of Kansas City, St. Louis, Des Moines and Omaha; C. E. Tandy, of Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas; Louis Marcus, of Salt Lake, Denver and Butte, and Herman Wobber, of San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Portland, Ore., as well as J. W. Allen and H. H. Buxbaum.

The convention will continue until Saturday. Adolph Zukor, president of the organization, will address the managers, as will Whitman Bennett, who, in the absence of Jesse L. Lasky, will talk on the production activities of the company and its affiliated bodies. With the termination of the conference plans will have been formulated involving the booking of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures in ten thousand theaters throughout the country, it is announced.

Aoki in Hayakawa Picture

TSURU AOKI has one of the important roles in Sessue Hayakawa's initial picture, upon the production of which he is at present engaged with his own independent company. This dainty daughter of Japan, although bearing the screen name of Tsuru Aoki, is the wife of the Japanese star and is no stranger to the camera, having appeared in a large number of photodramas during the past four years and frequently in striking roles in the pictures in which her husband has been starred.

Tsuru Aoki.

Tsuru Aoki, although raised in this country from early childhood by relatives who brought her to Southern California from Japan, retains all the alluring characteristics of the little brown maids of the "land of the rising sun" and her charming personality, reflected on the screen, together with her natural portrayal of the roles in which she has been cast, have made for her hosts of admirers throughout the land. William Worthington, who is directing the Hayakawa Production, says Miss Aoki's part fits her splendidly and is certain to win her new laurels.

Universal Hails a Chaplin in Petticoats

Recalling the Corresponding Garb That Helped to Make Charlie Famous We'll Have to Be Shown.

A Charlie Chaplin in petticoats has been found. So says Universal. The comedienne is busy right now making comedies at Universal City. These are to be released in one and two reels, but none will be presented to the public until several have been finished in order that President Laemmle may be assured that all are equally good and will prove to be box office attractions.

Several months ago Mr. Laemmle started on a still hunt for a woman who would have an equal drawing power with the male comedian. Numerous women among whom were several favorites of the legitimate stage were given an opportunity to show their ability. Not one of them measured up to the standard set by Mr. Laemmle, due largely to the fact that they understood very little regarding the technique of motion pictures.

When it appeared as if the search was to be in vain a young woman who has been working in Universal pictures for several years was discovered by Mr. Laemmle and appears to be in a fair way to become the ideal "Female Charlie Chaplin." She not only is acquainted with the technique of pictures, but she is naturally funny and versatile.

Universal is hiding her identity for the present, but the statement is made that if her first five pictures stand up they will be released after a tremendous advertising campaign.

Hugh Thompson Supports Miss Wehlen

HUGH THOMPSON, who has supported many famous stars of the screen, has been engaged to play opposite Emmy Wehlen in Metro's all-star series picture, "For Revenue Only," which was written by Katharine Kavanaugh and adapted for the screen by John Mathis. In joining Metro Thompson is again playing under the same banner as Francis X. Bushman, with whom he made his picture debut in "On the Dawn Road" at the Essanay studio in Chicago. Thompson played heavy roles in his first few pictures. For two years Miss Wehlen's new leading man played in Essanay pictures.

Hugh Thompson.

Recently Mr. Thompson has been appearing under the Fox banner, having played prominent roles in "The Queen of the Sea," with Annette Kellermann; "The Soul of Buddha," and "Forbidden Paths," with Theda Bara, and "A Daughter of France," with Virginia Pearson. He supported Edna Goodrich in "Queen X" for Empire All-Star.

Mr. Thompson is a great grandson of John Quincy Adams, sixth President of the United States. He gained his theatrical training during eight years in stock in the biggest cities in the country. Four of these years were spent in St. Louis.

Edwin Carewe, who is directing "For Revenue Only," is much pleased with Mr. Thompson's work, and Miss Wehlen declares that he is just the player for the part of Frank Steele, the young attorney.

ANITA LOOS GOES TO LOS ANGELES.

Anita Loos has departed from New York en route to Los Angeles to confer with Jesse L. Lasky, vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, regarding the stories she and John Emerson are to write for Shirley Mason, the newly enrolled star who will make her appearance under the Paramount banner. Miss Loos carries with her the completed scenario for the first John Emerson and Anita Loos Production, work on which will be commenced in June, and which will be the initial vehicle for Miss Mason.

Old Trio Retire from Paralta

Katz and De Wolf Buy Out Anderson, Brown and Kane and Brunton and Hampton Take Over Studios.

HERMAN KATZ, chairman of the Board of Directors of Paralta Plays, Inc., has been at the west coast studios in Hollywood for some time working on the consummation of the deal which resulted in the financial heads of the Paralta organization represented by Mr. Katz and John E. De Wolf buying out the entire holdings of Carl Anderson, Nat I. Brown and Robert T. Kane in Paralta Plays, Inc., the Paralta studios, and the subsidiary companies controlled by Paralta Plays.

At the completion of this purchase a deal was entered into under the terms of which Robert Brunton, who has been the chief executive at the coast studios since the inception of Paralta Plays, and Jesse Durham Hampton will purchase the Paralta studios in Hollywood, where they will make pictures for Paralta Plays.

In an interview received from Mr. Katz he states: "Following numerous conferences the issues existing between the Paralta interests have been satisfactorily adjusted and our full program of production will be immediately resumed. During the period of this adjustment, however, curtailment of the Paralta program has been necessary.

"Paralta Plays, Inc., and Paralta Studios, Inc., were organized about a year ago by Robert T. Kane and Nat I. Brown, both of whom had had experience with motion picture organizations. Associated with them was Carl Anderson. The financial backing of the organization was represented by John E. De Wolf and myself. Robert Brunton, recognized as a highly competent executive in motion picture productions, was also a partner and officer, being our director of productions. Owing to disagreement over matters of policy and internal details of management, the stockholders divided into two factions. On one side was the financial element represented by Mr. De Wolf and myself, and on the other side stood Mr. Kane, Mr. Brown and Mr. Anderson, identified with the inception and promotion of the companies.

"It was during the settlement of the various issues that our production program was curtailed. Throughout all of this time, however, the financial backing of the Paralta companies was perfectly sound, but until our interests, which had invested more than one million dollars in Paralta, could be assured what element was to control, operations under normal and satisfactory conditions were out of the question. Further uncertainty is now happily at an end.

All Differences Have Been Adjusted.

"The adjustment of all differences has been effected by our purchase of the interests of Mr. Kane, Mr. Brown and Mr. Anderson in the Paralta companies, and these gentlemen are no longer associated with us or Paralta. Mr. Brunton retains his financial holdings and is now in complete charge of the production of Paralta pictures. A further agreement has been effected in the detail and manner of production. The Katz and De Wolf element will limit their activities to financing, owning and distributing pictures under the title of 'Paralta Plays, Inc.,' while Mr. Brunton and Mr. Hampton have arranged the purchase of the new and extensive Paralta studio on Melrose avenue, Hollywood. There they will make pictures for the Paralta Plays, beginning May 9. The name of this plant will be changed to the Brunton Studios. An abundance of new capital to carry out our reorganization plans is in hand, so the resumption of the full Paralta program is now assured without further delay.

"We will maintain the policy of stars; each with their own producing company. Enrolled under the Paralta banner now are Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum and J. Warren Kerrigan. While our present program calls for the production of thirty pictures a year, negotiations are under way with several other well-known screen artists to join the ranks of Paralta stars. Their acquisition will materially increase our annual production of screen features.

"Another important part of the Paralta policy will be the reorganization of the Los Angeles and New York offices. Our efforts are to be concentrated in Los Angeles, while New York is to serve chiefly as a distributing center. The latter detail of the Paralta program is being most ably handled by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Sheldon Announces Summer Schedules

New President of Mutual Believes in Taking Cognizance of the Slackening in Warm Weather.

THE Mutual Film Corporation announces a contract for the release of a series of five-part productions from the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., one every other week, beginning May 27. A new whirl of activity is sweeping through the Mutual and plans are under way for the release of a series of special productions of the first rank. An announcement of these is shortly to be issued from the offices of James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual. Mr. Sheldon is dividing his time between the Chicago and New York offices of the Mutual in his negotiations and operations. The Mutual schedule includes:

May 27, Minter, "Social Briars"; June 10, Fisher, "A Square Deal"; June 24, Russell, "Up Romance Road"; July 8, Minter, "Ghost of Rosy Taylor"; July 22, Fisher, "Impossible Susan."

The preliminary arrangements have been made for the production also of a series of feature productions starring Edna Goodrich. Production will start shortly in New York studios. It is planned to give Miss Goodrich more pretentious productions and bigger vehicles than any of those in which she has previously appeared.

The Mutual schedule of short length productions of feature quality, including Billie Rhodes in Strand Comedies and the Screen Telegram, the Mutual news reel, will be maintained. In addition a series of one-reel specialty pictures of a new type and extraordinary quality is shortly to be announced.

"The prospects are exceedingly bright for Mutual," observed President Sheldon. "We have by the contract just announced a consistent sequence of high-class productions featuring Mary Miles Minter, William Russell and Margarita Fisher. We have almost ready to announce a series of special features of the very first magnitude, featuring one of the best-known stars of the screen. We have a well-established and constantly improving news reel, the Screen Telegram. I do not need to make comment on the Strand Comedies. They have set a standard of their own in the trade.

"There may be some question as to why we have adopted an every other week release for the five-part productions on our regular schedule. In the first place it was desirable to make room in our releasing plans for the special productions that are to come. Then also it is wise to take cognizance of the fact that the experience schedules of the last few summers show that there has been a large waste in productions released through the summer period. Too many pictures without adequate drawing power have been crowded into the summer market.

"The picture business has reached a stage of development and maturity where it must from now on take cognizance of the slackening of the theatrical market in the warmer months. We have some lessons to learn from the stage in this game, and one of them is that the public must not be overfed on production in the summer. Do you know that one big group of film producers and organizers recently took under consideration a plan to suspend all releases for six weeks beginning July 1. We are not that radical. There is a good business to be had right through the summer, but observation proves that the best commercial course is to release fewer productions and work them harder. This is better policy both for us and for our customers, the exhibitors. Longer runs are coming in steadily, as evidenced by the reports coming from the Mutual's branches.

"There is a decidedly healthy trend in business among the theaters. Better showmanship is making for the theater prosperity and is having a most favorable reaction on the manufacturers and distributors of pictures.

SHERIFF ENFORCING BLUE LAWS.

Immediately after the Birmingham municipal election which defeated Sunday moving pictures in Birmingham Sheriff T. J. Batson began a war to enforce the antiquated "blue laws." Sunday moving picture houses had been closed two weeks prior to the moving picture election.

On Sunday, May 12, the sheriff and a force of deputies began closing up everything in the way of business houses which attempted to operate. Even the city of Birmingham did not escape the "arm of the law," as the deputies have been called. Hugh W. Hill, manager of East Lake Park, owned and operated by the city, was waited upon by an officer and required to make bond for each concession operated. Free moving pictures are shown at the park and were the object of attack by the authorities.

How It Is Done at the Strand

A Discussion of Methods Which Have Actually Been Worked Out Successfully.

By Harold Edel, Managing Director.

THE presentation at the Strand of a scene from grand opera in silhouette with living figures marked the first appearance of such an offering in any theater. Its novelty attracted wide interest and many inquiries were evidenced as to just how it was done.

Contrary to the general supposition that this offering was staged like the old shadowgraphs, the figures, scenery and light were all from the front of the sheet instead of from the back, just reversing the old method. In place of having the white sheet nearest to the audience with the reflections of the figures coming from the back of the stage by means of placing these figures between the light and the sheet, we put the lights directly on the sheet from the front, so that when the house was darkened the only lighted object on the stage was the sheet. Hence when the figures appeared before the sheet it was not their reflections on the sheet that the audience saw, but the actual figures themselves. The lights came from the sides and top of the sheet and were protected from the eyes of the audience by reflectors so that there would be absolutely no shadow on the sheet.

It is perhaps a little difficult to explain the mechanical workings of this presentation without drawings, but I will endeavor to make it plainer by a comparison. Imagine being in a totally dark room, one of the walls of which was then lighted up by means of lights from the sides and top of that wall. The lights were shaded so that they would only illuminate the wall. A figure is then placed a few feet away from the lighted wall, a few yards in front of yourself. Only the outline of that figure would be seen. This is the manner in which our presentation was staged.

Back stage was the white sheet with blue lights illuminating its surface. Then came a regular shadowbox, framing the sheet (four feet deep) in which the figures worked. The scenery was cut from black cardboard and placed in the shadowbox; the house was darkened and the silhouettes against the blue night sky sung "Romeo and Juliet." The entire cost of this outfit was $100, which can always be used for different views, new scenery from cardboard being easily made. The white drop was transparent so that a moon could be effectively used.

The presentation drew enthusiastic comment from such notables of the amusement world as Adolph Bolm, Leon Rotheis, Gulio Setti, Adolph Zukor and Edgar Selwyn, and the idea has resulted in the contemplation of an entire opera in silhouette at the Metropolitan. In the Strand offering Rosa Lind, noted soprano, and Ralph Errolle, accomplished tenor, presented the scene from "Romeo and Juliet." An elaborate accompaniment was accorded the bit by the Strand Orchestra, and on the whole the presentation was one of the most talked-about ever given at this theater. The idea can be worked out on a smaller scale and offers a novelty that is inexpensive and yet highly effective.

Canadian Picture Business Upset

Films Cost 75 Per Cent. More Than a Year Ago—Exchanges Will Have to Reschedule Prices.

THE comment of various Toronto exhibitors with regard to the new taxes on films in Canada, consisting of an increase of 3 cents a foot in duty and a straight tax of 15 cents a reel a day, is both emphatic and interesting. The assertions are made generally that the moving picture business is being assessed out of all proportion to the total revenue derived and that the Canadian Government has an altogether wrong opinion of the business.

"The general impression is that the moving picture industry is making millions because of the crowds that are seen in front of the theaters," declared Mr. Baillie, of the Cumback theater, who is the president of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario. "It really costs 8 out of every 10 cents to get the crowd in front of a theater," continued Mr. Baillie. "Today the films cost us 75 per cent. more than a year ago, and 150 per cent. more than when the war started in 1914."

Harry Alexander, of the Park theater, declared the additional taxes would mean that the theaters would simply have to charge higher admissions. R. S. Tickler, of the Revue theater, figured that each of the Toronto theaters would have to pay from $300 to $400 a year to the Dominion Government to cover the new tax of 15 cents a reel a day. Mr. Tickler thought the numerous taxes would have the effect of eliminating educational and scenic films. These were just the pictures that the churches wanted to see presented, but the theaters would not be able to use them because of increased taxes.

A number of the Toronto exhibitors have expressed the opinion that the exchanges will now have to arrange a schedule of standard prices for the various runs of releases to enable the theaters to get down to a systematic basis.

After consultation with leaders of the moving picture business in the Dominion, the Canadian authorities have decided to impose a duty of 3 cents a foot on all moving picture films imported from the United States and to collect a war tax of 15 cents a reel a day for every day that a picture is exhibited, it is declared.

The exchanges will be required to pay the 3-cent duty while the exhibitors will be asked to pay the 15 cents per diem charge as their share. The duty first imposed was 5 cents a foot, an increase of 3 cents over the former rate. Exchange members of Montreal and Toronto consulted with Ottawa officials and secured this arrangement.

Essanay to Teach Food Conservation

Lessons Will Be in Form of Six Trailers and Directed by Expert in Foodstuffs.

AT the suggestion of the United States Government as a means of teaching food conservation, the Essanay Film Company has begun the production of six short films on domestic science.

The work will be under the direction of Eleanor Lee Wright, an expert in foodstuffs. She will illustrate the best way to conserve meats and wheat. She will demonstrate personally and also explain in sub-titles how to employ various cuts of meats to the best advantage and make palatable dishes. Also the combination of wheat with various other grains will be illustrated, showing the many kinds of attractive breadstuffs that can be made from the combination and from cereals other than wheat.

These films are being issued without expense to the government and will be attached to Essanay's regular releases. They will be 100 to 200 feet in length, issued as six lessons in domestic science.

They will be got up attractively, so that they will be thoroughly enjoyed by the photoplay public as well as being instructive. It is expected that the first film will be ready for release by June 1 and the others each week thereafter.

FORMER WHARTON EMPLOYES KILLED AT FRONT.

Spencer Alden and Philip Mosser, aviators, who were recently killed while in the service of the United States, were formerly employes of the Wharton studios at Ithaca. During the time they were attending Cornell University they worked in several of the serials and other pictures which were produced at that time.

Howard Cody, known as the nerviest property man in the motion picture business, who did all the heavy work of scenes for "The Eagle's Eye," has enlisted in the medical department following the completion of the serial story.

Diando Enlarges Glendale Studio

Has Leased Sixty Additional Acres and Erected Western Town and Mexican Streets.

PRESIDENT W. A. S. Douglas, of the Diando Film Corporation, is returning to Los Angeles this week after a conference in New York with Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe, with which house the Diando is allied.

"We have leased sixty acres adjoining our fifteen-acre studio in Glendale," says Mr. Douglas, "and we are utilizing this space for the new serial, 'The Wolf-Faced Man,' we are now making. We have built a western town street there and a Mexican street. Both will probably be more or less permanent, as they lend themselves to 'shots' from many angles with fine surrounding country.

The Diando studio was one of the three Kalem studios and was bought by Diando about a year ago. Since buying the property Diando has built a new carpenter shop, several business office buildings in the prevalent bungalow style and has increased prop and scene buildings.

There are three outside stages and one big interior stage, 100 by 250 feet. There is a swimming lake in the studio inclosure and modern dressing rooms fully equipped have been added. Just now Diando is building a garage to accommodate twenty cars and a new cafeteria is planned.

Outdoor Stages, Dressing Rooms and Garage.

The studio is the home of the Baby Marie Osborne feature company as well as "The Wolf-Faced Man" company, and facilities are such that there is room for more producing units. Mr. Douglas plans to keep the studio at full capacity from now on.

James Young to Direct Williams

Prominent Directors Returns to Vitagraph Company After Absence of Several Years.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company, has engaged James Young to direct Earle Williams in his next feature, which probably will be "The Man from Brodneys," a five-part play made from the novel of George Barr McCutcheon of the same name. Tom Mills, who has directed Mr. Williams in his last three features, and is now engaged in completing "The Girl in His House," a Blue Ribbon feature made from the story by Harold MacGrath, in which Mr. Williams will be presented on June 24, will take a rest when he finishes the picture. Mr. Mills suffered an attack of grip during the making of "The Seal of Silence," and he has not fully recovered his health.

President Smith says that Mr. Williams and his company, the members of which have been working at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood since the first of the year, probably will remain in the west for an indefinite period. Mr. Williams, a native of California, had not been in the Bear State for five years until he went there on his trip and in a letter to the Vitagraph president recently he said that he was so well pleased with conditions out there he would like to remain as long as possible.

Have Sunday Closing, Want Censorship

Birmingham Pastors Move On for New Conquests Against Picture Theaters.

FOLLOWING the defeat of Sunday moving pictures in Birmingham, Ala., by a close vote, the Pastors' Union, enthused over its success in abolishing one of Birmingham's greatest Sunday amusement assets, has started to attack in another direction. The Pastors' Union is trying to establish a radical censor board for the city for the supervision of all pictures shown in Birmingham.

Ministers from many churches are taking the lead, claiming the present method of showing pictures as they come from the manufacturers is not safe enough for those of Birmingham's populace who attend motion picture houses. They are not content with supervision by the National Board of Review.

The matter of creating a radical board for censoring moving pictures will be presented to the Birmingham city commission, made up of local politicians who have been antagonistic to the theater men at practically every turn. The union of preachers will ask that proper ordinances be enacted to provide for the appointment of a censor board with wide powers to act as they may see fit in the censoring of all pictures and clothed with authority to enforce its decisions. The board as proposed would make Birmingham's censor organization one of the most burdensome upon the industry of any city in the South.

A committee has been appointed by the preachers to handle the matter. It is understood the plan will be to ask that penalties be provided in the proposed ordinances, one of which would permit the censor board, through the department of public safety, to close any moving picture house for a determined period if such house or houses do not act strictly in accordance with the board's desires and requirements.

The moving picture men of Birmingham have entered strong protests against this policy, but it seems to have done but little good, judging from the efforts of the theater men in the past to get a square deal from the commission.

SIEGEL BOUGHT CIGARS FOR MILDER.

Max Milder, Select's Philadelphia branch manager, was paying a short visit to the home office in New York during the early part of the week. After conference with President Lewis J. Selznick and General Manager Arthur S. Kane, Milder wandered into the New York Exchange to swap "fillum" tales with Henry Siegel, New York branch manager.

"I suppose," joshed Siegel, "now that the summer weather has set in you will be digging up the old alibi for decreasing business."

"What do you mean—decreasing business?" Milder countered. "That is not the way we do business in Philadelphia. We don't need any alibi. Select's Philadelphia office is looking for an increase. You can quote me to the boss as saying there will be no summer let-up in Select's Philadelphia Exchange."

Siegel bought the cigars.

From Scenario to Screen Picture

Oscar Apfel, World Pictures Director, Talks of Things That Help or Hinder a Film Producer in His Work.

By Hanford C. Judson.

IN the early part of the past decade a breeze began to blow across the world of motion pictures. Something new was being found in the camera. The Biograph and Vitagraph companies began to make pictures with that in them that promised a more artistic presentation of life, differing from the methods belonging to the stage.

Though picture-making was a new art, most of the earliest product had an old and almost wrinkled aspect. Pictures were made largely by men who had been stage directors and were burdened by a stagey atmosphere, because they did not know the camera. I believe the first evidences of change came from Southern Europe; but in America a few men, and of these David Wark Griffith was pre-eminent, developed it till its influence was felt by every studio in the country and every director. Some of the latter were young enough in mind and heart to hear and heed the call and they were among the inheritors of the new land of promise.

Director Oscar Apfel, now with World Pictures, was fortunate in coming to the business just when the awakening was beginning to be felt. He had had the advantage of the discipline gained by experience in legitimate stage direction —it is a discipline that must be attained before success can be hoped for in any constructive screen work—and he knew what it was to be hampered in a studio where the call to new freedom had not really been felt. He had the further good fortune to go from there to a studio organized by a man wise enough to follow a good director's leadership in matters of production. It is always the artist and not the business man who can see the new trends in his art. The business man has in the box office the means of checking up the artist; but he cannot originate of himself. J. V. Ritchie, organizer of the Reliance-Majestic studio, who became Oscar Apfel's impresario, trusted him to experiment and found that results paid. This seems to have given him confidence as an artist and enabled him to begin on a series of successes that have marked him out as an especially able director.

Like every good artist, Mr. Apfel has it as one of the items of his creed that he must keep fully abreast of his art, must watch closely all that is going on and must not permit himself to lose touch with the work of other directors. He is a constant watcher of the screen. He dreams of progress, critically analyzes the work of other directors and, if I understand him, tries to imagine how effects could be arrived at in ways that give a richer suggestion or else are more economical of the spectator's attention. The effect on the spectator is his chief interest whether he is directing or viewing. He seems wakeful to discover through the successes, failures and partial successes of himself and others, a way to still greater success in his future work, and his aim is to reach the spectator through his—it may be half-unconscious—feelings rather than to tickle his pre-conceived ideas. Of recent criticism a bit that most pleased him was that he had directed a picture with delightful disregard of how others were working.

To Mr. Apfel the element of weakness in some of the present day film production is lack of teamwork. Taking a script from an author and continuity man, he lets it, if he is satisfied with it, simmer till everything in it is clear and determined. There is then little likelihood of anything unforseen coming up in production. It seems to have become a problem of imaginative construction with many things in it like the engineer's calculated drawing for a new bridge. Finally he has copies made for each of his leading players and goes over it with them till they, too, have the same definite conception. He and they are artists, and each puts something incalculable in the work; but the end and the means to the end are clearly seen by all before the start.

The cameraman is a very important part of the team. The director who lacks knowledge of the richness of the camera's possibilities loses valuable things. The director must work through the camera with the aid of the man who tends it. There are unexplored possibilities here and he must understand all that has been accomplished before he can make new progress and conquer new realms.

Mr. Apfel says sometimes there is a lack of team work in all branches of a producing organization and it is caused by lack of real commercialism.

A penny wise pound foolish kind of commercialism takes the place of a laudable desire of making sales and economies in the studio save at the expense of the sales sheets. It is like the foolish exhibitor who won't pay for pictures that would fill his house. Some of the failures that Mr. Apfel called to my attention are choosing a cheap locality in place of the correct one and spoiling the meaning of the plot, and letting what seems poor "but good enough" in the construction go out to be made into film. Once it is film it is fixed. There is no situation in a good script so poor that mulling for a time won't discover a good and acceptable variant or alternative; but mulling will accomplish nothing after it is on the screen.

Director Apfel's ideal picture is not the big spectacle, but the intimate view of modern life in which the actors are playing characters recognizable by the spectators as relatives, neighbors, friends and enemies. Pictures of business life, factory life, home life and community life, these he finds the most popular kind of pictures.

World Film Suggests Title Clearing House

Would Base It on the Experience It Has Gained in Its Own Protective Department.

A UNIQUE department in connection with World Pictures is the title bureau. The object of this feature of the production organization is not to suggest titles for World Pictures, but to protect the company from any innocent appropriation of titles belonging to features already produced and presented to which prior rights have been obtained.

When we take into consideration that 258,000 plays have been produced on the English-speaking stage and that there are titles for over 900,000 novels and short stories, it is not difficult to realize the tremendous task the title department has to keep from encroaching upon rights of others. Of course, in a number of instances, the copyright laws guarantee the protection of titles and limit the use of a title for only a definite number of years. The copyright law thereby automatically releases a large number of titles each year. It is generally believed that one can copyright a title, but the courts have held that a title cannot be copyrighted, as it is merely a handle to indicate the proprietary rights to certain subject matter. Still the courts go further on the theory of unfair competition and guarantee proprietary rights to a combination of words because these words have something to do with a valuable right made so by usage. The combination of words, such as "Veribest," "Uneeda," "Takhoma," "Tarvia," have been classified as fanciful and such titles have been held to be the property of the creator. Generic words cannot be appropriated.

Immediately upon the production of a picture, the title department of World Pictures searches through its catalogue to learn whether or not some one else possesses a prior right to this title, and if this is found to be so another title is selected.

The suggestion is made by World Film that some day the production end of the film industry will be so well organized that a clearing house will be established to which all titles will be submitted, and if it is found that they are not available through a prior right the clearing house will grant the producers their assent to the use of these titles and will protect them accordingly.

Construction Work Begun by Titan

The President of Spokane's New Company Says Feature Production Will Be Begun This Summer.

CONSTRUCTION work on the large indoor studio of the Titan Feature Photoplay Company of Spokane has been started at Castle Hill, near Fort George Wright, and according to J. Don Alexander, president of the company, feature pictures will be made starting in the summer.

"Our indoor studio will be up to date," said Mr. Alexander, "with a clear floor space of 60 feet by 100 and a 25-foot ceiling. The plans also contemplate an outdoor studio with a floor 50 by 60 feet."

When fire was discovered in the timber near Titan City Sunday, May 5, there were 150 men from Fort Wright rushed to the place to fight the flames which were controlled late in the afternoon. No damage was done to the Titan Company's plant.

TRAVERS VALE BREAKS ARM.

Director Travers Vale has been compelled to suspend activities because of a broken arm which he received while finishing "A Woman of Redemption." He gamely started a new picture called "The Power and the Glory," despite his impediment and went South to film some scenes with June Elvidge, but the pain finally became so acute that he was forced to return to town and rest the injured member.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

WHILE the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team is making its stupendous "drive" it would seem timely to direct attention to a "one man drive" that has just been organized by James R. Cameron. The Cameron "drive" will last longer and promises to result in a great amount of good to afflicted humanity.

Working in conjunction with the Red Cross Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men, at No. 311 Fourth avenue, Mr. Cameron is undertaking the training of unfortunates who still are spared limbs which they can use in operating a motion picture machine. These cripples may be civilians, or soldiers crippled in service. The institute operates independent of other Red Cross activities, under direct control from Washington. Cripples will be instructed in useful crafts and arts with a view to making the unfortunates self-supporting.

Mr. Cameron expresses his obligation to W. C. Smith, of the Nicholas Power Co.; B. F. Porter, of Simplex Machine Co., and to William Fox, as well as to C. W. Johnson, chief electrician of the Fox enterprises. Mr. Smith and Mr. Porter have contributed projecting machines to be used for instruction purposes, and Mr. Fox has promised employment to cripples who become expert under Mr. Cameron's tuition. If the graduates cannot be employed in the Fox theaters Mr. Fox will undertake to find them positions elsewhere.

The casualty lists are increasing. The deadly breath of the Hell-Hun is marking Americans with increasing regularity. Mr. Cameron is deserving of assistance and co-operation from exhibitors throughout the country. Men crippled while defending the business, lives and prosperity of motion picture showmen here at home are entitled to consideration when they come back with the Hohenzollern mark upon them. Letters will reach Mr. Cameron addressed as noted above.

The more or less well informed M. P. World, sometimes referred to as the exhibitors Baedeker, speaks of West Madison street, Chicago, as "the heart of an immigrant district, where the picture theaters have been presumed to be in the market for only the cheaper grades of films, since the admission prices in this neighborhood are very low and the public is composed of recent arrivals to our shores." Wow! And State and Madison street crossing is known as the busiest in the world.—Exhibitors' Herald.

No official ruling having yet been made, exhibitors have their choice of several pronunciations of the first name of the proud Princess of Judea, the notorious daughter of Herodias—Salome, whom Theda Bara has portrayed for the William Fox pictures. No authentic pronunciation has been found, it is said.

The popular western pronunciation is Salome, in two syllables, with the accent on the last, rhyming with home (but not "sweet home"). In Bret Harte's story of "Salomy Jane's Kiss," it was slurred into something like "Slomy." This approximates the European style, which awards a syllable to each vowel, so that it is only a question of which gets the accent.

In Oscar Wilde's play, the title is pronounced in three syllables, with the accent on the first, suggesting almost the character of she who won the head of John the Baptist for her dancing.

In Richard Strauss's opera, the accent is customarily on the middle syllable, since the long O makes an open musical tone, and is to be desired for singing purposes.

Seemingly, there has been a diversity of opinion as to the pronunciation since Biblical times. It is expected that an official edict—official for the film version, at any rate—will soon be forthcoming.

Sherry looked up, expecting an "Excuse me," but instead, said the lady turning to her companion:

His Many-Horned Dilemma.

The city of Los Angeles recently adopted an ordinance requiring that all children appearing before the motion picture camera must be accompanied by their mothers. The wording of the law was somewhat obscure in that it suggested that the mothers would also have to appear in the picture.

While other directors were waiting for a ruling, Frank Lloyd, picturing "Riders of the Purple Sage" for William Farnum, took the mothers by the horns, so to speak, and pictured thirty of them together with their progeny at the first "shot." The canny Scotch director did not tell them that they were supposed to be Mormon women and plural wives of the Elders, for the scenes of the Zane Grey story are laid on the borders of Utah in the days when marriages were performed by wholesale.

William Farnum smiled quizzically at Lloyd's ruse to secure a suitable lot of "extras"—then casually hunted up the California statutes prohibiting proselyting or encouraging polygamy under the severest penalties. Accordingly, Lloyd is not bragging about his achievement until legal experts decide whether in obeying one ordinance he did not become liable under another law.

Second Reel.

Appropriately enough the home of this lord of laughter is called "Laughter Hall." Shaded by eucalyptus and orange trees, the gardens have a place for every known shrub and flower. Inside the thirteen rooms are apartments of luxury and refinement, each seeming more beautiful than the others.

The bed chambers are furnished each in a different period, ranging all the way from an odd futurist room, to which "Smiling Bill" escorts the guests he particularly wants to amuse, to the medieval bedroom suggesting an apartment in a Norman castle.

There are also a replica of Marie Antoinette's favorite chamber at Versailles; an art nouveau boudoir done after the manner made famous by Alphonso Mucha; an exquisite little room named the Joseph Urban, which recalls a setting for the Midnight Follies executed by that creator of striking stage pictures, and a Washington Square bedroom suggesting New York's Greenwich Village—with modern improvements.

There is also in "Laughter Hall" a honeymoon suite provided by "Smiling Bill" Parsons for his newlywed friends. The color scheme is heliotrope and rose.

Shepard Screens Savage Cat-Fish.

Two cats were used in filming "Mickey" to bring out one of the dramatic contrasts in the story. One is the lean, scrawny cat who hustled for his grub in the mountain country where Mickey lived with her foster-father. Among the close-ups of the picture one shows this cat actually fishing for frogs in the mountain stream.

"It will attract attention not only as a picture, but as a nature study" says H. J. Shepard. "If anyone were to write a magazine story about a cat that went fishing, some professor of natural history would cry a nature fake"—but he would have to believe what his eyes saw. The old feline rag-a-muffin sneaks out to the water's edge. A paw suddenly strikes out like a snake at its prey."

They found this cat in the Colorado mountains, where Mack Sennett went to film some of the scenes. The old miner whose cabin they used said that the cat learned to fish when left alone for days at a time in the cabin. He had to hustle for his food or starve. He hustled.

"Some men would probably call this a reversion to type," continues Mr. Shepard. "In their jungle days before they became domesticated, cats undoubtedly were fishers. So natural history will show that this cat did not learn how to fish—it remembered how to fish. It took up the heritage of a savage past."

Afterward the scene is shifted to a luxurious home in the city, where poor little Mickey finds the "going" hard and sorrowful. Here there is another cat—a soft silky Persian aristocrat, pampered like a prima-donna.

Betty Lee, concert singer and film star, who is featured as the Goddess of Love in "The Triumph of Venus" now being distributed by General Film Company, sent an invitation card to the pre-release showing at the Strand theater the other day to several friends who were visiting New York from her old home in the South. One of these friends brought along an old Georgia colonel to whom the whole affair was as much a novelty as it was a treat.

The Edwin Bower Hesser mythological spectacle, with its gods and goddesses, nymphs and mortals, all in more or less gauzy raiment, disporting among crags, groves and pools, entertained him highly. The friend reports that after the show he pressed the old gentleman for an opinion of the performance and Miss Lee's part in it, knowing that he would give an unbiased and characteristic verdict.

The Plaint of a Casting Director.

Some studios may have no trouble with their casting department, but if there be such we have yet to hear from them. Ours, says Lee Kugel, is improving so rapidly by the aid of expert systematizing that we can now put our fingers on almost any unattached artist in the country.

A clever arrangement of files enables us to keep in close touch with thousands, and what a variety of types these files contain—nearly every conceivable human shape, form or color. Not that we have eliminated trouble entirely, as our casting Director gets an occasional jolt. We quite unintentionally hear dialogues filtering through his office after this fashion:

Casting Director: "Well, Miss, what can I do for you today?"

Applicant: "I am a toe dancer, and am just crazy to be starred in one of your pictures."

Judge Says His Stories Are Designed for Adult Appeal

AN interesting statement comes from Judge Willis Brown, author of the fascinating stories that depict real, honest-to-goodness boy life on the screen, with the principal roles taken by clever lads in their early teens.

Ten of the Judge Brown stories have already been released by General Film in two-reel form as productions of the Boy City Film Corporation. The popularity of these stories has been reflected in the complete enjoyment of them by audiences of all kinds. The broad appreciation by grown-ups of the subtle juvenile touches worked into every scene by the author is giving these productions an enduring hold all over the country.

"I am not making pictures for children, but of children," Judge Brown explains. "No Judge Brown story is any more a picture for children than 'Peter Pan' or 'Peg o' My Heart' or any play of youth. I am making pictures of youth for adults to see and renew their youthful memories. And it is simply an added feature that in so doing we have pictures which children can enjoy as well as the grown-ups; pictures of a nature which they can witness side by side with their parents and enjoy it just as a circus may appeal with equal interest to both.

"The theater manager unfamiliar with the Judge Brown Stories may assume, because the principal actors are children, the productions are planned for childish eyes and minds. Such is not the case. The enjoyment of them by children is only incidenal to the big purpose, that of entertaining mature people with deep appreciation of the humor and pathos of life and who can enjoy the delicious fun of real existence."

What Triangle Directors Are Pushing These Days

A NEW feature picture of the South and West has been put into production at the Triangle Culver City studios under the working title of "The Heritage." It is being directed by Raymond Wells. Jack Richardson will play the part of the "heavy" lead in this production, while Irene Hunt will appear as his leading woman. In "The Heritage" both Jack Richardson and Miss Hunt play dual roles. Others in the cast include Jack Livingston, Burwell Hamrick and Buster Irving.

Arthur Hoyt, casting director, whose first effort was "High Stakes," a Triangle May release featuring J. Barney Sherry, is completing a feature production under the temporary title, "Station Content." Gloria Swanson, the former comedy beauty, will be featured in this picture. Lee Hill will be seen as Miss Swanson's leading man, and there is a strong supporting cast, including Nellie Allen, a new "heavy" woman; Arthur Millett, Diana Carrillo, William Ellingford, Ward Caulfield, May Walters and Lee Phillips. The story deals with the loves and heartaches of the theatrical profession.

The working title of a new Triangle-Keystone comedy which William Beaudine is directing is "The Poor Fish." Although this temporary title suggests aquatic feats which might prove out of the ordinary, Claire Anderson, one of the featured players, insists that she will not appear as a mermaid in this subject, but only as an ordinary girl at the wheel of a speedy racing car. In the cast are Edwin J. Brady, Gene Corey, Josie Sedgwick, Percy Challenger, Fritzie Ridgeway and Edwin Lewis. This will be Miss Sedgwick's first appearance in comedy.

"The Mossback" has been sent to the cutting department. This production was formerly announced as a Triangle May release. The play was directed by J. W. McLaughlin and features Pauline Starke, William V. Mong and Darrell Foss.

An entire new ranch set, with a big rambling ranch house, huge barns and corrals, has been erected at Indian Flats, on the Triangle Ranch studio, for scenes in the latest Roy Stewart western production, "The Red Haired Cupid." The play is being directed by Cliff Smith, master producer of "horse opera." Indian Flats is described as one of the most picturesque locations which could be chosen for a ranch home.

Belle Bennett, whose last appearance was in April, will shortly be featured in "Iron and Lavendar," a play under the direction of Gilbert P. Hamilton. Joe King will appear as leading man.

Sawmill Thrill for Blue Ridge.

A big sawmill scene, with a new assortment of thrills, is promised in an early Blue Ridge Drama now being filmed at Bat Cave by the Ned Finley company. Ned Finley, Marion Henry, Harry Hamill and Logan Paul will play the leading roles in this new production.

Theda Bara Gets Surprise.

A striking scene in the forthcoming Theda Bara super-production, "Salome," is that in which a bolt of lightning from a clear sky wrecks the God Jove that both Salome and Herod worshipped.

J. Gordon Edwards, who directed the big photodrama, called together the members of the Fox technical department at the Hollywood studios and told them just what was wanted. After much experimentation, an ingenious arrangement was made to give the effect desired. In order that Miss Bara herself might register the same surprise and fear that Salome must have shown, nothing was said to the star about the coming "miracle."

At a signal, when all the lights had been turned off, a great ball of fire descended with a roar from the studio roof and headed straight for the Jove. With a loud report and a flash of flame the bolt struck its objective, shattering the idol. It is said that Miss Bara was dramatically surprised.

Lockwood Finishes "Lend Me Your Name"

WITH the return of the Harold Lockwood Company from the mountains of California, where a number of exterior scenes were photographed, the production of Metro's forthcoming screen version of Francis Perry Elliott's novel, "Lend Me Your Name," starring Harold Lockwood, was completed under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer.

In "Lend Me Your Name," Lockwood makes his reappearance in farce comedy after having been seen in five dramas and comedy-dramas. The last farce in which Lockwood was starred was "The Haunted Pajamas," released by Metro last summer.

"Lend Me Your Name" is a story of traded identities and its resultant perplexing complications. In the supporting cast are Pauline Curley as Rosalind, Bessie Eyton as Sophronia, Bert Starkey as Dr. Dinger, Stanton Heck as Hastings, a real estate agent posing as a nobleman; Harry De Roy as Smithers, and Peggy Prevost as Phyllis.

May 27 has been set by Metro as the release date for the picture.

Universal to Feature Two-Reel Productions

UNIVERSAL, on June 10, will begin to release weekly two-reel western dramas. This is the answer of President Carl Laemmle of Universal to the numerous requests he has received from exhibitors to make two-reel subjects that may be released and advertised in the same manner as five-reel features.

In making his announcement of the coming features Mr. Laemmle, writing from Universal City, where he is at present, to the executives in the New York office said:

"You will kindly issue notice to the trade immediately that we will release some of the best two-reel features possible to make. The first of these will be released on June 10 and we will release one feature weekly thereafter.

"The two-reel features will consist largely of western and railroad dramas. They will contain all the thrills possible, and every one will be based on a regular story. As you know I always have insisted that the 'story is the thing.'

"My decision to make these two-reel features is the result of a study of the entire field with the assistance of numerous exhibitors. The exhibitors with whom I have talked and corresponded have been quick to realize that there are thousands of stories from which good two-reel dramas may be made, but that these same stories are without the groundwork necessary for a five-reel feature. In other words there are not enough situations in the stories to make five thousand feet of entertaining film.

"Henceforth Universal will be on the outlook for stories that will make good two-reel subjects, and we believe we will succeed in turning out regular box-office attractions."

"Wild Women and Tame Lions" (Fox).

What is said to be one of the most remarkable comedies ever produced, because of the great number of animal "stunts" that figure in it, is "Wild Women and Tame Lions," a Sunshine comedy release for June from Fox Film Corporation. According to a statement from the company offices this funmaker has some thrilling scenes, almost without equal, in which lions and crocodiles take part. It is said the picture is even more laughable than "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells," also made under the supervision of Henry Lehrman.

"Prunella" Comes May 27.

Marguerite Clark's next appearance in a Paramount picture is on May 27 in the title role of "Prunella," a part of great pathos, with intense dramatic situations. It is an adaptation of the play by Granville Barker and Laurence Housman and was directed by Maurice Tourneur.

Scene from "High Stakes" (Triangle).

"Old Loves for New" and "High Stakes" Lead Triangle

A DRAMA of society, "Old Loves for New," featuring Margery Wilson, is the first release on the Triangle May 26 program. The story is by Adela Rogers St. John. Opening amid scenes of luxurious New York society, the plot relates how a shallow and thoughtless debutante is married to the worldly scion of wealth through the tactful efforts of her mother. Later in the environment of the rugged but picturesque West, after many trials and thrilling experiences, their loveless marriage developes into a real romance. Margery Wilson is supported by an unusually strong cast, including Lee Hill and Lee Phelps. Raymond Wells directed the production, while G. E. Peterson photographed.

"High Stakes," the second release of the week, features J. Barney Sherry in the part of a modern Raffles. Jane Miller, a new leading woman, will make her first appearance with Triangle, playing opposite to Sherry. Dick Rosson is also a member of the supporting cast, which is large and adequate.

The environment is that which surrounds the aristocratic side of life in London. "High Stakes" relates the story of a gentleman burglar, who, having once come into contact with the brighter side of life, realizes the happiness that comes from a clean conscience. Accordingly he makes restitution for his misdeeds and through the love for his little son his ambition is stimulated to the development of a life of honor and happiness.

Arthur Soutar wrote the story, which was scenarioized from a magazine story. Arthur Hoyt directed the production. Elgin Leslie was the photographer.

San Francisco Police Spoil Hayakawa Scene

SESSUE HAYAKAWA barely escaped arrest one day recently while making a get-away from one of the mansions in the aristocratic neighborhood of Washington Park, San Francisco.

Hayakawa had made a hurried exit from the house, when Horace Davies, who plays the part of an admiral in Uncle Sam's Navy, stepped out on a side balcony overlooking an extensive lawn and fired several shots at him. Hayakawa fell, quickly regained his feet, and was just resuming his flight from the place when two mounted police officers who were attracted to the scene by the shots "nabbed" him.

Despite his protests, Hayakawa, who very naturally was regarded by the officers as an offender of the law, was dragged back to the house. There the officers discovered that they had marred the finish of an important scene of the first of the Hayakawa Productions, and, after apologizing for their interruption, quickly returned to their station.

It was necessary, of course, to retake part of the scene, as the script provided for Hayakawa's escape, and the police at that time had no place in the picture.

Pathe Active on the Coast.

Bessie Love and Robert Thornby, her director, and the Bessie Love company have returned to Los Angeles from Bear Valley, where they filmed a great forest fire scene for "Carolyn of the Corners."

The month of May is a busy one for Pathe stars in California. Speeding up, Fannie Ward has finished "The Narrow Path," Bryant Washburn has completed "All Wrong," Frank Keenan has put the final touches on "The Sierra Sixties," and Bessie Love is due to complete "Carolyn of the Corners" by Memorial Day. Baby Marie Osborne will write "finis" on "The Record" by that day too.

The first episode of the new serial, "Hands Up," is on the way and the third episode of "The Wolf-Faced Man" is being filmed at this writing.

"The Yellow Ticket" Leads Pathe for Week of June 2

PATHE'S new program, to be released June 2, starts off with the big feature that has been so widely discussed and for which Pathe has planned one of the most elaborate advertising and promotion campaigns this house has yet undertaken, Fannie Ward in "The Yellow Ticket." The first showing in New York will be at the Rialto theater on June 2, and simultaneously Michael Morton's big throbbing play, said to have been improved even by its adaptation to the screen, will be shown in many leading theaters throughout the country. In Fannie Ward's support appear Milton Sills, Warner Oland, Armand Kalisz, J. H. Gilmour, Leon Bary, Nicholas Dunaew and Helen Chadwick.

Episode No. 13 of "The House of Hate" is included in this program, and it is said to be just as exciting and with just as many punches in its two reels as the earlier chapters of this mystery serial in which "The Hooded Terror" is the villain. Pearl White and Antonio Moreno lead a raid on a den of German spies in this episode.

Harold Lloyd comedies are rapidly taking their place as big favorites in single-reel releases. In the laughmaker presented on this program Harold plays the lead in "The City Slicker." The plot hinges upon the smart young man who is lured to liven up a little country hotel with highly amusing results attendant upon his activities.

Part IV of "Britain's Bulwarks," the official British war pictures, is released on June 2, the subject being "How England Treats Her Prisoners." This number will probably prove the most interesting of the whole series, since with German cruelty to English, French and Americans in mind, it will be enlightening to see just how humane England cares for the hordes of Hun prisoners now in various camps in the British Isles.

Hearst-Pathe News No. 46 and No. 47 are released on Wednesday, June 5, and Saturday, June 8, respectively.

Good Support for Marsh in Goldwyn's "All Woman"

IN her latest Goldwyn production, "All Woman," by E. Lloyd Sheldon, Mae Marsh is supported by an exceptionally capable company of screen players. As her leading man Miss Marsh has Jere Austin, long prominent in leads on the speaking stage. Before casting his lot with screen folk Austin was widely known for his work in many Broadway stage productions and for several years was leading man in three road productions. In "All Woman" Austin has the role of Austin Strong.

John Sainpolis, another popular player, has an important role. Sainpolis has been seen in support of the most popular screen stars, and like Austin is making his first appearance in Goldwyn Pictures. He, too, has had stage experience.

Madelyn Klare, as Millie, has a part that suits her talents admirably. Elsie Sothern is another of Mae Marsh's aids whose screen achievements deserve more than passing attention. She has had important parts in several successful serials.

Arthur Housman, prominently known for his juvenile characterizations, has no end of opportunities to display his talents. Three years in stock and two seasons in Broadway productions have given him the required experience to portray the important role intrusted to him in the latest Mae Marsh picture.

Other screen players of prominence assigned worthwhile parts are Jack Dillon, a favorite in many Western screen dramas; Hazel Alden and Lois Alexander.

Hobart Henley, under whose supervision "The Face in the Dark," Mae Marsh's previous success was made, is also director of "All Woman."

Clover Stars Stimulated.

Reports from the National Film Corporation's Denver studio, where "Bud" Duncan and "Dot" Farley are co-starred in Clover Comedies, is to the effect that bringing them together in the same productions has had a remarkably stimulating effect upon both. It has been found that the situations developed between them are more ludicrous than any opportunity would afford if they were working singly. At the same time each is stimulated to especial effort.

The latest releases of the Clover Comedies through General Film include "A Widow's Camouflage" and "Love's Lucky Day." Kewpie Morgan, one of the biggest and most good natured of comedians, is the other member of the trio of comedians featured.

Derby Pictures Shown Day After Races.

Orchestra Hall, Chicago, showed the running of the Kentucky Derby, May 13, forty-eight hours after the historic classic turf event at Churchill Downs. This is one of the features of Screen Telegram No. 23 released by Mutual, May 19. The event shows the spectacular race at every stage. The monster crowd of 40,000 was gathered to witness the forty-fourth running of the oldest turf classic in the world, worth $20,000 to the winner.

Mabel Normand to Aid Thrift Stamp Drive

MABEL NORMAND'S originality combined with her desire to be of genuine service in connection with the present Thrift Stamp drive is responsible for the star's forthcoming appearance in a unique motion picture.

Feeling that she might do more than make speeches in theaters to stimulate buyers of Thrift Stamps, and realizing that after all her silent art is more powerful than her oral arguments, Miss Normand conferred with Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, and the two hit upon an unusually happy solution of the matter.

She will act in a specially written scenario, a short subject calculated to show a new phase of the benefit to be derived from liberal purchases of Thrift Stamps. In no sense a tract the little play will entertain first of all and incidentally drive home a message in telling fashion.

The photoplay has all the elements of interest, suspense, and surprise, with the star offering a distinctly different characterization. It is the purpose of Goldwyn to show the photoplay in principal Eastern cities, arranging wherever possible to have Mabel Normand appear in conjunction with it.

Fox Studio Activities On Atlantic and Pacific

TWO productions, one a special feature, the other a Standard picture, have been finished at William Fox's western studios. Tom Mix completed "Ace High," under the direction of Lynn Reynolds. This is the story which provides Mix with opportunities to display his horsemanship.

The Standard picture was made under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards and will be a June release, with the title "Under the Yoke."

Progress is also reported from the Coast on "Riders of the Purple Sage," which Frank Lloyd is directing and in which William Farnum is starred.

"The Bird of Prey," in which Gladys Brockwell has stellar honors, will soon be finished at Hollywood by Director Edward J. Le Saint.

In the east five Fox companies are engaged. Jane and Katherine Lee are farther advanced on their vehicle than the others.

June Caprice is doing interiors on "Miss Innocence," the startling adventures of a girl in modern Bohemia. Virginia Pearson is also working on interiors for "Her Price," a dramatic subject that Edmund Lawrence is screening.

George Walsh is well under way on a vehicle with which Burton George will make his directorial debut for Mr. Fox. The picture bears the tentative title of "The Sleepwalker." Peggy Hyland, under Carl Harbaugh's direction for the first time, is busy at Fort Lee on "Other Men's Daughters."

Franklin Praises Miss Talmadge.

Norma Talmadge, the Select star, who recently completed a screen version of "De Luxe Annie," that interesting stage success, is proceeding rapidly with the filming of her succeeding production. It is the story of a music hall dancer who is rescued by her soldier lover from a theater fire and also from falling prey to one of the harpies who infest the dramatic world.

"Sid" Franklin, who is directing Miss Talmadge, is glowing with appreciation of the actress' performance. "Even back in the old times," said Mr. Franklin the other day, "when Norma Talmadge was first being starred and my brother and I were her directors it was easily patent that here was a girl whose future held remarkable promise. After our association was severed my brother and I were always on the lookout for her pictures, and we followed with great interest her career, noting the increased felicity of her performance in each succeeding production."

R. W. Pinkham with Triangle.

Ralph W. Pinkham, who has held the position as assistant manager of the Boston office of the Mutual Film for the past five years, has left to join the sales force of the Triangle exchange in Boston.

"A Dog's Life" Enters Upon Fourth Week at Talley's

ONE of the most interesting evidences of the remarkable pulling power of Charlie Chaplin's first $1,000,000 that has come to light is furnished in a statement from the First National Exhibitors' Circuit to the effect that "A Dog's Life" entered upon the fourth consecutive week of its run at T. L. Talley's Broadway theater in Los Angeles on May 12.

If there were any lingering doubts in the minds of American exhibitors regarding the advisability of increasing the length of runs on pictures of wide popular appeal the publication of this fact should dispose of the argument to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Mr. Talley says that he originally thought of putting on "A Dog's Life" for two weeks, but at the end of the first fortnight he found that box office receipts were steadily increasing as the word-of-mouth advertising of enthusiastic fans began to get in its effect.

So far as known this marks a record in motion picture annals for length of run of any picture that has been produced in less than five reels.

Reports received from F. V. Fisher, manager of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Inc., of Seattle, also bear witness to the fact that "A Dog's Life" is proving a veritable box office clean-up in the Northwest.

Marcus Loew Books "Cecilia" For 70 Days

MARION DAVIES' first production for the Marion Davies Film Company an interpretation of Katherine Haviland Taylor's popular novel, "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," is practically finished, and the offices and studio of the concern buzz with activity in the final preparations for releasing the picture. Julius Steger, under whose personal direction the production was created, is putting the finishing touches upon it.

At that time decision will be made whether to exhibit the production for a summer run on Broadway or to confine the activities of the company to the usual limitations of manufacturers and present the picture through the distributing channels ordinarily employed. The Marion Davies management feels confident that it has a big property in "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," with a large clientele awaiting it because of the wide vogue enjoyed by the book. This impression has been strengthened by the action of Marcus Loew in giving the picture a seventy days' booking for all his theaters. This, however, would not conflict with prerelease exhibition at high prices, and the temptation is strong to put it on at a Broadway theater in spite of the natural hesitancy of the producers to embark as exhibitors.

June 3 is fixed as the date when "Cecilia" will be ready for release. The story, which is on the order of a sociological and pyschological sketch depicting the mental and spirited struggles imposed upon a daughter of the tenements by her sudden rise to riches, is rather familiar through the big sale the book achieved.

Julius Steger is as happy over the results achieved by Miss Davies, and has showered her with congratulations.

Patricia Palmer in Wolfville Tales.

Patricia Palmer is the heroine of the series of Wolfville Tales now being distributed by the General Film Company. Miss Palmer has been playing important roles in O. Henry Stories and in features produced at the western studio of the Vitagraph Company. Her first appearance as an Alfred Henry Lewis heroine is "Cynthiana," a current release. She will be seen also as "Faro Nell" and "Tucson Jennie."

Mary Merch in Farnum Support.

After much deliberation over the choice of a leading woman for William Farnum in "Riders of the Purple Sage," Director Frank Lloyd selected Mary Merch for this important role. Miss Merch is a newcomer to the Fox organization, but is well known in the stage and screen world. She will impersonate Jane Withersteen, the young woman who fights against persecution by the Mormons of forty years ago.

Mary Merch was born in Los Angeles and had a long stage career that included engagements with May Robson and Zelda Sears. Shortly after she played the lead in the stage version of "Today" she went before the camera on her initial photodrama. Among the others in Mr. Farnum's company are William Scott, Katherine Adams, Murdock McQuarrie, Marc Robbins, Nancy Caswell and J. Holmes.

Fay Tincher in "Main 1-2-3" (World).

Madge Kennedy Scraps In "The Fair Pretender"

Madge Kennedy's existence in "The Fair Pretender," her latest Goldwyn production, is just one scrap after another. The Goldwyn star delights in the role, nevertheless, for Madge Kennedy of the screen is no different from Madge Kennedy of the stage.

Miss Kennedy, as Sylvia in "The Fair Pretender," finds herself in hot water right from the start. As a typist in a theatrical office it would seem but natural that she should aspire to become an actress. Often she tries to impress her employer with her histrionic talents. But one day while displaying them the employer's wife happens into the office and finds Sylvia a Juliet in her husband's arms. After a tussle with the enraged woman Sylvia loses her job and has to seek cheaper living quarters. And we just guess that will do for a beginning.

General to Distribute "Zeppelin L-21" Film

AFTER all preparations had been made to distribute "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21" on a state right basis, the plans of the Interstate Film Company were changed to secure a wider distribution through General Film Company. The latter company announces that it has undertaken to handle this thriller of actual war events through its thirty exchanges in the United States and Canada. Special one-sheet and three-sheet posters are now being prepared by General Film, and slides and other advertising material will be immediately available.

"The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21" is a condensed, exciting and connected story of war adventures, the climax of which is the victory of Great Britain's anti-aircraft defenses against the Hun dirigible which had bombed the east coast of England an the environs of London. Presented in two-reel form, the picture necessarily is one of action clear through.

Ebony Completes "Millionaire Piker."

Luther J. Pollard, president and general manager of the Ebony Film Corporation, Chicago, producers of the Ebony Comedies, released on the General Film program, announces the completion of "A Millionaire Piker." Sam Robinson has a part which perhaps offers him great scope as a negro comedian. The genuine negro humor is forcefully brought out in this fifteen minutes of hearty laughs. Supporting is Vyonne Junior, who plays the part of a "prima donna" of a local tough cabaret, while Samuel Jacks handles the heavy end. The production was written for the screen by Ralph R. Weddell, and was directed by Charles N. David. Mattie Edwards, a former leading comedienne with Lubin, is featured in a story now being made.

Thrills in June Caprice Story.

Thrilling situations, in which June Caprice has an opportunity to do some fine acting, are said to be included in "Blue-Eyed Mary," the current special feature release from William Fox's eastern studios. Harry Millarde, who has staged all of June Caprice's recent pictures, is the director of the film, and Frances Crowley wrote the scenario. The cast includes Helen Tracy, Blanche Hines, Bernard Randall, Thomas Fallon, Jack McLean, Florence Ashbrooke and Henry Hallam.

Agnes Ayres Plays "Enchanted Profile."

Agnes Ayres, the leading woman in a number of the most successful O. Henry stories, appears before her friends in an entirely new role shortly in the "Enchanted Profile." Miss Ayres plays the part of the stenographer whose face bears such a striking resemblance to that of Miss Liberty on the dollar that she is adopted by a miserly old woman. Miss Ayres studio associates paid her the compliment of calling her "Miss Liberty" while the filming of the story was under way.

"Under the Yoke." "Wild Women and Tame Lions." "Blue-Eyed May."

Scenes from Three Recent Fox Productions.

Scene from "Tucson Jennie" ("Wolfville Tales," General Film).

General Film Releases Its Initial Wolfville Tale

THE third of the famous Wolfville Tales in two-part form, "Tucson Jennie's Heart," is released this week by General Film Company, and is one of the snappiest of the short stories written by the late Alfred Henry Lewis. Patricia Palmer, who plays the part of "Tucson Jennie," brings this famous heroine to life in one of the ablest characterizations she has done.

The lively Wolfville humor of the original story is retained in the titles, taken direct from the story. It deals with the attempt of Wolfville's leading citizens to settle for Jennie the problem of her heart affairs.

"The Girl and the Graft," a delightful O. Henry story, with Agnes Ayres and Edward Earle, will follow this Wolfville Tale next week as the Broadway Star Features release. Admirers of these quaint tales in picture form are sure to be well entertained.

Marcus Loew Books Beach's "Heart of the Sunset"

THE biggest booking of the spring season was given last week by Marcus Loew to the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation for Rex Beach's greatest Southwestern romantic drama, "Heart of the Sunset," which will usher in the summer season at every Loew theater in the New York metropolitan and suburban zones—covering a period of seventy odd days. That this powerful exhibitor should give this blanket booking to the big Rex Beach special production lays emphasis upon the power and quality of the picture.

The Loew booking was obtained by Alfred Weiss, one of Goldwyn Distrubuting Corporation's vice-presidents, and covers the following Loew houses: Fulton, Greeley Square, Hoboken, Lincoln Square, National, Newark, New Rochelle, New York Theater and Roof, 116th Street, Orpheum, Palace of Brooklyn, Victoria, American, Avenue B, Bijou, Boulevard, Broadway, Circle, DeKalb, Delancey Street, Eighty-sixth Street, Forty-second Street, Warwick and West End.

During the last few days Mr. Weiss also closed a first run contract for Boston with the Boston theater, in the heart of the Washington street downtown district of the Hub.

The showing of Mr. Beach's picture at the Loew houses will cause this famous author to depart from a long-standing rule. At the personal solicitation of Mr. Loew he will appear in person at the various Loew houses, coming face to face with more patrons of the photoplay than he has ever met before.

Lytell Making "No Man's Land."

Bert Lytell appears in several scenes of "No Man's Land," his second picture in the Metro program, in the garb of a convict. The production of "No Man's Land" is well along at Metro's West Coast studios, with Will S. Davis directing.

The picture is from the novel by Louis Joseph Vance, adapted for the screen by Bert Lytell and A. S. Le Vino. "No Man's Land" is the description of an island off the Pacific Coast on which much of the exciting action takes place. To photograph a number of these island scenes, Mr. Lytell and his supporting cast have gone to Catalina. "No Man's Land" is a romance of love and adventure. Anna Q. Nilsson is leading woman. Others in the cast are Eugene Pallette, Charles Arling, Edward Alexander, and Molly McConnell.

Diamond Comedies Ready for Release.

General Film Company is about ready to release the Diamond Comedies, featuring Diana Allen with a trio of capable comedians. "Way Up in Society" is the initial screen vehicle for the former "Follies" star. Nearly a score of pretty girls appear in the production, which has been staged on an elaborate scale for a one-reel comedy. Many of the scenes were taken in historic Audubon Park at New Orleans, and in the mansion of the late W. P. Brown. "His Fatal Fate" is announced as the second of the Diamond comedies.

Nazimova to Be Seen in Kistemaecker Subject

SCREEN CLASSICS, INC., has obtained through the foreign agents of the Belgian dramatist, Henri Kistemaecker, the motion picture rights for that writer's greatest play, "L'Occident," for the use of the celebrated Russian star, Nazimova. This will be the third in her series. Metro, as in the case of Nazimova's other pictures, will distribute this new picture. The title for the screen version will be selected by the star. The only play of Kistemaecker's which has yet received American presentation is "The Spy," in which Edith Wynne Matthison appeared on the speaking stage.

Albert Capellani will direct Mme. Nazimova, and much is expected from this brilliant combination of star and director. Mr. Capellani has long been an admirer of the great Russian's dramatic gifts, and Mme. Nazimova is delighted that the celebrated Frenchman is to be her director. In collaboration with June Mathis, Mr. Capellani is now engaged in making a scenario of the drama.

Complete scenario versions of two great photodramas will be ready for Mme. Nazimova when she finishes her season of Ibsen plays at the Plymouth theater in June and returns to the Metro studio to continue the making of special productions de luxe. The second production, which will follow "L'Occident," will be the star's success of last season on the speaking stage, "'Ception Shoals."

Kerigan Back at Work.

J. Warren Kerrigan has fully recovered from the broken leg which he sustained last August, and is again at work at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles. Settings for his new Paralta Play, "Toby," which will be a visualization of the book of the same name by Crede Harris, were completed about two weeks ago, and Mr. Kerrigan started the filming of the initial scenes last week under the direction of Raymond B. West. The story of the new vehicle is laid in the Kentucky hills. Miss Lois Wilson, who has appeared opposite Mr. Kerrigan in his former Paralta Plays, will again be seen as his leading woman.

Selects Sisters to Play Sister Roles.

Maurice Tourneur is a sticker for realism. His first independent production, the Drury Lane melodrama, "Sporting Life," has two prominent sister roles; in fact, one of the parts is that of the heroine. Mr. Tourneur declined to engage two actresses who remotely looked alike and to cast them for the parts. He insisted upon finding actual sisters to interpret the character. It was a difficult task, since the roles are of the ingenue type yet call for considerable emotional ability, but Mr. Tourneur finally found the Binney sisters. Freddie and Constance, one of whom is now dancing in "Oh, Lady, Lady!"

Fox to Reissue Six Biggest Bara and Farnum Plays

AN announcement from the Fox offices says that the organization is about to release new versions of six of the most popular box office successes that Mr. Fox has made. The pictures, which are now being re-titled and re-edited by Hettie Gray Baker, editor of the Fox productions, will be issued to exhibitors over a period soon to be announced.

The films selected are three Theda Bara subjects and three William Farnum plays.

The Theda Bara subjects are: "A Fool There Was," "The Clemenceau Case" and "The Two Orphans." The Farnum subjects are: "The Bondman," "The Plunderer" and "A Soldier's Oath."

These dramas were chosen following an intensive mail inquiry among exhibitors. The investigation included personal visits to leading exhibitors and a postal-card canvass among thousands. Four thousand replies were received. The sentiment for the six pictures named was surprisingly unanimous.

The first of the group will be released in its new and entirely modernized form sometime in the latter part of June. A decision has not yet been reached as to the exact order in which the six will go forth. New and attractive lithographs new photos and new lobby displays are a part of the subsidiary material provided for exploitation.

All of the Fox exchanges have full details of the plans, and the exhibitors may get complete information from branch managers. The six photoplays are to be marketed separately and independently of any other productions.

Prints of the six productions will soon be available at each of the exchanges for general distribution.

Pathe's Travel Series Will Be Released June 16

FOLLOWING the announcement that forty of the most prominent newspapers in the United States would present a series of fifty-two one-a-week one-reel travel pictures released through the Pathe exchanges, it is learned that the Post Film Company, producers of these pictures, has been working on the proposition for over two years, starting out with the definite plan of taking its own travel pictures and tying up with the most influential newspapers. The company selected Pathe to distribute the films.

Since in each big city the important newspaper presents the Travel Series as its own property, there is no limit to what it may do to boost it and build business for exhibitors playing it. The paper will run a weekly story of the film released each seven days, considerable advertising—one-half page, one-quarter page, etc.—and advertisements each week announcing the theaters at which the travel pictures are shown.

In those few exchange centers where newspapers have not yet been approached in this matter or where negotiations are now being carried on with a view to closing, until such time as definite arrangements are made, the Pathe exchanges will be furnished prints with main titles reading "Post Film Company, Inc., Travel Series." However, every indication points to the Post Film Co. closing each newspaper territory well ahead of release date (June 16), and therefore all exhibitors will have the same advantage in presenting these pictures.

The first release, dealing with "St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands of the United States of America," shows our newly acquired island possession of St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands, recently purchased by the United States from Denmark, for $25,000,000.

Three Stories in Work At the Goldwyn Studios

THREE new and unusually promising productions are in immediate prospect at the Goldwyn studios. A last-minute change in plans makes the Mae Marsh release for June 2 a dramatic photoplay from the original story of E. Lloyd Sheldon called "All Woman." This is to be released in place of the same star's "The Glorious Adventure," which, with the substitution, automatically becomes the subsequent Marsh release, falling probably about the middle of July.

Mabel Normand is at work on "The Venus Model," written by H. R. Durant, of the Goldwyn scenario staff. It is a story of business and a romance built around a bathing frock dubbed the Venus Model. It recalls Mabel Normand's happiest adventures on the screen, and provides many moments of laughter, suspense, and genuine charm.

Madge Kennedy is busy at Fort Lee on "The Service Star," written for her by Charles A. Logue. Despite the title this is not a war story. The only part the great world conflict plays in the drama is to serve as a sketchy background for a thrilling, intensely modern story enacted right here at home. Charles Miller, who directed Miss Kennedy in "The Fair Pretender," is supervising the new production.

Billie Rhodes Plays Rustic Maid.

Saucy Billie Rhodes gives the simple rustic maid some pointers on flirting in "Her Rustic Romeo," a Strand comedy. The litle flapper vamp is a pastmaster in the art of ensnaring the gilded youth, so when she takes a hand in a bucolic romance and instructs the unsophisticated country maid in the wiles what chance has the poor rube philanderer? It's marry the girl or come across with the heart-balm coin, and the rustic swain decides on orange blossoms.

This comedy is released by Mutual, May 28.

Scene from "The Lesson" (Select).

Unusual Double Exposure in "The Ordeal of Rosetta"

ALICE BRADY'S Select picture for May, "The Ordeal of Rosetta," is marked by all-round production. One of the most interesting features is the unique trick photography devised by Director Emile Chautard and his cameraman, Jacques Bizuel.

There is an especially fine instance of double exposure in the scene where Professor Gelardi, played by Henri Leone, puts his arms around both of his twin daughters, Rosetta and Lola, both of whom are portrayed by Alice Brady, despite their entire difference in looks, temperament and disposition. The star appears on both sides of her father at the same time, of course, but there is no break in the center of the film.

Throughout the entire story, which was written by Edmund Goulding, the scenarioist now doing his bit with the A. E. F. in France. Alice Brady plays both roles herself; no double is employed at any time. There are many scenes in which one sister sees the other, either in life or in vision, and while these are not very unusual, they are exquisitely done and contribute largely to the convincingness of the photoplay.

Miss Brady's leading man in this production was Crauford Kent. Ormi Hawley has the female lead. The rest of the cast includes Maud Turner Gordon, Ed Burns, Hazel Washburn and George Henry.

"Under the Yoke" Is a Tale of the Philippines

THEDA BARA'S super-production, "Under the Yoke," described as a fighting drama of the Philippines, which William Fox will release in June, has just been completed at Hollywood. It tells a story of an incident in the early days of American occupation of the Islands. Miss Bara portrays a character which is said to combine all the salient qualities of Carmen and Cigarette.

The Fox star again appears in a sympathetic role, this time depicting the romance of a Spanish girl who is in love with an American army captain. The picture is based on a story by George Scarborough, and was scenarioized by Adrian Johnson. The direction was by J. Gordon Edwards, this being the twenty-sixth picture he has directed for Fox.

The story is being described in advertising and publicity matter, including lithographs, as the "picture of the fight for love of a woman of no regrets." In love with an American army officer, Maria, the daughter of a wealthy Spanish grandee, rejects the suit of the overseer of her father's plantation. The rejected suitor foments a revolt, captures the girl and her sweetheart, and is about to put them to death when they are rescued by a force of American troops.

Innovations are said to have been introduced in the photography of the production, which, besides depicting the beauty of the tropics, contains many stirring battle scenes between American troops and forces of insurrectos.

Educationals at New York Houses.

The preleases of the Educational Films Corporation at the New York Rivoli, May 12, is the Katzenjammer cartoon, "Fisherman's Luck," and the one at tht Strand is "Night Animals," by Professor Ditmars. These same pictures are on the regular releases of the Educational for the week beginning Sunday, May 19. Gregory La Cava manufactured the nightmare contraptions in "Fisherman's Luck," but it is a question whether they are any more wonderful than the actual animal oddities unearthed by Raymond L. Ditmars in the regular natural history film.

The professor shows the 'possum in his natural habitat; also his extremely goggle-eyed cousin of the South African jungles; also the ant-eating sloth, with a tongue half as long as his body that enables him to get his rations without stirring from a sitting posture.

Like the other Katzenjammers, this is an International Film Service cartoon, and is released exclusively through the Educational.

Good Support for Bushman and Bayne.

In their comedy-drama, "The Scheme," Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are supported by a cast of popular players of the stage and screen. This Metro All-Star Series picture was written by Katharine Kavanaugh, adapted by June Mathis, and directed by Charles J. Brabin. William Dunn, recently a star in Vitagraph pictures, plays the role of Jim, a crook. Leslie Stowe is cast as Dudley, the father of Jim and Molly. Mabel Frenyear has the role of Molly, the crook girl. Rolinda Bainbridge is cast as Mrs. Ames.

Lila Blow portrays the part of Mrs. Byrd Cutting. Elise MacLeod plays the comedy role of Miss Nobody Home. Jack B. Hollis impersonates an eccentric Englishman. Armorel McDowell is seen as the human bullet in the Liberty Loan gun scenes.

"The Scheme" will be released by Metro on June 24.

Browne Writes Page For Goldwyn Play

In furtherance of its specially-devised advertising campaign for Mabel Normand's newest Goldwyn Picture, "Joan of Plattsburg," Goldwyn has arranged for the publication in more than 200 American and Canadian newspapers of a full page fiction version of Porter Emerson Browne's story, illustrated with stills from the production. Mr. Browne himself has written the story and Goldwyn has had it prepared for newspaper use in seven and eight column page matrices, which are being sent to all newspapers requesting them.

Goldwyn has directed its branch managers and salesmen to make every effort to tie up the publication of the "Joan of Plattsburg" story with the showing of the film play in towns and cities throughout the country. It plans in this way to derive the maximum publicity benefits from the scheme. Theater owners also will work through newspapers with which they advertise.

Good Reports on "O'Garry."

Reports from the field received by Generaly Film Company indicate that the Blue Ridge Dramas, in which Ned Finley and Marion Henry are featured, are scoring a hit. Two "O'Garry" stories and two southern mountaineer dramas in this series, produced at Bat Cave by the Ned Finley Films, Inc., have so far been released. Especially have "The Return of O'Garry" and "O'Garry Rides Alone" shown that the public demands the romantic adventure type of northwest stories.

Ned Finley in Blue Ridge Drama.

An "O'Garry" story forms every third or fourth release in the Blue Ridge Series. Among the mountain dramas, "The Man from Nowhere," one of the strongest stories in which Ned Finley has ever appeared, will be released this week by General Film.

"Blue Bird" Shown to Teachers.

A special matinee was given to the teachers of Greater Boston, Saturday morning, May 18, at the Fenway theater by Stanley Sumner, manager. The show was under the direction of Miss Mabel Anderson, chairman of the Publicity Committee of the Massachusetts Teachers' Federation, and Miss Bessie Barnes, chairman of the Hygiene Committee.

The special feature of the show was the Artcraft production, "The Blue Bird," which was presented by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This was followed by a Burton Holmes Travelogue and a comedy.

Clothes and Clothes in Million Dollar Dollies

A REAL fashion show of the screen will be presented by the Dolly Sisters in their exquisite Screen Classics production, "The Million Dollar Dollies." Roszika and Yancsi Dolly appear in forty-eight changes of costume in this five-act picture, which was written and directed by Leonce Perret. The sisters in their up-to-date garb are involuntarily contrasted with beauties of the harem in flowing robes, and will prove once and for all to the satisfaction of the western hemisphere at least that the modish outlines of nowadays are more pleasing to the eye than the formless costumes of the Orient.

Every conceivable sort of apparel in which young girls are ever seen is shown in "The Million Dollar Dollies," and all are of the loveliest. Outside its clever story and brisk action the picture provides an ocular feast in its gowns and stage settings. The picture opens with Roszika and Yancsi just awakening from sleep, wearing the most exquisite night apparel.

The plot of "The Milion Dollar Dollies" requires Roszika to impersonate a wonderful new kind of fish. She is wound in lengths of black gauze on which gold spangles are used to simulate scales. Both girls swim in the Rajah's private pool, wearing satin bathing suits of black and white vertical stripes, one shoulder of each costume being uncovered.

Clothes have their part to play in giving the right atmosphere of richness and charm to this elaborate production starring the Dolly Sisters.

Petrova's Fourth Released in June.

"Tempered Steel," Madame Olga Petrova's fourth picture made by the Petrova Picture Company, will be released by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit during the first week of June. This screen drama, which is said to be an unusual example of the art of working up suspense, is the first of the Polish actress' pictures to be directed by Ralph Ince. George Middleton, well known as the author of several successful legitimate plays, wrote the original story, which has been cleverly scenarioized by Mrs. L. Case Russell.

Second Glaum Subject Completed.

The final scenes of Louise Glaum's second Paralta Play, "Shackled," have been completed, and the production is now in the laboratories of the Paralta studios in Los Angeles, where it is being assembled for release.

The play is taken from an original story by Lawrence McCloskey, which deals with the life of Lola Dexter, a young girl alone in the world, whose life is apparently wrecked through her love for Walter Cosgrove, a man with the veneer of a gentleman, but through whose nature there runs an undercurrent of debaseness.

Colored Filmers Draw Crowds.

Advices from the executive offices of the Ebony Film Corporation in Chicago indicate that the populace of the Windy City has discovered something new under the sun, and that the studio where the Ebony comedies are being filmed is the center constantly of unusual curiosity.

The newest Ebony comedies to be scheduled for release by General Film are "The Bully" and "The Janitor." Both are the most original sort of slap-stick interpreted characteristically by colored funmakers.

William Fox to Make Gouverneur Morris Story

YOU Can't Get Away With It," one of the most famous stories of Gouverneur Morris, short-story writer, novelist and war correspondent, is about to be filmed by William Fox. Jewel Carmen, "the girl with the Champagne eyes," will be the star.

The story, which will be remembered by magazine readers as having created considerable of a sensation at the time it was published, is that of a girl, once wealthy, who enters into a domestic arrangement with a man because she is unable to stand up under grinding poverty. She accepts the man's proposal in the face of his honest warning that "she can't get away with it," and the consequences which she pays form an absorbing drama of a great problem.

Jewel Carmen.

In announcing the acquisition of this Gouverneur Morris story, the company calls attention to the fact that Morris is only one of several famous writers whose works are now being filmed for Fox releases. Among these authors is Guy de Maupassant, upon whose story, "The Crucible," is based "The Bird of Prey," in which Gladys Brockwell is working. George Scarborough, author of "At Bay," part author of "The Heart of Wetona," and other stage successes, and author of "Under the Yoke," which J. Gordon Edwards has just completed, is another writer for Fox. A fourth is Zane Grey, whose "Riders of the Purple Sage" is being made by William Farnum for release next month.

Three Veterans Support Miss Storey.

Three veterans of the "palmy days" of the spoken drama are in the cast supporting Edith Storey in "As the Sun Went Down." They are George W. Berrell, Alfred Hollingsworth, and F. E. Spooner. The picture is a screen adaptation by George D. Baker, manager of productions at Metro's West Coast studios, of his own play written some fifteen years ago.

Of these three actors the dean is Mr. Berrell, who played in the support of Booth, Barrett, McCullough, and Mary Anderson. Mr. Hollingsworth played with Mr. Baker when the Metro executive was a player and in his companies when he was a manager.

Lieber Tells of Success of Big Gerard Production

WHEN Robert Lieber, the newly elected president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, proprietor of the Circle theater, of Indianapolis, and circuit franchise holder for the State of Indiana, was in New York during the week of May 12, he commented upon the extraordinary success that is attending the booking of "My Four Years in Germany" in his section of the country.

"Up to date we have arranged for rentals aggregating over $40,000 in Indiana alone," said Mr. Lieber, "and before the end of the month we expect these figures to approximate 40 per cent. more. As it is, we feel fairly well pleased with the situation, as I understand that we have already topped the figures reached in our state by 'The Birth of a Nation' during its first run."

"My Four Years in Germany" is also making notable headway in other localities. E. H. Hulsey presented the Gerard film in Dallas, Texas, during the first week of May at the Hippodrome to the largest audience that the house has ever held. The box office receipts for the opening day aggregated $1,860. Mr. Hulsey and his associates had given the production remarkable exploitation prior to its engagement, with the result that they have had to call on the local police reserves to handle the crowds.

At the Mary Anderson Theater in Louisville, Ky., "My Four Years in Germany" is also cashing in effectively on the excellent advertising and newspaper publicity it has received at the hands of Fred Levy and Lee L. Goldberg. The seat sales amounted to $1,076 the first day, and were expected to approximate $8,000 for the full week.

Youngstown, Ohio, is also playing the picture for a week's run at the Park theater, and reports box office receipts of $1,038 on the opening.

A signal tribute was paid "My Four Years in Germany" in its indorsement by the General Federation of Women's Clubs at their national convention held last week in Hot Springs, Ark., as an ideal example of the work that the motion picture is doing in quickening the patriotic fervor of Americans.

Three "Mutt and Jeffs" Released During June

ANNOUNCEMENT from the Fox Film Corporation offices is that three Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons will be released during June. The releases are "The Tale of a Pig," "Hospital Orderlies" and "Life Savers."

In "The Tale of a Pig" Mutt and Jeff, moved by the spirit of patriotism, start a pig farm. Mutt sends Jeff for a flock of pigs, and he starts back with one big hog with a curly tail. He meets with several accidents and is finally brought home by a man in a flivver. When he opens the door of the machine, out comes a group of little pigs, all with curly tails. A farmer, in a joshing spirit, tells Mutt and Jeff that curly tailed pigs are not good, so Jeff gets a box of starch and a flatiron and irons out the tail of each pig. Then he hangs all the pigs on a clothesline. What these little pigs do after their tails are starched out forms a climax which is described as being a riot.

Mutt and Jeff as hospital orderlies are intrusted with the care of a crazy patient. The physician, when leaving the hospital, instructs them to give the patient a soothing hypodermic injection. Instead they load him up with pep, with the result that some wild times follow. The patient mistakes everything for a pill, and promptly swallows it. This mistake, however, comes in handy and through a novel way relieves Jeff of his embarrassment in trying to quiet a bunch of squalling infants in the baby ward.

Mutt and Jeff in "Life Savers" tell a story of sad sea waves.

Universal's "The Model's Confession" Is in Six Reels

"THE MODEL'S CONFESSION," a six-reel Universal special attraction, is the first of the big summer offerings by Universal as an offset for exhibitors to the bugaboo of the "summer slump" which failed to materialize to any extent last year.

As a result of the orders the release date of "The Model's Confession" with its extra footage has been considerably advanced, and has been placed upon the release schedule for June 3.

Mary MacLaren appears as Iva Seldon, the model. The picture is directed by Ida May Park. The star is supported by Kenneth Harlan, Edna, Earle, Herbert Prior, Louis Willoughby, and Gretchen Lederer.

The story was picturized from a magazine novel. The big punch comes when a father falls in love with his own daughter only to be killed a few moments later in a thrilling automobile collision. Herbert Prior plays the role of the aged roue not loved by women for himself, but for his money.

Hart Prefers War to Loan Drive.

"Anytime I'm wanted to go to war, I'm ready," says William S. Hart. "I've seen wars and I've seen Liberty Loan drives. Give me war." The motion picture "bad man" has returned from a ten-day tour of the principal cities of the Pacific Coast made at the request of Secretary McAdoo, during which time he spoke in nineteen cities to estimated audiences of over 250,000 persons and personally collected over $2,000,000 worth of subscriptions from the platform. During these ten days he made fifty-one speeches, not including those made to the boys at Camp Kearny, Camp Lewis, Fort Rosecrans, the high schools in the principal cities and lunches and banquets given in his honor by many prominent clubs. In many places Hart was mobbed by his admirers. During the tour the Artcraft star had the honor of speaking from the same platform with many notable men.

"Kidder & Ko." Comes June 16.

In "Kidder & Ko," the five-reel Pathe play released June 16, Bryant Washburn has a part just suited to him, and which is not unlike the Skinner role with which he leaped to popularity. In this comedy Washburn is the son of an amiable parent who is head of a great dried fish concern in Kiddersport, Maine.

"If there is anything I loathe," exclaims the hero, "it is canned cod—and women." And thereby hangs the tale.

Pathe has given this feature a splendid mounting and a fine supporting company, and "Kidder & Ko" is expected to repeat the success made by earlier Washburn comedies.

"Kidder & Ko" was written by John W. Grey and M. Ramirez-Torres. The heroine is Gertrude Selby.

Fox Has Seven New Leading Players.

Attention is called by the Fox offices to the fact that seven of the organization's stars have new leading men or women in current pictures soon to be released. Four are entirely new to Fox plays, while three return after long absences. The list includes Kathleen Connors, Robert Middlemass, Bernard Randall, Mary Mersch, Violet Palmer, Herbert Hayes and Victor Sutherland.

Miss Connors plays opposite Tom Mix in "Ace High." Robert Middlemass was chosen to portray the chief masculine role in "Other Men's Daughters." Bernard Randall is seen in the screen part of June Caprice's sweetheart in "Blue-Eyed Mary," a special feature for June.

Mary Mersch has the part of Jane Withersteen in "Riders of the Purple Sage." Violet Palmer is now leading woman of the George Walsh company. Herbert Heyes is completing work in support of Gladys Brockwell in "The Bird of Prey." Victor Sutherland is opposite Virginia Pearson in "The Firebrand."

Toto Gets Into Electric Lights.

Pathe-Rolin's "Toto Comedies" are reported to have taken a spurt. The Cleveland branch has placed this series with the Alhambra and Mall theaters, two of the big downtown houses, and the customers like them so well that Toto is figuring in the electric light signs. Both houses play the Toto releases first run on the same days.

Famous Players-Lasky Lists Seven Subjects for June

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation puts its best foot foremost in the schedule of Paramount releases for the month of June, listing seven of the biggest productions turned out by the company. Four of the pictures were made in the West Coast studios, two in the East, and one comes from the Ince plant.

Six of the pictures present Lina Cavalieri, Vivian Martin, Sessue Hayakawa, Pauline Frederick, Wallace Reid and Enid Bennett, and the seventh is another of the J. Stuart Blackton photoplays.

The first subject in the order of release is the presentation on June 2, by J. Stuart Blackton, of "Missing," a story of love and war from the novel by Mrs. Humphrey Ward, in which appear Thomas Meighan, Robert Gordon, Winter Hall, Sylvia Breamer, Ola Humphrey, Mollie McConnell and Kathlyn O'Connor.

On the same date the spectacular Lina Cavalieri picture is issued, entitled "Love's Conquest," being an adaptation from "Gismonda," the famous Sardou drama. Edward Jose directed this photoplay. Large settings were constructed to represent the city of Athens in the early sixteenth century and throngs appear in the various scenes. The principal supporting roles are played by Courtenay Foote, Fred Radcliff, Frank Lee, Freddie Verdi, J. H. Gilmore and Isabelle Berwind.

On June 9 Vivian Martin will be seen in "Viviette," from the book of the same title by William J. Locke, scenarioized by Julia Crawford Ivers and directed by Walter Edwards. The story deals with the love affairs of a girl after she leaves a finishing school. The same day marks the release of the Pauline Frederick production of "Her Final Reckoning," adapted by Charles E. Whittaker from "Prince Zilah." Emile Chautard directed.

Sessue Hayakawa is the star of "The Bravest Way," released June 16, showing the dramatic experiences of a Japanese in the United States who follows the traditions of his race in sacrificing himself.

A stirring and patriotic subject is "The Firefly of France," released on the 23d, with Wallace Reid as a French aviator. It was adapted by Margaret Turnbull from the story by Marion Polk Angelotti and directed by Donald Crisp.

June 23 is also the date of the release of the Ince production, "A Desert Wooing," with Enid Bennett in the stellar role. The scenario was written by J. G. Hawks and the picture was directed by Jerome Storm.

"For Sale" to Follow Pathe's "Yellow Ticket"

FOLLOWING close upon the sensational advance bookings for the new feature, "The Yellow Ticket," with Fannie Ward, comes the important announcement that Pathe has another strong box-office feature up its sleeve. "For Sale," with the fine co-starring team of Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale, is the dark horse that promises to make a clean-up.

Fred Jackson, author of many stage and screen successes, to say nothing of half a dozen novels, a score of popular magazine serials and some six hundred short stories, wrote "For Sale." From A. H. Woods it was bought by Pathe.

After viewing the first available print of "For Sale," the Pathe executives decided that "For Sale" was a picture deserving of a special campaign, and it is going to be handled with this object in mind.

"Liberty Belles" Lead Universal's Comedies

THE L-Ko beauties, with the passive assistance of Dave Morris and Rube Miller, lead the list of the Universal comedy releases for the week of June 3 in the two-reeler, "Liberty Belles," a patriotic laughmaker in which it is sought to drive home the assistance women may be in winning the war for the Allied cause. The next L-Ko release will be along similar lines, with the exception that the entire comedy will be acted by women without a man in the cast.

Of equal importance is the Lyons-Moran release under the brand name of Star comedies of "There Goes the Bride," which also appears on the program for the week of June 3.

Kathleen O'Connor in the Nestor, "Home James," winds up the comedy offerings for the week.

The other short subjects on the program consist of the split reels brought together in the Universal Animated Weekly, Universal Screen Magazine, and Universal Current Events.

Exhibitors Praise Power of "Tarzan of the Apes"

IN recent communications to the headquarters of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit three of the leading motion picture showmen of the United States have expressed themselves in interesting terms regarding the manner in which "Tarzan of the Apes" has gone over under their auspices.

"After our recent extremely gratifying experience with 'My Four Years in Germany'," writes S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theater, Indianapolis,' "I thought that our house attendance record would stand for some time to come. But such was not the case. Two weeks later, when we came to reckon up the box office receipts for 'Tarzan,' we were pleasantly startled to find that the big spectacle of jungle life had the edge on Ambassador Gerard's revelations by the price of two Liberty Bonds, to use a patriotic simile. I never saw a straight romantic picture go over in such smashing style."

Aaron Jones, of the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, who are now showing "Tarzan" at the Colonial theater, Chicago, seems equally enthusiastic about the film's reception in the Windy City.

As secretary of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Inc., of the Northwest no one is in a better position to gauge the power of production to pay dividends to himself and his business associates than Frederick V. Fisher. "We have just closed a record-breaking run with 'Tarzan of the Apes' in the Coliseum at Seattle," writes Mr. Fisher.

Widely Separate Locales In New Griffith Subject

ON THE heels of his big success, "Hearts of the World," D. W. Griffith plans to launch another war drama, which will be released as an Artcraft picture. Though the producer has withheld all information regarding the story on which he is now engaged, he has permitted it to be known that the new picture will present an entirely different angle from that of "Hearts of the World." It is said he does not intend to depict a single battle scene, using the world-war merely as a background for a love story.

Henry Walthall has been engaged for the cast, which will also include Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, George Fawcett and George Siegmann.

Scenes will be laid in France, Canada, Hawaii and Scotland, and others are being made in settings reproduced in California.

The picture probably will be a combination of three separate stories, originally written for three Artcraft pictures. Mr. Griffith has taken the strongest points in each story and blended them into one productions, the threads being interwoven as the story progresses and ending in a powerful climax. This accounts for the widely separated locales.

Big Pathe Features for June.

Among the heavily underscored features to be released by Pathe in June, in addition to "The Yellow Ticket," the most notable are Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale in "For Sale," a picture of marked box-office value, originally written for the speaking stage by Fred Jackson, in which Miss Hulette is said to achieve a hit; a Baby Marie Osborne picture, Bessie Love in "A Little Sister of Everybody," by William Addison Lathrop, hailed as better than anything she has yet done for Pathe, and Bryant Washburn in "Kidder & Ko," a story of American youth and enterprise that will rank with the popular star's recent hit, "Twenty-one."

Juanita Hanson in Ince Picture.

Among the several well known players in "The Mating of Marcella," Dorothy Dalton's Paramount picture, will be found Juanita Hansen, a blonde of the statuesque type.

Tourneur's "Sporting Life" In Work at Fort Lee Studio

UNUSUAL interest centers in Maurice Tourneur's first independent production, "Sporting Life," in course of filming at the Tourneur studios at Fort Lee. This is due to Mr. Tourneur's phenomenal success with another Drury Lane melodrama, "The Whip." Mr. Tourneur produced a wide variety of photodramatic offerings for Paramount and the World Film, including "The Blue Bird," "Prunella," and the Elsie Ferguson vehicles, but as a box office attraction his production of "The Whip" is looked upon as one of his greatest efforts.

There are many interesting things attached to the history of "Sporting Life," which was written by Cecil Raleigh and Seymour Hicks, and which enjoyed a phenomenal run at the Drury Lane in 1897. It duplicated its London hit in New York in September, 1898, and had one of the longest runs in the history of the metropolitan stage. As a touring attraction it created box office records wherever it played.

Robert Hilliard created the leading role of Lord Woodstock. Elita Proctor Otis was the fascinating villainess. It is interesting to note that Marie Cahill, then unknown, played a tiny role, while John Ince had another slender part.

Maurice Tourneur has selected an excellent cast to interpret the roles in the screen adaptation of "Sporting Life." Willette Kershaw will play the villainess.

"The Unbeliever" in Canada.

Arrangements have been made for the Canadian distribution of "The Unbeliever," the big patriotic feature from the Edison studio, which has met with such remarkable success in the United States. The exchanges which will handle this subject in Canada are those of General Film Company, from which it is expected that the success of the production in this country will be duplicated in Canada. The United States distribution is conducted by the George Kleine System through its own exchanges. In Canada the Kleine System is routing the picture through the General Film exchanges as a result of the recent service co-operation entered into between the companies in that territory.

Essanay Lists Subjects in Second Block of Snakevilles

ESSANAY'S Snakeville comedies have proved so popular with the public that exhibitors all over have been asking for more. Essanay announces that they will issue a second block of ten comedies as soon as all of the first ten are released.

The last release of the first set is May 25, and the first of the second ten will be issued June 1, the remainder following through June and July one week apart. The General Film Company, which is releasing these comedies, announces that they are in such demand that they usually are taken by the entire block, the exhibitor fixing one night each week for the showing.

The films feature the well known comedians, Slippery Slim, Sophie Clutts, and Mustang Pete. They are Western slapstick comedies, and full of life and action.

The new set of ten is as follows: "Slipper Slim's Inheritance," "Sophie's Legacy," "Sophie Gets Stung," "Slippery Slim, Diplomat," "Slippery Slim and the Claim Agent," 'Slippery Slim's Strategy," "A Hot Time in Snakeville," "Snakeville's New Sheriff," "A Snakeville Epidemic," and "Sophie's Birthday Party."

Doris Kenyon Begins Work on Original Vance Story

DORIS KENYON'S second photoplay feature, produced by her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., will be from an original story written for her by Louis Joseph Vance, famous author and playwright. The story is entitled "The Inn of the Blue Moon," and is startling in its origintality, being a typical Louis Joseph Vance story.

For the first time in motion pictures an original story will be presented on the screen prior to its publication as a serial story in magazine and book form. "The Inn of the Blue Moon" is such a remarkable story that from its synopsis Mr. Vance has already sold the serial publication rights to one of the foremost magazines. He has also disposed of the book rights, and the story will be published in book form as soon as its publication is completed in the magazines.

Recently it has been the custom of film producers to make their pictures from stories that have been great success in magazines and as books. Such a story was "The Street of Seven Stars," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, which appeared in a magazine and attained a book sale of 250,000 copies. It was the first of Miss Kenyon's productions at the head of her own company, and will be released within a few weeks.

In "The Inn of the Blue Moon" Theodore C. Deitrich, president of the De Luxe Pictures, Inc., will give motion picture patrons the first knowledge of a great story by a great author prior to its publication in magazine and book form. When Mr. Deitrich commissioned Mr. Vance to write this story for Miss Kenyon a large sum of money was turned over to the author. Mr. Vance spent many days studying the previous screen work and the personality of Miss Kenyon and has written a story for her that will bring out all of her winsomeness and charm as well as her dramatic ability.

Like all of Mr. Vance's stories, is is chock full of action and unexpected situations. In the story Miss Kenyon will appear in two decidedly opposite roles. She will impersonate twin sisters whose parents have separated in their infancy. The daughter taken by the mother is brought up in penury in the narrow confines of a country home and is a veritable wild girl. The other daughter, reared by her father, belongs to the fast social set of New York.

Miss Kenyon has started work on the subject.

"The Man Hunt" Coming June 17.

Ethel Clayton's next appearance on the World Program is announced for June 17, when "The Man Hunt" is scheduled for release. Rockcliffe Fellows, who hitherto has been seen supporting Kitty Gordon in World Pictures, is associated with Miss Clayton in the principal role. The remainder of the cast is composed of Jack Drumier, Harry Warwick, Herbert Barrington, Albert Hart, John Dungan, and John Adrizonia. Director Travers Vale directed the production.

Metro Names June's Quartet of Releases

THREE of Metro's four June releases were staged at Hollywood, Cal., and the other one was made in New York. The stars represented in this list of forthcoming Metro All-Star Series pictures are Edith Storey, Viola Dana, Bert Lytell, and Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the order named.

"The Demon," starring Edith Storey, is the release for June 3. This is a picturization of the novel of the same name written by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. George D. Baker, western production manager, both adapted and directed the story.

"The Only Road," with Viola Dana as the star, will be the release for June 10. George D. Baker and Albert Sehlby Le Vino are responsible for the story and scenario of Miss Dana's new picture, and Frank Reicher did the directing. The star is presented in the role of Nita, a sweet American girl brought up in the squalid atmosphere of a Mexican peon's adobe cabin.

Bert Lytell makes his second appearance as a Metro star in "No Man's Land," which will be released on June 17. The star himself, with A. S. Le Vino, adapted this story from Louis Joseph Vance's novel of the same name. Will S. Davis directed the production. Mr. Lytell plays Garret Cope, the hero, who is seen in prison garb in many scenes of thrilling action.

"The Scheme," presenting Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, is the final June release, being offered exhibitors on the 24th. Katharine Kavanaugh, of the Metro Eastern scenario staff, wrote the script, and June Mathis prepared the continuity. Charles J. Brabin directed the co-stars. Mr. Bushman plays Hugh Dexter, a young man who believes he is a woman-hater, with particular dislike for society butterflies. Miss Bayne is seen as Phyllis Lane, a "butterfly," who wagers that she can change his ideas.

Sherry Issues Statement Regarding Keeney Pictures

First Production, "A Romance of the Underworld," Starring Catherine Calvert, Will be Released in About a Month.

WILLIAM L. SHERRY, former vice-president of the Paramount Picture Corporation and now head of the Sherry Service, announces that the first of the Frank A. Keeney pictures, "A Romance of the Underworld," will be released in about a month. Mr. Sherry recently entered into an agreement whereby he will be sole distributor of the Keeney pictures in the United States and Canada. The second picture, "Marriage," by Guy Bolton, was run off last week for the first time in the projection room of the Keeney studio, at Park avenue and 134th street, and it is said that those who saw it consider it an exceptional picture, and one which will make a hit, commenting upon its artistic quality, dramatic power and tense interest. It will be released shortly after the first picture. Catherine Calvert stars in both.

"'A Romance of the Underworld' is superior to the average underworld picture," says Mr. Sherry, "because it is handled in such a manner as to show nothing offensive, and at the same time drives home forcibly a great moral lesson. I believe it is the kind of picture everyone ought to see and will be glad to see. It deals with the drug and opium traffic in Greater New York. It is not merely a 'crusading' picture. It tells an appealing human story, with plenty of thrills and dramatic incident. Furthermore, it is highly instructive, as it shows Greater New York scenes and landmarks such as Blackwell's Island, the Bowery, Chinatown, the East Side, Little Italy, the Tombs and Criminal Courts Building, with the familiar Bridge of Sighs, etc. There is no camouflage about it. The scenes are really there. A reviewer has characterized the picture as 'the best of its kind,' and I am not inclined to disagree with him. No expense has been spared to make the Keeney picture what pictures really ought to be, and I know the results will show as soon as they get before the public."

Binney Off to the Beach

Producer Begins Another Comedy at Pablo Beach, Florida—Company Enjoys the "Water Stuff."

HAROLD J. BINNEY, producer of "Josh Binney Comedies," has returned to his studio in Jacksonville, Florida, and started work on another comedy entitled "Fatty's Fast Flivver," which is the fourth of this popular series. Mr. Binney promises that this picture will be one of the best that he has ever made and says that it is an unusual and remarkable comedy in many ways. Most of the scenes will be made around the beach and the company is sure to have a grand time of it during the making as the weather in Florida is now somewhat warm and the "water-stuff" will be put over with so much enthusiasm that the result should be a picture full of action and pep from start to finish.

Mr. Binney has taken his entire company of twenty-two, including fourteen pretty girls, to Pablo Beach, Fla., for the making of this picture. He has engaged an entire floor of the Atlantic Hotel at Pablo for accommodation of the cast, and will remain there for at least two weeks, making exteriors. He will then return to Jacksonville to finish the interiors.

Laura De Cardi is playing the feminine lead and indications are that she is going to fulfill Mr. Binney's predictions that she will prove enormously popular on the screen. "Funny Fatty Filbert" continues as the featured comedian and advises that his present picture gives him the best opportunity that he has had to get big laughs.

Many Sales Made by Arrow

Announces Contracts Covering Several Productions—W. E. Shallenberger Says Conditions Are Excellent.

DESPITE the war, motion picture conditions are excellent throughout this country and Canada, according to the officials of the Arrow Film Corporation, who for the past two years have been making a study of the making and selling of pictures in all parts of the world.

The above statment is based on two things, according to W. E. Shallenberger, President of the Arrow organization—the optimistic reports from exhibitors throughout the country, and the tremendous increase in sales made by the state rights department of the Arrow Film Corporation. "These sales, and especially those of the past week, give one an excellent idea of the healthy condition of business throughout the country," said Mr. Shallenberger, "and, in addition, show what distributors in different territories selected as their 'best bet' from among the pictures we control."

These sales were as follows: "The Woman's Law," with Florence Reed, to Eastern Feature Film Company, Boston, for New England; to Unity Photoplay Company, Chicago, for Illinois; to Variety Pictures Company, Baltimore, for Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia. "The Struggle Everlasting," with Florence Reed, and "The Accidental Honeymoon," featuring Robert Warwick and Elaine Hammerstein, to the Keystone Distributing Corporation, Philadelphia, for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; to V. H. Hodupp, Inc., Indianapolis, for Indiana. "The Sunset Princess," with Marjorie Daw, to Hodupp-Towne Photoplay Company, St. Louis, for Missouri; to V. H. Hodupp, Inc., Indianapolis, for Indiana; to Unity Photoplays Co., Chicago, for Illinois. "The Million Dollar Mystery," revised edition, to Special Features Co., Knoxville, for the six Southern States. "Raffles," with John Barrymore, to Keystone Distributing Corporation, Philadelphia, for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey. "The Other Side of the Door," "The End of the Trail," "Life's Blind Alley," and "The Buzzard's Shadow," Allison-Lockwood reissues, to United Film Service, Boston, for New York and the New England States. "Right Off the Bat," with Mike Donlin, to Unity Photoplays Co., Chicago, for Illinois.

"Straight and Narrow" New King-Bee.

On June 1st, the King-Bee Films Corp. will release a new two-reel Billy West comedy entitled "Straight and Narrow." The scenes of this comedy are laid in a prison. Billy West plays a convict, with a mania for dancing. Babe Hardy and Leo White portray two safe breakers, who are always getting Billy into trouble.

"Straight and Narrow" is the twenty-third comedy made by the King-Bee Films Corp. with Billy West in the star role.

Distributors of "News" and "Graphic" Announced

Gaumont Company Furnishes Names of Buyers Who Will Distribute its News Reels.

THE Gaumont Company states that arrangements have been perfected for the handling of the Gaumont News and the Gaumont Graphic, in practically every portion of the United States, and it is expected that the remaining territory will be closed within the next few days.

The Gaumont News and Graphic are independent news-reels, and are backed by the Gaumont Company, which has branches and cameramen in every civilized section of the globe, and closely associated with the Gaumont Actualities, of Paris, and the Gaumont Graphic, of London, the broad claim is made that these are "news reels of real news" and are surpassed by none.

The Gaumont Company announces that territorial rights have been disposed of as follows: To R. M. Savini Films, Inc., Atlanta, for North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee. To All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., San Francisco, and Los Angeles, for California, Arizona and Nevada. To V. H. Hodupp, Inc., Indianapolis, for Indiana. To Hodupp-Towne Photoplay Co., St. Louis, and Kansas City, Mo., for Missouri and Kansas. To Central Film Co., Chicago, for Illinois. To Associated Theaters, Inc., Minneapolis, for North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa and Wisconsin. To Globe Feature Film Co., Boston, for New England States. To First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Denver, and Salt Lake City, for Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming and Southern Idaho. To Josiah Pearce & Sons, New Orleans, for Mississippi, Louisiana, Southern Alabama, and Western Florida. To Northwestern Consolidated Film Corporation, temporary address care Joe Deitch, Calhoun Hotel, Seattle, for Washington, Oregon and Northern Idaho. To Fontenelle Film Co., Omaha, for Nebraska. To Madison Film Exchange, Detroit, for Michigan. To First National Exhibitors' Exchange, Pittsburgh, for West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania (from 77th Parallel). To Peerless Feature Film Exchange, Philadelphia, for Eastern Pennsylvania (to 77th Parallel), and Southern New Jersey. To Super-Film Attractions, Inc., Washington, D. C., for Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia. To Gaumont Co., Flushing, N. Y., for New York State.

Although Gaumont News and Graphic have been released through state right exchanges only two months, the number of prints have been more than doubled.

Symphony to Open with "The Unchastened Woman"

Rialto-De Luxe Production, Starring Grace Valentine, Chosen as Initial Offering for Broadway's Newest Photoplay House.

OLIVER MOROSCO'S dramatic success, "The Unchastened Woman," by Louis K. Anspacher, starring Grace Valentine, is the production which has been chosen by the Symphony theater, Broadway and Ninety-fifth street, New York, for the opening week. The decision of Aubrey Kennedy, president of Kennedy Theaters, Inc., to open this temple of the silent drama with this production speaks well for the picture, as it was chosen from a large number of productions. The producers of the picture quote the following from the theater management:

"I am glad to say your production is one that fitly exemplifies the dignified policy of the Symphony theater to give its patrons the very best of things. It is the very quality of picture that the Symphony wishes continually to offer."

The picture is heralded as a departure from the usual photoplay. The story, as mentioned in previous reviews, is not merely a type, true to type, but "strikes a new note and compels interest." However, although said to be new to the screen the theme of the picture has already been before the public, and the title of "The Unchastened Woman" will be greeted by many as one of familiar interest, as the story is well known both in book form and later by presentation on the stage.

It is announced that the Metropolitan Opera House orchestra has been engaged by the Symphony theater for the season and will remain until the opera opens again next autumn. A special overture, expressly composed for "The Unchastened Woman," will be played before each performance. To quote the conductor of the orchestra, "As the production lends itself to most exquisite musical selections, that part of the programme shall prove an unusual drawing power."

Educational Value in Fourth Petrova Picture

MADAME PETROVA possesses decided views as to the educational value of the motion picture, and in selecting her latest vehicle, "Tempered Steel," she had in mind the lesson to be learned through the enactment of a powerful melodrama of this type.

The story unfolded in the production deals with the inborn desire of all women to be self dependent. In order to teach the lesson of self-earned success and to impress the womanhood of the nation with the temptations and struggles facing them in the working out of a "career," Madame Petrova caused to be written in many additional scenes which are said to bring out these points forcibly.

The narrative has been embellished with "punch" and the whole thing done in the approved style of modern melodrama. "Tempered Steel" is said to bring home vividly the lesson which Madame Petrova has endeavored to point out, while in entertainment value ranking above anything in which she has appeared. George Middleton, the author, is said to consider "Tempered Steel" one of the most exciting dramas of his creation.

This, the first Petrova production directed by Ralph Ince, has now been finally edited and titled and is in the hands of the Rothacker laboratory. It will be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit during June.

New Graphic Picture Teaches Moral Lesson

IVAN ABRAMSON, director general of the Graphic Film Corporation, in his latest production, "When May Betrays," has chosen for his theme a factor in life responsible for a large part of humanity's suffering—the betrayal of the marriage vow. The story is said to be powerfully dramatic, and while telling the truth of the evil as it exists, to be handled in a manner that does not offend. The author shows that such transgressions are self-punishing and that no man can injure a good woman without afflicting injury upon himself, and that the sacrifice of his honor for passion's sake and the concealing of a crime under the mantle of hypocrisy and deceit is the seed that breeds other crimes that will react upon himself.

The stellar role will be interpreted by Gail Kane, and account of the manner in which she handled the part which includes several very strong emotional scenes, it is announced that she has been engaged as the star in another picture which Mr. Abramson will produce.

Wharton to Make a "War Chest" Film

To Help Monroe County, New York, Meet Its Quota for War Organizations and Charities.

LEOPOLD and Theodore Wharton and the entire cast which has been producing "The Eagle's Eye," are in Rochester working on a special one-reel production to be used in connection with the War Chest drive of Monroe County. The War Chest is a fund which has been founded for the purpose of meeting the county's quota in all future drives for contributions to war organizations and charities.

The picture will show what could happen if any of the organizations working for the welfare or comfort of "the boys over there" should have to cease activities through lack of funds. The fate of wounded soldiers in case the Red Cross was handicapped, diversions the soldiers would have to seek if denied the Y. M. C. A., the discomforts which would follow the withdrawal of the Salvation Army from the war field, and other activities dependent upon the generosity of Americans for their support are shown. King Baggot and Marguerite Snow and Mrs. Leopold Wharton will have the principal roles in the War Chest picture.

The picture is being made in response to a request from the committee of Rochester interested in the War Chest Fund. A picture which was made by The Whartons for the Red Cross drive last fall is given credit for a great part of the $1,000,000 total raised in Rochester.

Gaumont Company Announces a Twenty-Reel Serial

"The Man from the Dead," Modern Story of Monte Cristo Type, Will Be Released in Ten Two-Reel Episodes.

RECOGNIZING the demand for a short serial which will hold the interest in every episode, the Gaumont Company will soon have ready for state rights buyers what they claim to be an amazing serial in ten two-reel episodes. It is an up-to-date story of the Monte Cristo type, featuring a man who returns "from the dead" to avenge his wrongs, and, incidentally, to aid others who have been oppressed.

There is said to be not only compelling interest in every episode, but action and suspense, also that it is sensational and replete with surprises, thrilling dangers, and ingenious escapes. "The Man from the Dead," who captures the sympathy of the spectators from his first appearance, is pursued by his enemies, and it is claimed his sensational escapes have never been excelled.

Gaumont announces that this serial has many claims to the close consideration of the discerning exhibitor; that the photography is of the best, and there is logical interpretation of plot by splendid actors, also that there is beautiful scenery, elaborate settings, a wealth of idea, and perfection of detail.

Apart from this "The Man from the Dead" is said to be essentially different in many respects from any other serial.

"The Man from the Dead" has been produced with the independent exhibitor in view, and has been trimmed to twenty reels, said to be crowded with action. There is something doing all the time. It is claimed that this serial will interest any spectator who enjoys the thrills of adventurous melodrama.

The Gaumont Company plans to have the entire ten episodes complete in the near future, at which time trade showings will be arranged for buyers and exhibitors.

Vernon Steele Appears in Fifth Petrova Picture

VERNON STEELE, who enacts the role of Beverly Peale, one of the principal characters in "Patience Sparhawk," is a young English actor who appeared with Madame Petrova on the stage when she starred in "Panthea," and it is announced that he will probably also appear in subsequent Petrova productions.

Mr. Steele has met with considerable success on both the stage and screen in Great Britain and in this country. He has played "Romeo" to the "Juliet" of Phyliss Neilson Terry, has appeared in the title role of "Raffles" and has toured both this country and England in repertoire with Sir J. Forbes Robertson.

In "Hearts in Exile," Mr. Steele's first picture, he played the gentle lover to Clara Kimball Young. Then Famous Players recognized in him a suitable hero for a Marguerite Clark picture. Later, he became leading man for Mae Marsh in her first Goldwyn release, "Polly of the Circus."

Mr. Steele has played a number of character roles during his screen career. In "Patience Sparhawk" with Madame Petrova, he is given an opportunity to consistently develop the role of a degenerate, "Beverly Peale," Patience's invalid husband.

Singer Closes Unusual Contract.

A large and unusual contract has just been made by Julius Singer, manager of New York Bee-Hive exchange with the Crescent theater, Brooklyn, under the terms of which this house will show Billy West King Bee comedies for eighty-four consecutive days, one comedy a week, starting with "The Handy Man."

Another contract of interest, secured by Mr. Singer for this popular brand of comedies, is for the new Brevoort theater in Brooklyn, a twenty-two hundred-seat house, which will show King Bee's two days each, starting with "The Handy Man."

"The Black Mit" a Katzenjammer Comedy.

"Wrestling" with the intricacies of an income tax report is not ordinarily the occasion for much mirth, but in a current release of the Educational Films Corporation of America of an International Film Service black and white cartoon comedy, featuring the Katzenjammer Kids laughter from audiences is greeting Captain Katzenjammer's efforts to figure how much he owes Uncle Sam and the manner in which the Kids "help" him.

"The Black Mit" is the name of the comedy and in it these famous little comedians, through the aid of divers animals, black hands and bombs, succeed in putting the captain through some very lively paces and end, as usual, by securing their just reward.

On this same reel is another page from Raymond L. Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature" entitled "Adaptation." It shows how the screech owl and the secretary bird adapt themselves to the dangers they have to meet, the owl catching mice and the bird killing and eating snakes. The secretary bird in the country it inhabits has the protection of the government because of its usefulness in ridding the land of snakes.

Interesting Items in Gaumont News Reels

GAUMONT "Graphic" No. 8 is filled with interesting subjects, among which are the following: "Ellingboe" winning the southeastern sweepstakes at opening of Atlanta track; General Gorgas, the man who is responsible for the health of the American Army; conservation of wearing apparel shown in two ways, by the Arizona ranchmen increasing their efforts to increase the wool supply, and by Southern California children deciding to go barefooted all summer and save shoe leather; a four thousand-acre ranch operated entirely by women is also shown. How a twenty-five cent W. S. S. drops a real bullet into a shrapnel to be fired at the Hun, the visit of the Blue Devils to Camp Upton; France's traveling circus of rapid firing gun squads; record breaking run of ninety motor trucks from Detroit to the sea, yacht races at San Francisco and May Day exercises at Wellesley College are also pictured.

In Number Eight of Gaumont News is shown the annual New York police parade including the big squad of police women; the reception accorded Pershing's veterans in Washington; trial trip of first concrete ship "Faith"; inspection of Marines at Mare Island; visit of Queen Alexandra to English munition factory; war garden in which clams are planted; the $10,000 food poster designed by F. Luis Mora, work of the Red Cross in France in rehabilitating wounded and crippled soldiers are among the subjects of interest.

Mrs. L. Wharton Returns to Screen.

Mrs. Leopold Wharton, who is remembered for her work in former serials produced by The Whartons, and also in "The Great White Trail," is back on the screen, appearing in "The Eagle's Eye," the serial story of the German Government's spies and plots in America. The fifteenth episode of the serial, "The Campaign Against Cotton," marks her return.

She portrays a character who is said to have really existed, but whose name is not disclosed in the picture because of the nature of her services to the Government. She is identified as Mrs. Blank, the wife of an unscrupulous broker, who was forced by her husband to accept unwelcome attentions from Count von Bernstorff. It was through this bit of domestic intrigue that some of the stock market leaks, based upon German activity against industries, is alleged to have happened.

Jerome Abrams Promoted.

Jerome Abrams, who has been district manager of the Foursquare exchanges for the South ever since their inception, has been appointed special representative and called to New York to prepare for special duties that will commence next week.

Plans of a large nature formulated by Foursquare Pictures will require the services of Mr. Abrams in various sections of the United States. And it might be added that these plans will be to the advantage of exhibitors.

Mr. Abrams will stop at the various Foursquare exchanges on his way West, his trip calling for his presence in every territory between Ohio and the Pacific Coast. Several matters of advantage to Foursquare managers will be arranged by Mr. Abrams, among them unusual methods of exploitation of the new subjects which Foursquare has recently acquired.

Foursquare Makes Deal with Standard.

Foursquare Pictures has just signed a contract with the Standard Film Corporation for the exclusive distribution of the Foursquare product in the Kansas City and St. Louis territories. The arrangement is along lines similar to those entered into with the Southwestern Film Corporation, of Dallas, details of which were announced in an earlier issue and gives Foursquare an organization of splendid strength in the carrying out of a policy to the advantage of its exhibitor-patrons.

W. H. Reports Good Business with Chaplin Reissues

Says Result Surpasses Expectations and That Exchanges Are Ordering Additional Prints—First Four Subjects Already Released.

AN avalanche of business is the way the W. H. Productions Company describes the output of the twenty-six Charlie Chaplin reissues. The results surpass expectation, and exchanges already having contracted for these subjects are said to have been obliged to order additional prints to take care of the business pouring into their offices.

Since inaugurating in last week's trade papers a campaign direct to the exhibitor, for the benefit of the exchangemen, W. H. Productions Company states it has received complimentary letters from every one of the exchanges for this method of advertising the product for them. This is part of W. H. service for exchanges, and these advertisements are so constructed that with a new name plate they are serving as circulars or advertisements for local campaigns launched by the exchangemen in the various territories. The first four of the series have already been released, from every report are doing a good business and are backed with a distinctive advertising display. An official of the W. H. Production Company in discussing the exploitation of the various reissues which the company is offering on the State Right market, said:

"In the first place, in going over the market conditions last November, we came to the conclusion that it would be possible to reissue some of the best motion pictures released several years ago and which had as a foundation prominent stars, virile stories and good direction.

"To satisfy the public was the most essential factor. We then chose productions that made stars famous, re-edited, reconstructed and retitled each production, and before giving them our final approval invited people from different stations in life to our projection room to view these productions, and were guided by their criticism, thus being enabled to make pictures that would appeal to the masses throughout the country.

"We then laid out a complete advertising campaign, so that it would be possible for exhibitors to exploit them properly.

"The answer is that our Hart features, our twenty-eight Mack Sennett Keystones, our Bessie Barriscale features, our series of Shorty Hamilton comedies, and Charlie Chaplin comedies, are being booked successfully by the exchangemen in some of the most representative theaters in the country."

Madame Petrova Aids In Red Cross Drive

MADAME PETROVA made a special trip Thursday, May 16, to Philadelphia, at the invitation of Harry Schwalbe, secretary and treasurer of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and delivered an interesting talk at the Stanley theater on behalf of the Red Cross Fund. This was the first time that she had made a personal appearance at any picture house in Philadelphia and the audience was so enthusiastic she was recalled again and again.

In addition to speaking for the Red Cross, Madame Petrova recited some of her own poems and sang one of her own songs. Philadelphia will be visited again by Madame Petrova when she starts out on her trip to the Coast in the interest of the United States Thrift Stamps.

Foursquare to Handle "The Natural Law"

THE NATURAL LAW," produced by the France Films, Incorporated, is to be distributed in all parts of the United States, excepting New York State, by Foursquare Pictures. Contracts were signed this week, and the subject will be released immediately.

"Here is a photoplay," said P. V. R. Key, sales manager for Foursquare, "which possesses the quality of entertainment to an unusual degree.

"Marguerite Courtot has the leading feminine role, while Howard Hall and George Larkin appear in the two parts of first importance written for men. Those who saw the play (which Howard Hall wrote) during its eight months' run at the Republic theater in New York a year ago will recall that it was a drama of vital elements, with gripping situations, and a climax achieved with constructive skill.

"One reviewer, in his criticism, said: 'Starting at proper pace, "The Natural Law" gathers speed as it advances, the interest steadily increasing and the atmosphere of suspense being maintained up to the final reel, which closes with a forceful climax.'

"Foursquare feels," said Mr. Key, "that in 'The Natural Law' it has a feature that will serve a useful purpose in every house that desires material of substance and quality."

Key Speaks About His Recent Journey

ACCORDING to an analysis of motion picture conditions in all parts of the country by Foursquare Pictures, Inc., there is a gradual betterment being effected with respect to the overproduction of product which has existed for the last year.

P. V. R. Key, of Foursquare, who has just returned to New York after visiting the exchanges of the Middle West and those of Superfeatures, Ltd., Foursquare's affiliated organization in Canada, states that there is a visible improvement in the absorbing of quality photoplays.

"Exceptional film merchandise is still in active demand," said Mr. Key. "There is keen competition, yet the quality picture continues to command a just price for the distributor.

"There can be no evading the fact that there is an abundance of photoplay product, and perhaps more than enough of quality pictures to meet the demand. Nevertheless, the picture which has those elements that appeal to the public in a more than average degree finds ready bookings, and at good prices.

"It is the belief of exhibitors with whom I have talked," said Mr. Key, "that it requires only a reasonable reduction in the making of motion pictures to bring the volume to a mark which will enable a higher standard to be attained. And strange though it may at first appear they are all eager to see a reduction of output because it will mean finer picture quality and a greater degree of satisfaction among exhibitors who are willing to pay an increase in rentals if the product justifies."

John O'Toole Joins Foursquare.

John O'Toole, who will be remembered by motion picture men of the northwest as an energetic business getter and executive, has been engaged as manager of the Minneapolis exchange of Foursquare Pictures. Mr. O'Toole will work in conjunction with Frank J. Flaherty, of Chicago, who is financially interested with Foursquare in both the Chicago and Minneapolis exchanges. Mr. O'Toole has started with a rush, and states that with the material he has he will be able to serve his patrons in a manner insuring their permanent satisfaction.

Bee-Hive Expands.

The Bee-Hive Exchange, of which Milton L. Cohen and Julius Singer are manager, are now settled in new quarters in the Godfrey Building.

Their new suite is located on the sixth floor and includes seven offices.

"High Spots" of Plot Stand Out in "Mickey"

AN official of the Western Import Company in speaking of "Mickey," its forthcoming production, says: "One of the biggest problems in the motion picture field today, evidenced to the greatest extent in the advertising and publicity end of the motion pictures, which is, in other words, the mouthpiece of the industry, is whether the star or the picture itself should be boosted. The public, of course, wants a good star in a good story. But the fact remains that they are complaining of a fly in the ointment—the 'punk' story.

"It is a known fact that one of the largest producing companies in the country has tried and is trying in all its advertising to adopt the policy of trade-mark and story first, and then the star. That is a very sound 'theory' policy, but in most cases and under present conditions it is falling down.

"The point is that the story—the plot, construction, appeal, etc.—must be strong enough to outshine the star, which is a very rare occurrence. The plot, to support a production, must be a masterpiece—everything the public wants—heart interest interwoven with humor, pathos and adventure, so that they may lose themselves in the charm and appeal of the story.

"Mack Sennett sets out to do this in 'Mickey.' At a private screening recently for some of the greatest showmen in the country their unhesitating praise, when set down and analyzed, proved that Mack Sennett in 'Mickey' had accomplished what he set out to do—produce a masterpiece whose appeal would be universal, whose charm will be its very own, whether it is seen in an Esquimau movie show hut or in some cocoanut grove in the Fiji Islands where they don't know Mabel Normand from a barber pole."

Picture Stars Shine to Aid Stamp Sales

Jules E. Mastbaum, of the Stanley Company of Philadelphia, Brings Several Noted Players to Help Get Pledges for War Thrift Stamps.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Through the efforts of Jules E. Mastbaum, managing director of the Stanley Company several notable stars were brought to Philadelphia to aid the Open Pledge Week in behalf of the big drive for war stamps. An attractive program was arranged and staged at the City Hall Plaza on Thursday, May 16, and it was attended by one of the biggest crowds ever assembled in front of the public buildings. A big ovation was tendered to the stars Mme. Olga Petrova, Mabel Normand, Tom Moore, Peggy Worth, and Tsen Mei, the celebrated Chinese actress, who is now appearing in a new production at the Lubin studios. The combined orchestras of the Stanley and Victoria theaters furnished the music, which included most of the patriotic airs that more than pleased the people. The film celebrities received thousands of signed pledges for war stamps, which made the affair a big success. The committee in charge of the arrangements included Jules E. Mastbaum, chairman; A. L. Einstein, publicity director of the Stanley Co.; L. R. Beggs, and Frank W. Buhler, of the Central Market Street Amusement Company, and A. R. Boyd, of the Arcadia, Family, and Great Northern. The stars were afterwards escorted to several neighborhood theaters, where hundreds of more pledges were secured.

Manager Gill Adds to Business.

J. F. Gill, manager of the Mutual exchange in Philadelphia, claims 25 per cent. increase in business as a result of an intensified campaign made in booking the new Chaplin comedy prints. Mr. Gill's excellent ability and knowledge of the film business started January 19, 1912, in the offices of the General Film, from which period he has remained closely in touch with the most improved methods of conducting an exchange. Mr. Gill anticipates big business for the Mutual due to the fact that word has been received that the continuation of the present program will be maintained with the addition of superfeatures to be included in the very near future.

Rex and Ridge Theaters Brighten.

The Rex and the Ridge motion picture theaters were reopened Wednesday, May 8, after having remained dark for a long period. Both theaters will be under the control of the Liberty Amusement Company. The Rex, which is located at Ridge avenue and Oxford street, will be devoted exclusively for the entertainment of the colored population in this vicinity, while the Ridge will give the usual picture show for the caucasian photoplay enthusiasts. The price of admission will be 10 cents at both houses, which have been thoroughly overhauled and artistically redecorated. The Rex will be managed by a colored gentleman, while all of the help and the musicians will be of the same race also.

Window Display for Gerard Film.

A. L. Einstein, publicity director of the Stanley Company, put over a wonderful display advance on "My Four Years in Germany" by using the three large bulk windows of the recently vacated Earle store, which is situated on one of the most central thoroughfares of Philadelphia. Ambassador Gerard, the Kaiser, and members of the German embassy were shown in life sized cut-outs apparently in conversation and surrounded with suitable scenery. "My Four Years in Germany" opened at the Forrest theater, Monday, May 13, for an indefinite period to one of the largest attendances that ever crowded in this show house.

Manager Dembow Recognizes Merit.

Leon J. Behal, the star salesman of the Fox exchange, who recently won the first prize for bringing in the largest number of contracts during the past month, has been fully rewarded by a substantial increase in his salary, while William Smith ,who ran second, took second prize, and was given a gold locket by George Dembow, the manager.

Rivoli Gives Two Days' Receipts.

The Hatch Adams Amusement Company, who operate the Rivoli theater at 52d and Sansom streets, Philadelphia, will contribute the entire receipts of Wednesday and Thursday, May 22 and 23, to the Red Cross. Permission to make this donation was received from the Local Chapter of the Red Cross by Manager Burley, who negotiated for the arrangements. The idea which was originally proposed as a one day affair was allowed for the extra day through the patriotic spirit of the members of the firm.

Will Decide on "War Brides" for Maryland

Censor Recalls Permit Issued to Pacifist Picture Before the War and Selznick Corporation Takes Matter to the Court.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.—What promises to be an interesting case will come up in the City Court of Baltimore shortly to decide whether "War Brides" can be shown in Maryland. This picture was last year passed by the Censor Board of Maryland and shown at Ford's Opera House. But that was before the United States entered the war. This permission has been recalled by the censor board, and the Lewis J. Selznick Film Corporation has appealed from this decision.

According to Mrs. Marguerite E. Harrison, the secretary of the censor board, the recall of the film has not been done because there is anything immoral in the picture, but because it would have a very depressing effect on the women who are giving their sons, brothers, and sweethearts to the country for war service at the present time.

Attorney General Albert C. Ritchie will probably represent the state in the case, and a well known attorney has been engaged by the film corporation.

Trench Mortar Battery Benefit.

On Sunday afternoon, May 5, at the Parkway theater, 3-9 West North avenue, Bernard Depkin, Jr., manager, a fine patriotic rally was held by the Ladies' Auxillary of the Welfare Association of the 117th Trench Mortar Battery (Baltimore's own). The audience contributed $1,500 for comforts for the boys.

Harford County Tax Rate.

Belair, Md.—On May 3, the tax rate for Harford county was fixed by the county commissioners for the year 1918 at 95 cents on the $100, this rate being 10 cents lower than the 1917 rate.

Loew's Ambulance Fund Benefit.

On Sunday night, May 5, at Loew's Hippodrome, Baltimore, George A. McDermitt, the resident manager, arranged a fine benefit performance to raise money for the Lowe Theater Employees' Ambulance Fund. Music was furnished by an orchestra of 30 pieces. Mr. McDermitt made a patriotic speech to the audience, and an offering was collected.

Shubert Features at Auditorium.

F. C. Schanberger, manager of the Maryland and Auditorium theaters, announces that a five-year booking agreement has been arranged with the Messrs. Schubert, whereby the Auditorium theater will play and control all the Schubert bookings exclusively in Baltimore. Mr. Schanberger will personally operate the theater, and Leonard B. McLaughlin will be the business manager.

W. H. Film Company, a New Exchange.

Wallace High, the Baltimore representative for Sidney B. Lust, and who for nine months represented K-E-S-E in this territory, will shortly open an exchange here to be known as the W. H. Film Co., at 210 North Calvert street. Mr. High states that it is the purpose of the new company to handle state rights features, and that he has now obtained the Chaplin comedies.

Operator Examiners Appointed.

On Wednesday, May 1, Governor Emerson C. Harrington, of Maryland, gave out as his appointments for the Board of Examiners of Moving Picture Machine Operators, Eugene Gamble and Upton S. Whittier. These are reappointments by the Governor, and it is understood that a vacancy still exists on the board which requires filling.

Flag Airdome May Soon Open.

Along about this time of the year J. T. Langville, manager of the Hull theater, Hull street near Fort avenue, usually brightens up the Flag Airdome, which is just two blocks away from the Hull on Fort avenue.

George Collins Representing K-E-S-E.

George Collins is now representing the K-E-S-E productions in the Baltimore territory. Mr. Collins, it is understood, is a newcomer to the Monumental City and he hails from the South. All the boys along Film Row have welcomed him with a glad hand.

Comforts at the Fox Exchange.

Field Carmichael, Fox manager in Detroit, has had sanction from the home office to make a number of important changes. One is the installation of a fireproof projection booth, which means that Field can hereafter screen all Fox pictures in his own exchange. Another improvement—the best of all—is an exhibitors' club room, which will have a new hardwood floor—comfortable chairs, davenports, reading tables, etc., so that exhibitors can rest themselves or confer with each other in privacy. Field expects to have all improvements completed in another week or so, and then will announce "an afternoon party." Be on the lookout for it.

Third Anniversary at Bridge Theater.

During the week of May 13 the Bridge theater, Edmonson avenue and Pulaski street, celebrated its third anniversary. Louis Schlichter, the president of the Edmonson Amusement Company, operating this pretty playhouse, also acts as manager, and much of the theater's success can be attributed to his fine treatment of his patrons and the courteous corps of employes in the theater. An especially arranged program of big features was booked for the week, including such stars as Mary Pickford, Theda Bara, Olga Petrova, Harold Lockwood and Annette Kellermann, and on Monday, Tuesday and Saturday nights special musical selections were rendered by local talent. Just recently the theater has been entirely redecorated and a fine new ventilating system installed.

Roy Fernandez at McHenry Hospital.

Roy Fernandez, who for six years previous to his enlistment as an ambulance driver, June 21, 1917, at Culver City, Cal., with several other actors, was engaged in acting for the screen with the Star, Biograph, Universal, Metro and Triangle Film companies, is now a patient at the United States General Hospital No. 2, at Fort McHenry in this city. He came to this hospital on April 20 and has been studying telegraphy in one of the classes. He is a native of Fairfield, Conn.

A. B. Seligman, manager of Nixon's Victoria theater, 415 East Baltimore street, is now making arrangements to follow out the wishes of Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, of Philadelphia, who is the general manager of the Victoria, in issuing the notice that season passes for June, July and August, will be presented to the children in the public and parochial schools of Baltimore who are successful in their coming early summer examinations.

Patriotic Benefits in Baltimore.

On Sunday night, May 12, the Rialto theater held a patriotic meeting to aid in raising the fund of $125,000 for the Women's Oversea Hospital, U. S. A., in France.

Frederick C. Schanberger, manager of the Maryland theater, at the request of the local chapter of the D. A. R., allowed them the use of this theater on Sunday night, May 12, for a benefit performance, the proceeds of which were to buy comforts for the soldiers stationed at Fort McHenry.

On Sunday night, May 12, the Parkway theater, under the management of Bernard Depkin, Jr., and the Garden theater, under that of L. A. DeHoff, were loaned to the Women's Committee of the War Savings Stamps campaign in Baltimore for two meetings in the interest of the War Savings Stamps drive. At the Parkway the estimated subscription was $5,000, while at the Garden an amount not so large was subscribed.

Pictures at Academy of Music.

Harry A. Henkel, manager of the Academy of Music, has now placed moving pictures in this theater, but whether this house will be kept open during the whole summer with pictures has not been ascertained. During the week of May 13 the attraction was "The Lure of Alaska," the natural color pictures of Dr. Leonard S. Sudden. This ran for the full week with the exception of Tuesday, when the all-star performance of "Out There" was given, with the result of obtaining $28,952 for the Red Cross. During the week of May 27, "My Four Years in Germany" will be the attraction.

Rochester Trade Letter

By L. B. Skeffington, 61 Main Street, Rochester, N. Y.

J. H. Finn Heads Theater "War Chest."

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—J. H. "Mickey" Finn, manager of the Temple theater, has been appointed to look after the theaters in the drive for the Rochester War Chest, a central organization of all war-time funds and relief agencies. Jack Farren, of the Victoria; A. N. Wolff, of the Rialto, and William A. Calihan, of the Regent, are captains of teams.

George A. Simpson Arrives in France.

George E. Simpson, of the Regent, Gordon, and Picadilly theaters, has received word of the safe arrival of his son, George A., in France with a supply column.

Mid-New York Personal Notes.

Paul Fennyvessey, of the Strand theater, has applied to the Seventh Division Draft Board for assignment to the special course at New York University.

George Eastman announces the opening of a special branch plant of the Eastman Kodak Company at Paris to provide for the United States Signal Corps men in France.

C. A. "Buck" Taylor, western New York manager for Pathe, was in town the other day, and reported that Pathe is booming in fine style in this territory.

Week's Trade News Letter from Detroit

Notes About Exhibitors and Exchange Men—Death of A. I. Shapiro in Denver—Various Items of the Trade and Personal Jottings.

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

Two Film Men Win Commissions.

DETROIT, MICH.—A. J. Kleist, Jr., of Pontiac, owner of the Howland and Eagle theaters, passed the examinations at the last course in the officers' training school at Camp Custer, and will be made a first or second lieutenant.

Sid Mills, formerly with Universal, also passed the examinations, and will receive his commission shortly.

George Ranshaw Enlists in Navy.

George A. Ranshaw, assistant manager of the Fox exchange in Detroit, enlisted in the United States Navy and was accepted.

Harold Bolster in Detroit.

Harold Bolster, one of the special representatives for Goldwyn, spent last week in Detroit principally to meet exhibitors and to discuss their problems.

"My Own United States" Liked.

W. S. McLaren, of the Majestic, Jackson, recently played Metro's "My Own United States" for three days to good business. Jackson was the first city in the country to play it outside of New York.

Bert Williams Made General Manager.

Bert Williams, managing director for Frank Farrington, of the Colonial theater, Woodward and Sibley streets, Detroit, has been appointed general manager of the Woodward Theater Co., controlling five theaters. Mr. Williams will continue at the Colonial in addition to looking after the Woodward houses.

Mr. Williams deserves the greatest credit for having put over the Colonial, because it is now on the road to success, with business getting better each day.

"The Kaiser" Breaks Another Record.

George Olson, of the Opera House, Grayling, recently played "The Kaiser" to the biggest business in the history of the house. Prices were 35 cents for children and 50 cents for adults. Business remarkable for town of only 2,000 people.

Garfield Did Well with "Over There."

Recently Charles Garfield, of the Orpheum at Flint, played the Select's patriotic war film, "Over There." In connection with the engagment Charlie used a big British tank built over a motor car, and had it constantly parading the streets and standing in front of his house.

R. H. Ramsay Makes Good.

R. H. Ramsay is proving a "star" film salesman for the General in Michigan. Mr. Ramsay formerly was manager of a clothing and men's furnishing goods store in Detroit. He is doing phenomenally for the General, sending in some business from every town he visits.

S. W. Hatch Heads Detroit Metro.

George Montgomery has resigned as Metro manager in Detroit, and is succeeded by Stanley W. Hatch, formerly with the Vitagraph and Kleine exchanges in Cincinnati.

Simplex Machines in Great Demand.

Bert Weddige, of the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Co., who is now selling Simplex machines and Simplex parts, says that if business continues to grow he will have to secure more space. "We have more than doubled our business in the past sixty days," said Bert.

Steele Buys Bay City Theater Stock.

James Steele, division manager for Paramount, has purchased the interests of Dick Leahy in the Wenonah Theater Co., operating the Wenonah and Washington theaters, Bay City. Mr. Watson is already managing the houses and doing the booking. Mr. Steele has a chain of theaters, one that will shortly open in Detroit, seating 2,000; one in Findlay, Ohio; one in Indiana, and several in Pittsburgh. However, these are his own theaters and not Paramount's.

United Theater Equipment Corp. Notes.

L. J. Gardiner, Detroit manager for the Gardiner Theater Equipment Corp., contracted to equip the Opera House at Hicksville with complete theater outfit, including Power's machine, Hallberg economizer, and Velvet Gold Fibre Screen.

The Gardiner Screen is being sold in every state in the country, and agencies have also been established in other countries. Shipments to South America and Porto Rico were made recently from the Detroit factory. The new million-dollar theater being erected in Havana, Cuba, will have one of Gardiner's screens.

A. I. Shapiro Dies in Denver.

A. I. Shapiro, better known as "Shap," passed away Sunday, May 12, at 4:15 p. m., Oakes Sanitarium, Denver, Colo.

Words fail utterly to express the great sorrow that this news brings to "Shap's" many friends in Michigan both in and out of the film business.

"Shap" came originally to Michigan as manager of the Fox exchange. He was transferred to New York as special representative, and returned to Detroit as manager of the Triangle exchange. Then he went to Buffalo to manage an exchange for Lewis J. Selznick. In the spring of 1917 he again returned to Detroit as manager of the Goldwyn exchange.

A. I. Shapiro.

"Shap" was in the draft, being 31 years old last July. He resigned his position with Goldwyn in February expecting to enlist in New York City, his home. At the time he had a severe cold on his lungs, for which he had been doctoring all winter. Lung specialists were consulted in New York, who pronounced his trouble as pulmonary tuberculosis, and advised him to immediately go to Denver. He arrived at the Oakes Sanitarium about four weeks ago, and instead of improving he got worse. Late Sunday, May 12, his sister, who was at his bedside, wired to the writer: "Abraham Shapiro passed away today at 4:15 p. m. Body will be in New York Thursday." Burial will be from the residence of his family, 1157 Longfellow avenue.

IN DETROIT.

Three Prints of "Unbeliever" Working.

Three prints in Michigan are working solid on "The Unbeliever." The Lincoln theater, Owosso, played the picture two days to such big business that Mrs. Fred Patterson booked a return engagement. The Fuller, Kalamazoo, played it five days to immense business; Bob Peltier, Mt. Clemens, cleaned up with it for two days; the Regent, Bay City, had a splendid business for three days, and the same thing can be said of the Regent, Ionia, for two days. J. R. Denniston played it at Monroe for two days. The Strand, Flint, has booked a return engagement for two days; the Family, Jackson, for three days; the Family, Port Huron, for three days, and the Lincoln, Owosso, for two days.

G. L. Allmart in Ordnance Department.

G. L. Allmart, former office manager for Paramount in Detroit, is now a private in the ordnance supply department stationed at Camp Hancock, Ga. For the past week George has been chopping wood, digging trenches, and doing guard duty. In about ten days he will start a regular school training.

Opera House to Pictures for Summer.

Pictures start at the Detroit opera house on May 19 with prices 25 and 50 cents, two shows daily. The opening attraction is a war film direct from Europe called "Pershing's Crusaders." Pictures will continue at the opera house until September 1, when the building will be torn down.

George Rowell with Famous Players.

George Rowell, for the past three months with the Kleine exchange in Detroit, started out Monday morning as road representative in Michigan for Artcraft and Paramount pictures. George is now attending strictly to business these days, and as a result is getting exhibitors to put their signatures on the dotted line.

Will Stay a Fifth Week.

From the way business has started out the fourth week of its engagement, "My Four Years in Germany" at the Washington theater, Detroit, is sure to stay a fifth week, and if it does the event will be a noteworthy one, because Ambassador Gerard, himself, is expected to be in Detroit for two days as guest of the Board of Commerce.

Louisville Trade Letter

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

Many Bonds Sold at Mary Anderson.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Carl F. Rettick, manager of the Louisville Keith theaters, was much pleased with the excellent showing made by the Mary Anderson theater, which sold approximately $200,000 worth of Liberty Bonds during the recent Keith selling campaign.

Crystal at Hickman Aids Loan.

Hickman, Ky.—Mrs. John Wright, operator of the Crystal theater, Hickman, Ky., during the Liberty Loan campaign announced that every dollar taken in at the theater during the last week of the campaign would be invested in Liberty Bonds This led several other merchants in the same direction, with the result that sales were increased considerably.

Not the Exchange This Time.

Through the failure of an exhibitor in Fulton, Ky., to regard instructions from the exhange the Grand theater in Owensboro did not receive the first chapter of "The Eagle's Eye" recently, and thereby disappointed its patrons, as the serial had been heavily advertised for the opening. These things happen frequently when the theater man is left to forward films to another house, as it seems they just will not heed instructions properly.

Curran Enlists in Sanitary Corps.

BANGOR, ME.—John H. Curran, who has represented World Pictures in Maine and New Hampshire for some time, resigned his position recently to enlist in the medical department of the United States Army, and has reported at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass. Mr. Curran was a highly successful film salesman, and anticipates a return to that industry after he has finished with his part of the task of doing up the Kaiser. He has been succeeded by his brother, Ray Curran, formerly with the General office in Bangor.

M. St. Leger Has Much to Be Proud of.

Skowhegan, Me.—M. St. Leger, of the City opera house, Skowhegan, has one of the prettiest theaters in Maine. He started in the motion picture game nine years ago, when he built the Star, then selling out to Myron Smith. Afterwards, Mr. St. Leger opened the Bijou at Skowhegan. By unanimous vote at a town meeting, Smith and St. Leger, who had combined interests, were given a license to run the City opera house, and the friendly sentiment toward them is evidenced by the fact that at a town meeting called to vote on a license for another theater not one was cast in its favor. The opera house has 1,000 seats. Mr. St. Leger has a son, Corporal Harry St. Leger, in France with the American Expeditionary Forces. He has been on numerous raiding parties across "No Man's Land," and it is said that he is a chip of the old block.

Operators in Capital Demand a New Scale

Men in the Booths Feel the Burden of Living Costs—Some Are Leaving the Business—Several Exhibitors Have Granted the Increase.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Motion picture exhibitors of Washington have received a notice from the local operators' union stating that since putting present contracts into effect on April 9, 1917, conditions have changed to such a great extent as to force the union to submit a new contract and wage scale. The notice, signed by Motion Picture Machine Operators' Protective Union, Local No. 224, states that "On and after May 20, 1918, giving you one week's notice as per agreement, the present contract between you and our organization dating from April 9, 1917, shall be considered null and void, and the new contract shall be considered in full force and effect.

"We hardly think it necessary for us to go into lengthy detail in order to convince you of the increased cost of living in Washington since April, 1917, when our present contracts were signed. The effect has been felt very much by members of our organization, and lots of us have some difficulty in making both ends meet.

"Some of our men have had to go to other trades and accept positions paying more money; several have gone into the Government service at better pay, and this is one condition that we wish to overcome. We always like to feel that we can furnish a competent man when called upon for one by an exhibitor. This we cannot do if we allow them to leave for other trades because they cannot make sufficient to live on at operating.

"We also wish to bring to your attention the fact that the following managements have already granted their operators an increase over existing scale. They are as follows: Masonic Auditorium, Elite, Loew's Columbia, Tom Moore, and the Crandall Circuit.

"We appreciate the friendly relations existing in the past between the exhibitors of Washington and our organization, and regret that conditions have forced us to put a new scale of wages into effect so soon."

The schedule provides that eight hours of operating for any one man shall constitute a day's maximum of work. One operator on any regular evening's run of five hours or less is to be paid not less than $20 per week, Sunday matinees included if run. Extra matinee operating is to be paid for at the rate of 60 cents per hour. On Sunday or other matinee one hour of relief is to be furnished the operator at the expense of the manager. If operator has to work without supper relief he is to be paid an additional 60 cents.

All work in houses running eight hours or more per day is to be paid for at a flat rate of 60 cents per hour. All single performances outside regular moving picture theaters are to be charged for at not less than $7 per performance, or $10 where two shows are given on the same day. Road operators are to be paid at the rate of $45 per week. This same rate is to be paid operators at other than a moving picture theater running matinee and evening performances of pictures, $70 being paid when there are two operators. Operators working vaudeville or burlesque houses, matinee and evening performances with motion pictures as added attractions, are to be paid $30 per week.

The charge for screening a picture for managers is to be 90 cents an hour; for exchanges, a flat rate of 50 cents a reel must be paid.

The schedule provides that all theaters with a seating capacity of 500 or more and running eight hours or more per day must employ three journeymen operators. Any operator who is required to work more than eight hours in any one day is to receive time and a half (90 cents per hour) for every hour of overtime.

It is further provided that operators on an evening's run at open air parks shall be paid not less than $15 per week, rainy days not deducted, this section not to apply when a manager takes an operator from a theater to work in a park under the same management.

Popular Doorman Back at Post.

Charles Lehman, one of the best known and best liked theater attaches in Washington, D. C., is back at his post on the door of the Savoy theater after an absence of about fourteen weeks. Mr. Lehman had the misfortune to be struck by an automobile truck while crossing Pennsylvania avenue, near the Post Office Department building. He was knocked down and sustained a broken foot, which even now prevents his walking any great distance or standing for any length of time.

It is said of Mr. Lehman that he knows by name more senators, representatives, foreign diplomats, officials high in our Government service, officers of the army and navy, and other notables than any other man holding a similar position in Washington. They always stop for a word with him, and upon his return to duty for the better part of the first week he held nightly receptions in the Savoy lobby greeting these folks and receiving their congratulations upon his recovery.

Crandall House Has New Fans.

The Crandall Amusement Company, Washington, D. C., has just completed the installation of two large typhoon fans at the Ninth and E street houses, and is undertaking similar work at the Savoy and Avenue Grand.

F. H. Gilman Announces New Features.

NEWARK, N. J.—Frank H. Gilman, manager of the Civilization Film Corporation, 120 Market street, Newark, N. J., announces that his firm has just obtained the New Jersey state rights to "Nine-tenths of the Law," featuring Mitchell Lewis, and also "The Devil's Playground," starring Beatriz Michelena.

George R. Carter with Vitagraph.

George R. Carter, until recently with the Bluebird Films, is now connected with the Vitagraph concern as New Jersey representative. He informed the Moving Picture World correspondent that the Vitagraph production "Over the Top," featuring Guy Empey, was booked for two weeks beginning May 13 at the Goodwin theater, 863 Broad street, Newark.

So insistent was the demand to see Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," that Manager Kridell prolonged the showing another week, making a two weeks' run at his Goodwin theater.

"Cleopatra" on Loew Program.

Theda Bara in "Cleopatra" was an added feature at Loew's Newark theater, 99 Springfield avenue, May 9, 10 and 11. Eugene Meyers is resident manager of the showhouse.

Jerome Kraker Listed for Service.

Jerome Kraker, for several years in the srvice of the Universal Film Corporation, has been examined by his local board and found physically fit for service.

Buffalo Shows No Weariness in Well Doing

Theaters that Helped Liberty Bond Sales Now Putting Shoulder to the Wheel of Red Cross and Thrift Stamp Drives.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 157 N. Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Now that the Third Liberty loan campaign, in which Buffalo theaters figured prominently, has passed into history, these houses are generously giving their services to the Red Cross and War Saving Stamp drives. All the theaters are showing a two-reel drama, "The Spirit of the Red Cross." On Tuesday, May 14, the following houses had four-minute men speak on Red Cross work: Palace, Shea's Hippodrome, Jubilee, Sheldon, Colonial, Eastern Star, Olympic, Allendale, Lilly, Tri-It, Orpheum, Elmwood, Sylvia, Como, Oakdale, Lovejoy Palace, Casino, Fillmore and Cozy Corner. All the other theaters will have speakers later. W. A. V. Mack of the Mutual, head of the local picture theater publicity for the Red Cross, is supplying slides, posters and other advertising matter.

"Licked by a Stamp" is a title of a film produced in Buffalo, which has been shown at Shea's Hippodrome and Strand theaters. The picture is used as part of the publicity for promoting the Thrift Stamp sale. The scenario was written by Arthur C. Willats, an employe of the Buffalo Evening News. The cast is made up of Buffalonians and the scenes were taken in Buffalo. The picture was filmed by E. C. Winegar of this city.

G. Ferguson Assisting at the Kleine.

George Ferguson has been appointed assistant to Louis Greene, Buffalo manager of the George Kleine System.

New Bill Hits Lobby Adornments.

Men who have been accustomed to loaf around the lobbies of Buffalo theaters and get in the way of or annoy patrons will have their pleasure turned into a hardship as a result of the Robinson anti-loafing bill, which has been signed by Governor Whitman. The new law will be rigidly enforced in Buffalo.

Three "Sunshine" Prints in Buffalo.

"In this office we had previously used two prints on each of our Special and Standard pictures as well as the Sunshine Comedies," said C. P. Sheehan, special representative of the Fox Film Corporation, whose Buffalo exchange was recently opened. "Now the home office has found it necessary to furnish this exchange with a third additional print. This will enable the Buffalo office to allow more time between shipments and also to have each and every print in such a condition as if it just came 'out of the can.'

"Principal Babst of the South Park high school, Buffalo, was so impressed with the production of 'Jack and the Beanstalk,' recently played at the Strand theater, Buffalo," continued Mr. Sheehan, "that he immediately secured this subject for a two-day presentation to the students and friends of the school. Three thousand tickets were sold. The assembly hall of the school was so crowded at the performances that Dr. Bapst has requested the Fox office to reserve repeat booking dates for him."

"Manager Franklin of Shea's Hippodrome, this city, has contracted for the entire output of our Mutt and Jeff comedies, starting with 'The Superintendent' and following with 'Back to the Balkans,'" Mr. Sheehan added. "The Victoria theater, this city, has had great success with the Victor Hugo classic, 'Les Miserables,' featuring William Farnum."

Philip Gentille Likes His New Job.

"I formerly worked for the Mutual Film, Buffalo, under Manager Mack, as his chief shipping clerk. Now I am working for Uncle Sam."

This was one of the statements contained in a letter which the Buffalo correspondent of the Moving Picture World has just received from Philip Gentille.

"I enlisted in the Navy as a seaman, second class, and after two months of hard drilling and study, I have been promoted to storekeeper, third class, and I am allowed subsistence money to live in Norfolk, Va.," said Mr. Gentille. "Mention in the Moving Picture World that I am in fine health and that I would like to hear from all my friends."

Mr. Gentille's varied experiences included his being assistant manager of the Regent moving picture theater, Buffalo, under Mr. Schlesinger. He says that at the Academy theater, this city, he also worked with Louis Greene, now Buffalo manager of the George Kleine System. Mr. Gentille's address is Navy Y. M. C. A., Norfolk, Va.

Minor Using Diversified Subjects.

Frank Minor has taken over the Victor moving picture theater at 1584 Greene street, Buffalo. He has just installed a new organ, an American Photoplayer. He has also built six-sheet billboards on each side of his house and a twenty-four-sheet board on top of the theater. The admission for grownups at the Victor was formerly five and ten cents, but Mr. Minor is now using the uniform price of ten cents. His house is on the East Side.

"My people don't like too much 'blood and thunder,'" said Mr. Minor. "They like variety, so two and three-reel pictures are popular. Two-reelers give me a chance to introduce comedy, drama and educational pictures. They don't like an all-evening show on one subject."

Mr. Minor formerly conducted the Majestic and Cozy Corner moving picture theaters in this city.

Buffalo Select Wins Honors.

C. R. Rogers, manager of the Select exchange, Buffalo, has been informed that this office heads the honor roll for April rentals of Select pictures. All Select branches throughout the United States figured in the contest. Sharing in this honor are Mr. Rogers' two salesmen, Sherman S. Webster and A. W. Moses. The honor roll was sent out by the main office. These salesmen use machines to cover their territories.

"They are visiting not only the big places," said Mr. Rogers, "but every little town and cross roads and are placing our pictures right and left. To stimulate them in their good work this exchange has started a friendly contest in which Messrs. Webster and Moses are working at high speed to win a prize. This creates interest for the contestants and their friends, the exhibitors. We have every town in our territory, from 5,000 and up, showing our pictures and we haven't one dissatisfied account in our exchange."

The Select's "Over There" is being used successfully in connection with the Red Cross and Junior Red Cross drives in this territory. Arthur S. Kane, general manager of the Select, has complimented Mr. Rogers on "the immaculate appearance of the Buffalo exchange." The place is homelike and as clean as the proverbial pin. The recreation and waiting room of the exchange is appreciated by the exhibitors. The bulletin board on which is posted live hints as to the best way to "put over" the Select pictures is a pleasing attraction. This material is changed frequently.

Buffalo Business Brevities.

Al Becker, proprietor of Becker's Film Supply Co., Buffalo, is on a buying trip to New York. W. H. Johnson is manager of the office. Mr. Becker has been busy supplying moving picture machines, operators and booths in connection with recruiting conducted by the Canadian and British officers in this city. He also was busy in the Liberty Loan and Red Cross campaigns. He handles the latest Simplex and Motiograph machines.

W. P. Tanney, manager of the Buffalo branch of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., has installed in the Olympic theater, Buffalo, a Wurtlitzer motion picture orchestra, Style O. This will be used to supplement and relieve the Olympic musicians. Bruce Fowler is manager of the Olympic.

While a young woman of Tonawanda, N. Y., was attending a moving picture theater in that city recently about three inches of her hair braid was cut off. The theater manager investigated and the hair that was removed was found on the floor back of where the girl sat. Knife marks on the seat showed that the hair had been cut off by being held against the seat. The police accuse two youths of the act.

The First National Exchange, Inc., Buffalo, expects to begin booking "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" in June.

Cleveland Company Will Build Theaters

Mall Company Secures Land and Will Build Three Motion Picture Houses—One Will Seat More Than 2,000 Persons.

By M. A. Malaney, 607 Belmont Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—By a tripled real estate deal brought to a successful close May 7, Cleveland is to have three more high class theaters within two years, one of them being a house to seat more than 2,000 downtown.

The Mall Company, owners of the Mall double-deck theater in the downtown section, have taken over properties at East 63rd street and Euclid avenue and at Auburndale avenue and Euclid avenue, East Cleveland, and motion picture theaters will be erected on those sites.

Joseph Laronge, treasurer of the Mall Company, also announced that arrangements are being made by the Mall Company to erect another theater having a seating capacity between 2,000 and 3,000 near Euclid avenue and East 9th street in the downtown section.

Mr. Laronge and his associates now have the lease on property and a three-story building on East Ninth street, corner of Walnut, where the new downtown theater probably will be built.

Strand and Reel Look Much Better.

Two downtown houses in Cleveland have just given their fronts and lobbies a thorough overhauling, and the improvements have made them look 100 per cent. better. These are the Strand and the Reel.

The Reel has installed handsome new poster frames, and the front has been entirely redecorated, while the Strand entrance on Prospect avenue has not only been redecorated, but Manager Adler has had an elegant markee built, which gives the entrance a wonderfully improved appearance.

American Amusement Company to Build.

A new theater to seat 1,500 persons is to be built on the south side at Fulton road, N. W., and Bush avenue, S. W., Cleveland. The house is being promoted by the American Amusement Co., which operates the American, Lakeview, and other houses. The building will cost about $80,000 to build.

Ryder Will Guide the Gordon Square.

George Ryder, well-known Cleveland theater manager, has been appointed manager of the Gordon Square theater, a big vaudeville and picture house on the west side. He succeeds Harry DuRocher, whose contract expired, according to the owners of the house.

Mr. Ryder recently resigned as manager of the Cedar theater to accept the new position. Previously to that he was in charge of the Reel, a downtown house.

Lima, O. Notes.

G. O. Dupius, owner of the Royal, Strand, and Dreamland theaters, has rented the Orpheum, the Gus Sun vaudeville house, and will show pictures there during the summer months. He opened it with "The Kaiser" the week of May 5.

The South Side Lyric, of Lima, formerly the Roma, has been closed by Manager Powell, of the Lyric.

Floyd C. Focht has just installed a new musical instrument in the Empire, Lima, and is much pleased with the results.

Cincinnati Trade Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 1st Nat. Bk., Cincinnati.

Probable Passing of the Victoria

CINCINNATI, O.—A lease of the Victoria moving picture theater on McMillan avenue in Walnut Hills just across the street from the Orpheum has been taken by W. M. Duane, although so far no definite announcement of the purpose for which the building will be used has been made. The theater has been vacant, for the most part, for the past two years, as it was proved by the sad experience of several lessees that it could not be operated profitably in competition with the big house across the street.

Features at the Lyric for the Summer.

The Lyric theater, Cincinnati, which has been running a season of performances by a stock company since the regular season closed, is now beginning its summer season of moving picture attractions, a lease of the house having been given by Manager Heuck to a group of Cincinnati business men who propose to run feature attractions there until the next regular season begins. The first feature scheduled was "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," which has been doing a large business in other Ohio cities, but has not yet been seen in Cincinnati. The opening, set for May 19, coincides with the opening of the Red Cross campaign, and due attention has been given to that fact.

"Nation" Film Back for Third Showing.

The return of "The Birth of a Nation" to the Grand opera house, Cincinnati, for a third engagement brought unusual interest recently, as the big drama made a record of nearly two months on its original engagement at the highest prices ever received in Cincinnati for a moving picture production, and then came back for a month the following season last year doing equally well. Its engagement on this occasion was for a week only, and at reduced prices, 25 and 50 cents; but the crowds which attended the two daily performances proved that the picture has lost nothing of its drawing power in spite of the fact that many thousands of people in Cincinnati have already seen it.

Cincinnati Trade Brevities.

The official British war pictures showing not only the activities of the British Army in the field, but the part played by the workers at home in England are drawing interested audiences at the Family theater, Cincinnati, where one of the series is being shown on release by the Pathe exchange the latter half of each week. The series will run 12 weeks.

Manager Libson, of the Family, is preparing for hot weather, having let a contract for a complete new cooling and ventilating system in that house to the Ohio Building and Construction Co.

Ned Hastings, the popular manager of the Cincinnati B. F. Keith theater, has been named as head of the Red Ticket of the Cincinnati Advertisers' Club for the annual election to be held on June 5, and a warm campaign is on.

Youngstown, O.—The prospective visit of the film production of Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," engaged for a week's run at the Park theater, had added interest to Youngstown people by reason of the fact that the film was produced by Harry and Abe Warner, Youngstown boys.

Piqua, O.—Manager Kress, of May's opera house, has been told that he aided materially in helping Piqua "over the top" in the Third Liberty Loan campaign by showing "The Beast of Berlin" during the last week of the campaign.

Makes Theater a Bower of Summer Flowers

At the Grand Opera House in London, Ontario, They Believe in Spending Money to Make House Attractive to Patrons and Grow Popular.

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto.

TORONTO, ONT.—A wonderful transformation has been made in the Grand opera house, London, Ont., in order to obtain a summer garden effect for the coming season. The whole interior has been made into a bower of flowers, with entirely new lighting arrangements. A carload of floral decorations were imported from the States, while seven hundred yards of new draperies were bought in Toronto. The theater's electrician was sent on a tour of American theaters to get ideas, and the suggestions of theater decorators of several cities were obtained.

The whole theater was repainted and redecorated by a staff of twenty men in less than forty-eight hours, and during this time the changes effected included the installation of a new stage setting, remodeling of the ladies' room, installation of many lighting fixtures, special decoration of the orchestra pit, overhauling of the ventilating system, hanging of new box and lobby draperies, and the renovation of the entrance. New carpets were laid, and wicker furniture and flower baskets were placed in various parts of the theater.

A. J. Small, owner, and J. R. Minhinnick, manager, have also closed contracts for a new film service. The policy of the theater will be to present first runs of Goldwyn and Metro features, and the comedies will include first runs of Charlie Chaplin and Lonesome Luke subjects. Programs will be changed twice each week, with matinees each afternoon and two shows at night. Special attention is being paid to musical accompaniment, the orchestra being under the direction of Mr. Maurice Poure, an able leader. Manager Minhinnick has also arranged for the presentation of one high class vaudeville act on each bill.

Canadian Universal Notes.

Phil Hazza, formerly manager of the Winnipeg branch of the Canadian Universal, has been appointed manager of the Montreal branch of the company. Ed. Wilson, late manager of the Bijou theater, Winnipeg, has taken charge of the Winnipeg Universal office in succession to Mr. Hazza.

A. Rondeau is now attached to the sales staff of the Universal's Montreal office. Rondeau was formerly with Pathe, and has also been connected with several local theaters.

S. Dunlop, a new man in the moving picture business, has been appointed assistant manager of the St. Denis theater, Montreal.

Announcement has been made by Manager Mills, of Loew's theater, Montreal, that a large concert organ will be installed immediately.

An indication of railway transportation difficulties is the fact that the St. Denis theater, Montreal, has had a new stage setting on the way from New York City for many months. A makeshift setting has been in use for a number of weeks, and it is probable that the new set will not be installed now until the opening of the fall season next September.

Film in Montreal Vaudeville Houses.

An interesting feature of the Montreal situation is the decision of the dramatic and vaudeville houses to adopt picture attractions. His Majesty's has booked several special pictures for presentation at an early date. The Orpheum theater has been showing pictures for several weeks, and the Princess theater, the new, large vaudeville house, has also arranged for feature pictures for the summer season, which starts immediately.

Winnipeg Theater Brightens.

The Imperial theater, Winnipeg, which has been a dark house for several weeks, has been remodeled and redecorated. Announcement is made that it will be reopened under entirely new management.

Gives Postal Cards and Postage.

The Allen theater, Toronto, has been making a specialty of various advertising stunts.

One of the plans inaugurated was the distribution of picture post cards with views of the exterior and interior of the new theater. The cards are given freely to patrons with the suggestion that they write to their friends, the theater paying the postage. Almost every day from thirty to forty of the cards are handed to ushers or ticket sellers for mailing. Of course it is not a difficult matter to read the messages on the cards, and in almost every instance the note bears reference to some feature of the theater which is appreciated. In the opinion of the management this form of advertising is not costly, yet it forms valuable boosting.

The cards and other advertising literature are always to be found on a small table just inside the entrance to the theater. The other literature consists of the Allen News, a weekly house organ containing details of coming attractions and references to various house features, musical request lists and small calendars for the current month. The lists of musical selections are changed each month, and with these the orchestra is able to provide music that the patrons desire. Requested selections of a special nature are played on Tuesday and Thursday of each week.

Small Fires in Two Toronto Houses.

Toronto moving picture theaters have been visited by small fires on two different occasions recently. Fire of unknown origin caused $100 damage to His Majesty's theater, Yonge street, at three o'clock one morning, while the projection room of the Empress theater, 317 Yonge street, was slightly damaged during a matinee performance when a reel of film in the projection machine caught fire. There was no excitement in either instance.

W. G. Mitchell Goes to the States.

The announcement, important to moving picture men throughout Canada, was made on May 14 that William Griffith Mitchell, manager of the Regent theater, Toronto, had been appointed manager of the Strand theater, White Plains, N. Y. Mr. Mitchell was formerly assistant manager of the Strand theater, Toronto.

The new manager of the Regent theater will be Roland Roberts, manager of the St. Denis theater, Montreal, since last August. Mr. Roberts was formerly the manager of the Toronto Regent.

TRADE NOTES FROM UTICA.

By Clifford A. Caroll, Utica Observer.

Majestic Theater Center of Stirring Patriotic Demonstration.

UTICA, N. Y.—Marine Week, which is being observed all over the country this week, was opened in a splendid manner in this city May 12. A parade was held earlier in the evening, and later the celebration was concluded at the Majestic theater. A squad of Marines now in training at the Savage Arms Training School in this city took part. The Boy Scouts of the city, members of the Red Cross Society here, the state guard and similar organizations were in line. The feature of the celebration at the theater was the showing of the "Unbeliever," the great story of the Marine Corps "over there." Members of the Marine Corps here appeared in an appropriate tableaux with a young lady attired as Liberty. Patriotic songs were sung by a Utica singing chorus.

St. Louis Airdomes to Start Cautiously

Open Air Exhibitors Feel that Daylight Saving Hours Will Make Success a Problem and Many May Not Venture This Year.

By Mary Moore, 6035 Kingsbury Block, St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—Too much daylight threatens to keep the airdomes dark in St. Louis this summer. Joseph Mogler, president of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League, predicts that as a result of the advance made on the clock dial 20 to 25 motion picture airdomes which operated in St. Louis last year will be forced to suspend business this year.

Five so-called combination picture plants which have roofed theaters and adjoining airdomes will attempt to operate on a half-time basis, Mogler announces, but this is purely experimental. With the clock set forward an hour it will not be possible this summer to start a picture show until 9 p. m. in the open. This late start would make it impossible to give two performances. Mogler declares that with the low prices of admission prevailing in St. Louis the one performance would be unremunerative to owners or managers.

"Our league has held a number of meetings," said Mogler to a World correspondent, "on the new problem presented by daylight saving. Most of the airdome men have reached the conclusion that it will not pay them to remain open on the new schedule. In former years we found that the attendance was largest at the first show. Working people who have to rise early do not want to sit out until 11 p. m. at an airdome. There have always been a certain percentage who did care to stay up, and the second show caught them and made the airdome pay. We could depend only on this class if we tried to operate on the new schedule.

"Only a few of the houses are considering opening. I think most of these will give it up."

A few of the larger airdomes like the Lyric Skydome and the Hamilton are going to try the experiment of starting musical entertainment about 7:30, ending up this sort of a show at dark. This is of course also but an experiment. These two giant airdomes are already equipped for opening, and the experimental outlay will not be great in dollars and cents.

The West End Lyric, the Pageant, and the New Grand Central have cooling devices. They will attempt to run throughout the summer.

At the West End Lyric, two blocks from the Lyric Skydome, a plan is being formulated by which one show—the first—will be given at the inside theater, and the second show in the airdome two blocks away.

The downtown theaters, the Lyric, Strand, Central, and Royal, will operate all summer through cooling devices.

With St Louis Exchange Managers.

George McKean has severed his connections with the Paramount office in St. Louis, and is said to have received a flattering offer from the Lee Ochs, United Picture Theaters Co. Manager Reith is now in charge of the St. Louis office.

Eddie Dustin, formerly manager of the Select offices here, is now installed as manager of Pathe. He went to the General offices for a time after it was rumored that Manager Herbert Elder would leave the General.

Manager Elder, of the General, however, did not sign up with the Ochs people as planned and held on at the General headquarters. This left Dustin without a place, and he was quickly grabbed up by Pathe, who had just lost D. K. Evans as manager.

Cecil Mayberry, who has been in charge of the Foursquare office in St. Louis, has entered military service, and leaves this week for camp.

Barney Fegan, formerly manager of a small office on the third floor of the Empress building for the Standard Film Company, recently moved to the ground floor to share offices with the King-Bee agency. A few days later he took over the Foursquare branch here, and uniting his interests became a stockholder in the merged enterprise.

Skouras Bros. Play S. R. O. at Pageant.

Skouras Bros., who successfully operated the Olympia and Lafayette theaters, have accomplished the impossible with the Pageant. A year and a half ago, at the time these boys took over the house, it was in a state of innocuousness bordering on coma. It looked like a sure nough jinx, and the betting was eight to five it would never again take in money enough to pay the ushers.

For a time when the Skouras boys first took hold there was no marked change, but gradually they got the place to paying expenses, with a little bit over. Slowly the business grew, and the house took on the appearance of a live one; with a popular program and a real orchestra, it came into its own, until now at the start of its second year under the Skouras regime the Pageant is standing 'em up and turning 'em away at every performance.

Indiana Trade Letter

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis.

H. C. Knox Injured by Fall.

ANDERSON, IND.—H. C. Knox, who was here recently as manager of "My Four Years in Germany," presented at the Starland theater, injured himself as a result of a fall as he was entering the alley door of the theater on Friday, May 3. He was hurrying out with a reel of film, when he slipped and fell, spraining his knee. He was taken to the office of a physician, where the injury was dressed.

Throngs of persons crowded Meridian street in the vicinity of the theater where the Gerard film was being shown, and many were turned away each night. Practically the entire student body of the Markleville high school was in Anderson on Thursday night to see the picture, and many of them weer unable to get into the theater until the last show.

Charles Westrick Will Rebuild.

Charles Westrick, of Fort Wayne, Ind., the owner of the Grade theater at Bluffton, which was damaged badly as a result of a fire a few weeks ago, has been adjusting insurance matters and making preparations for rebuilding the theater at once.

While the repairs are going on several improvements will be made which will put the building in much better shape than ever before. New seats will be purchased for the balcony, all of which will be entirely reconstructed. An absolutely fireproof and modern operating booth will be installed, and the lower part of the house will be redecorated.

Blue Veil Censorship in South Bend.

A volunteer censorship committee appointed at the request of Mayor Carson, of South Bend, Ind., put their official "O. K." on the photoplay, "Cleopatra," which was shown last week at the Oliver theater. The objections to the picture were registered by Father Burke, of Notre Dame University, and the appointment of the censorship committee was the result.

The three scenes in the picture which were deemed indecent were screened with a heavy blue so that the thread of the picture could be followed, but the details of some of Theda's costumes were lost in the coloring. The identity of the members of the censorship committee were not revealed by the mayor.

After the special showing of the picture was over members of the committee, in discussing censorship and morals in general, criticised some of the films which Charles Chaplin is appearing in. They said school children constitute the biggest majority of Chaplin fans, and the pictures in which he appears almost invariably show degrading surroundings. The concensus of opinion of some of the members was that if there is to be censorship it should be on some of the Chaplin pictures.

New Amusement Company Starts.

Articles of incorporation were filed with the country recorder by the Jeffersonville Amusement Company, of Jeffersonville, Ind., a newly organized concern, for the purpose of conducting motion picture shows and other amusements. The capital stock is announced as $50,000, and the incorporators are Micheal Switow, John Gienger, and George Kopp.

Minneapolis Trade Letter.

R. H. Evans Is New Manager at General.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Another exchange manager was ushered into Minneapolis film circles during convention time—and quite unexpectedly too. R. H. Evans, formerly of the Pathe exchange at St. Louis, succeeded Charles Chapman Knapp at the General exchange the day before the convention opened. Few knew of the change until Mr. Knapp was inquired for and found to be "out." Mr. Knapp, we are informed, is to go on the road shortly with a "Hearts of the World" company.

Strand Keeps on Doing Good Business.

The rumor bee is busy
Here in our little bower
But the trouble with his rumors is
That most of them are sour.

At press time the flapping ear of Moving Picture World correspondent picked up the soft strains of three reports that the Minneapolis Strand had been sold. One report had it that Ruben and Finkelstein had added it to their string, another had it that the Hamm Brewing Co. of St. Paul had taken it over, and a third was to the effect that Eastern capitalists had purchased it. Upon query John and William Saxe, part owners of the theater, confessed no knowledge of such a transaction, as did also Manager Charles G. Branham. Meanwhile the Strand is apparently doing splendid business with "The Doctor and the Woman," and the rumors go madly on.

Stirring Opening for "Over the Top."

"Over the Top," boasting of its having cost a record sum to present locally, opened a week's run at the New Garrick theater, Minneapolis, Sunday, May 12, to a splendid business. Manager Julius Johnson put the big Empey feature over splendidly, ably assisted by a lavish billboard and newspaper advertising campaign and several attractive window displays of the book. Mr. Johnson is presenting the feature with special musical accompaniment and a beautiful special stage setting with light effects. A moon rising over the smoldering battlefields and a bugle call by a soldier trumpeter, while a British, a Scottish, an American sailor and a marine salute, and it makes a splendid opening for the big picture. The opening was greeted with marked enthusiasm by each audience during the showing.

T. L. Hays Has Fine Set for "Tarzan."

Manager Theodore L. Hays of the New Garrick, St. Paul, stole first honors in presenting "Tarzan of the Apes" to the people of this territory the week of May 5. Preceded by a special overture arranged and for the most part composed by William Warvelle Nelson, Garrick orchestra director, "Tarzan" was thrown on a screen surrounded by typical tropical trees, vines and effects, and the attractiveness of the stage display made the feature doubly enjoyable. St. Paulites are still talking about the presentation.

Pittsburgh News Letter

By Edward J. McGurty, 455 Union Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Columbia Theatre, Erie, Burns.

PITTSBURGH, PA. The Columbia theater in Erie, Pa., is reported to have burned down on May 14, sustaining a loss of about $75,000. The Columbia is one of the best houses in Erie, having been devoted to pictures exclusively for some years. The building was owned by A. P. Wechsler, who owns the Keith house in Erie, the Colonial. The theater was leased by the Columbia Theater Co., which controls the Majestic (a vaudeville house) and the Columbia in Erie, as well as the Columbia in Warren, Pa., also devoted to pictures. O. A. Potter, the directing manager of the theaters, made his headquarters at the Columbia in Erie. The theater, seating 1,300 people, showed Paramount-Artcraft pictures at 25 cents.

George Burry Building Theater.

The new theater spirit is hitting Pittsburgh hard of late probably because of the new Government ordnance plant costing $70,000,000 which has been definitely arranged for on Neville Island, Pittsburgh. The latest addition to the new theaters building at the present time in Pittsburgh proper is the site of the old Variety and Comique theaters on Beaver avenue, north side. The new theater is being built by George Burry, one of the old exhibitors in the district, having had the B. & B. theater for years. The B. & B. has been taken over by Mr. Michaels, of the United Business Association, and will be remodeled and called the "Variety." The new theater will have a seating capacity of about 1,200.

Theater Opens in Juniata.

The moving picture theater at Juniata, a suburb of Altoona, was opened Saturday, May 11, under the management of R. H. Detiviler, of Altoona. This theater was formerly controled by Silverman Bros., who have the Strand at Altoona. The new manager has made arrangements to remodel and decorate and make necessary installation changes.

Pittsburgh Trade Jottings.

Fred Herrington left Monday, May 13, for Indianapolis and St. Louis, and will return to Pittsburgh probably the end of the week.

Practically all of the local exchange managers have joined the local Chamber of Commerce, and one or two of the exhibitors in the city have done so.

The district manager for Pathe, Tom North, was in Pittsburgh, and while here spent considerable time looking over the situation with Manager Fuller.

M. H. Berman, of the New York Jewel office, together with Dan Lederman, assistant to General Manager Brandt, were here in the interests of Universal. They are making a tour of the exchanges, and Berman left shortly after arrival for Cincinnati. Mr. Berman is a Pittsburgh man, having been connected here in his first film capacity as salesman for the World Film in the old days.

Express Deliveries Are Still Slow.

Despite the improvement of the weather for transportation purposes the retrenchment in the railroad field, together with the unusually heavy war work, still keeps express and parcel post deliveries about 50 per cent. efficient for exhibitors and exchanges. The special delivery stamp on parcel post shipments seems to aid but little in improving the situation, as deliveries in small towns are not expedited to any extent by this extra cost. The messenger service in use locally is the one source of relief for the congestion, and it is the desire, if not the expectation, of exhibitors and exchangemen that the service be extended to cover much more territory if at all possible.

Minneapolis Convention Summarized

Recent Annual Meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest Reviewed—Things Done, Things Attempted.

By J. L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. It's all over, and the smoke has cleared away. We mean the seventh annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corp., of the Northwest. Nothing remains of the convention save memories and a little history. A little. The convention, as a business session, was what one might justly term (er) light. The exhibitors met, talked, shouted, demanded, and left things just about as they were. As a get-to-gether, get-acquainted proposition the last convention is head and shoulders above anything that has passed before. It is doubtful if so many exhibitors ever got so intimately acquainted with one another as at the last convention, and it is only fair to say that the exchangemen more than did their share in getting every exhibitor in closer touch with his neighbor.

The fact that the mind and the heart do not always work along the same lanes was very evident at the last convention and entertainments. With all due respect for the right and for some exhibitors' determination to make things right it must be said that a Missourian would likely grow impatient and gray awaiting developments of what was resolved on the convention floor. The exhibitors voted that the exchanges should buy Liberty Bonds with advance deposit moneys of their's; they voted that local exchange managers be given broader authority in the matter of accepting and rejecting contracts, and they did all sorts of planning for the exchanges (and we admit it might work out well, too), but we feel pretty safe in saying that it will likely be a cold day in Havana before the exchanges adopt the methods decided upon by the convention.

Judging from the convention proceedings the Northwest body has all of the ear marks of becoming a power in this territory if, after several years of internal uprisings, peace has finally been restored. The Northwest organization's members have proved that they have some splendid ideas, but not until the body is one strong unit instead of a collection of arguing factions are those good ideas going to be carried out.

Rumors that flew thick and fast previous to the convention gave one good reason to believe the convention would develop into a good verbal war, and, although it did, the issue so much discussed previous to convention time did not loom up strong on the convention floor. It was expected that the Northwest body would withdraw from the national league at the convention, but it did not, and did not voice any desire to do so. The election brought about a verbal storm, but not along the lines anticipated. The question of changing the by-laws won premier honors for debate and friction, and the less that is said of the results perhaps the better.

For a time it looked very much as though certain factions within the organization would bolt, but the "opposition," though disappointed in the election, remained loyal to the organization, and must be given credit for being good losers.

James G. Gilosky, president of the organization for three years, refused to accept any office whatsoever, thus giving the opposition a chance to run its ticket against unknown strength. The constitutionality of the election was questioned several times, but as the proceedings were carried on similarly to those heretofore the opposition let it go at that, and did not grumble about the outcome. The convention elected a board of directors from the "white ticket," with but one exception, Ralph Parker really being a "blue," because William Abrahamson, a "blue," refused to be nominated, and chose Mr. Parker as his nominee.

The elected board of directors and the number of votes received by each nominee follows: Ralph E. Parker, Duluth, 62; Billy B. Watson, Minneapolis, 46; Clyde H. Hitchcock, Minneapolis, 45; Joseph Friedman, St. Paul, 45; W. H. Deeth, Minneapolis, 44; D. W. Chamberlain, Mankato, Minn., 43; Fred H. Upham, Minneapolis, 42, and Daniel Eselin, Minneapolis, and Ellsworth Cameron, St. Paul, 40 each. Runners-up were Oliver Rowe, St. Paul, 38; J. R. Martin, H. H. Green, and Ed. F. Hinz with 30 each; W. A. Steffes with 31, and George Heesen with 32. Acting according to the original by-laws, which legal advice informed the convention could not be changed unless the charter in the possession of the secretary of the state was also changed, the board of directors met after the convention closed and selected William H. Deeth, American theater, Minneapolis, president; Ralph E. Parker, Sunbeam theater, Duluth, Minn., vice-president; re-elected Clyde H. Hitchcock, Princess theater, Minneapolis, secretary, and chose Daniel Eselin, formerly of the University theater, Minneapolis, treasurer.

The new officers have seemingly met with the approval of all interested in the organization. Mr. Deeth previously served as treasurer of the organization, and is well known because of his activities within the organization. Mr. Deeth is aggressive and a good parliamentarian. The same may be said of the other three officials. The Northwest body plans on sending a strong delegation to the Boston convention, and "under new management" promises to stir things up a bit.

A list of early arrivals to the convention was published in the World last week. A few of the later arrivals follows: George J. Ehlers, Worthington, Minn.; J. J. Isaacs, Grand Forks, N. D.; S. K. Leen, Jamestown, N. D.; J. R. Brown, Minneapolis; Roy E. Ramsell, Huron, S. D.; J. E. Sherwood, Madison, Wis.; Anton Gilles, Breckenridge, Minn.; J. M. Bergstrom, Jr., Minneapolis; G. M. Heesen, Osseo, Minn.; F. H. Smith, Menomonia, Wis.; M. A. Brown, Riceville, Iowa; H. B. Smooths, Little Falls, Minn.; J. G. Shonka, Hopkins, Minn.; F. V. Peterson, International Falls, Minn.; Charles G. Branham, Minneapolis; H. G. Billings, Minneapolis; J. A. Keough, Minneapolis; Mrs. M. E. Brinkman, Bemidji, Minn.; Oliver Whaley, Bemidji, Minn.; T. E. Hansing, Minneapolis; F. H. Dillon, Minneapolis; L. A. Haglund, Sewal City, Iowa; Mrs. Henrietta B. Starkey, Le Sueur, Minn.; C. G. Gates, Aberdeen, S. D.; E. G. Anderson, Aberdeen, S. D.; Joe Ryan, Madison, S. D.; L. C. Howden, St. Paul, Minn., and L. J. Roesner, Winona, Minn.

This year's convention brought more exhibitors from distant points than any ever held previously, representatives being present from several Iowa, South Dakota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, and New York points.

Extra Notes from Des Moines.

Madame Nazimova in the Metro, "Revelation," broke all attendance records on its opening at the Palace theater here. The picture played to big business during its week's run, and was pronounced one of the finest subjects of the season.

L. A. Sheridan, of Pathe, is making surrounding towns via automobile these fine spring days. He asserts that his experience proves that a manager should be able to be a good roadman when occasion demands.

Ezra Skirboll, of San Francisco, brother of Manager Billy Skirboll, of the local Metro office, was a Des Moines visitor a few days last week en route to the Coast.

Texas Airdomes Will Be Few This Season

Some Exhibitors Are Planning to Show Under the Sky Roof, but the Wise Ones Say "Lay Off"—Other Notes of Interest.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, TEX.—Rising temperatures and falling attendances as a prospective result, are engaging the attentions of Texas moving picture exhibitors at the moment. The fellow who runs a house where the cool breezes don't blow is wondering how an "airdome" in the great out-of-doors might work. But the experienced man in the Texas picture game would probably tell the fellow with such a thought to "lay off." It's a strange proposition, but the "airdome" idea doesn't work well in Texas. They are few and far between. What's the answer? The vagaries of Texas weather and the psychology—or rather the "morale" as a very clever Mutual Film advertisement in the World recently has it—of the moving picture patron, is the answer. The vagaries of the weather send up a threatening storm cloud along about show time some four evenings a week. The rain rarely comes, but the psychology of crowds works to the extent that people will not go to an open-air place in threatening weather. And there you are.

Some of the fellows may be thinking airdome, but the wise ones say "don't do it," and salesmen declare that the combination above referred to is making itself felt on their efforts. Outside of that, however, everything's all right, and the man with a place where there's fane and ice water—about all you can get in Texas now—is still doing business at the old stand.

Up-To-Date Idea in Peach Town.

Lindale is over in the heart of the peach country of East Texas. J. F. Jarman is an up-to-date resident thereof who has joined the ranks of exhibitors, and he doesn't care a rap about the storm clouds or rising temperatures. Regardless of the fact that his town hasn't an electric plant, he has electric fans and electric lights in the new Jarman theater, just opened. Mr. Jarman has installed a Power's 6-B and a Delco lighting system.

A Buy-Out and a Kick-Back.

"Bill" Lytle, of Lytle and Eppstein, San Antonio, purchased the interests of his partner, Mr. Eppstein, in the Princess theater, San Antonio; the Royal, San Antonio, and the Strand, at Laredo, for a price said to be a hundred-thousand, but the deal hasn't been closed—that is, it's all tied up. Mr. Lytle was interested in the Empire theater, San Antonio, with some other parties who, San Antonio reports declare, have applied for a receivership, and thus started litigation which may result in the bigger deal failing to go through. The thing at this writing is still in its primary stages, with moving picture people who know about it watching interestedly for final results.

W. S. Wessling Visits Dallas.

W. S. Wessling, Pathe district manager, with headquarters at Cincinnati, and Hoyt Ricketts, auditor, were visitors at the Dallas branch during the second week in May. With Local Manager H. W. Talbot there has been a general rearrangement of things, with a view to more general activities in the Texas territory. Mr. Talbot declares he's becoming acclimated to the "normal" Texas temperatures now prevailing, in good fashion.

J. J. Daugherty Answers Draft Call.

J. J. Daugherty, only recently put on the road for Vitagraph and who "made good," by the way—has responded to the draft call and gone to Camp Travis, San Antonio.

Patriotic Pictures Go Big in Dallas.

"My Four Years in Germany," at the Hippodrome, Dallas, proved about the biggest thing Dallas has seen during its first week's run ending May 11. It continued for another week. It did two thousand on May 11, and indications were for even better business during the subsequent run. Big publicity was secured through an essay competition on "Why America is in the war" among school pupils, who flocked to the theater before the results were announced.

The Vitagraph's "Over the Top" opened at the Jefferson on May 12 for a two weeks' run, with every indications for big business, notwithstanding the patriotic competition.

Arthur Lucas Back in Harness.

Arthur Lucas, district manager for Goldwyn, is back "on the job" after being laid up for a few days at Hot Springs.

J. E. Huey Loses His Wife.

The sympathy of every man on Dallas' row goes out to J. E. Huey, chief booking clerk with Vitagraph, Dallas, in the loss of his wife, who died May 9, after a brief illness.

Trade Notes from the Southwest.

Tulsa, Okla.—The new Majestic theater here, under construction for the last several months for McCarthy and Rothstein, is due to open during the first week in June. The theater is one of the handsomest in the state, if not really the handsomest, and is declared to have cost considerably more than the original estimate of $135,000. It will open with a new Goldwyn release.

Harry Hearne, for the last several months connected with the Hulsey managements at Dallas, is no longer with the well known Texas film man's endeavors. Mr. Hearne, who came here from Baltimore as manager for the Old Mill, has resigned. No announcement of a new connection has been made.

N. Lewis, manager Electric Palace, Tyler, Texas, passed through Dallas recently returning home from Mineral Wells. Mr. Lewis declares his health much benefited from his visit.

M. L. Levine, of the Grand, Corsicana, Texas, called on Dallas exchange people recently, and reported the outlook somewhat brighter. Mr. Levine's new house is adapted for summer shows, with a roof garden fully equipped against summer showers.

New Orleans Trade Letter

By N. E Thatcher, 2801 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

Diamond Theater Brightens.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The Diamond theater was reopened on May 12 with motion pictures consisting of a feature, a comedy made by the Diamond Film Company, and vaudeville acts. The theater has been entirely rejuvenated and put in excellent shape for the summer business, and it will make a bid for a division of the patronage of the Palace and Loew's Crescent, both of which have been doing capacity business at popular prices.

Liberty Theater Ready to Begin.

The Liberty theater, New Orleans, has been undergoing a rush toward completion, and the tentative date of May 28 has been fixed as the time for the formal opening. The program for this event is the most elaborate one ever arranged for a motion picture theater in the South. The initial feature production is Guy Empey's "Over the Top," and it is to have a most distinctive showing.

J. W. Pope, Jr., Heads Triangle Branch.

"Jack" Stewart, who has been the manager of the Triangle exchange in New Orleans for several months, has received notice of his transfer to another city—perhaps Cincinnati or Pittsburgh—and J. W. Pope, Jr., who has been with the Paramount in Detroit, has been placed in charge of the Triangle exchange here. Manager Pope has a wide acquaintance with film men in this territory, and he will no doubt keep the office up to the high standard maintained by Manager Stewart.

Fox "Cleopatra" Makes Record Run.

"Cleopatra," the William Fox superfeature, with Theda Bara as the star, has completed a two weeks' run at the Tulane theater, New Orleans, which is considered a remarkable accomplishment in this city. New Orleans is distinctively a short-run motion picture city. The people frankly denote their displeasure with mediocre pictures by staying away from them. Manager Tom Campbell, however, by strong newspaper advertising and by keeping the exhibition of "Cleopatra" out of the bally-ho running, was able to fill his theater at every showing of the picture at dollar prices, and the production closed stronger at the end of the run than when it commenced. And the print has gone begging at the regular motion picture theaters of New Orleans ever since its release.

Ernst Boehringer Back at Desk.

Ernst Boehringer, manager of the Boehringer Amusement Company, has recently undergone an operation which proved to be rather serious in its after effects, due probably to his too early exposure while looking over the work at the new Liberty theater. The report was current at one time that he was in a dangerous condition, but proved to be unfounded. He is now at his home and completely out of danger, and will by this printing be able to resume his activities.

Des Moines Trade Letter

By J. L. Shipley, 615 Locust St., Des Moines, Ia.

Patriotic Pictures Take First Place.

DES MOINES, IA.—Patriotic pictures held full sway last week with Des Moines' audiences. At the Berchel the Gerard picture, "My Four Years in Germany," played to big houses at 25 cents to $1.00, having been billed heavily and used large newspaper space. At the Royal the Vitagraph picture, Guy Empey's "Over the Top," attracted liberal patronage at 25 cents admission, while the new Rialto did well with the Kleine special, "The Unbeliever."

Louis Rosenfield to Have New House.

Louis Rosenfield, manager of the Temple Grand, at Creston, Ia., was a Des Moines visitor, and told of plans for a new theater under his management in Creston. He is to have a new house on the principal street of the town, and with 800 seats. Mr. Rosenfield will continue to operate the Temple Grand for road shows and big picture features at advanced admission, using the new house for program and other service.

Frank Hurst Gets Advance Job.

Frank Hurst, former manager of "The Birth of a Nation" during its long tour of Iowa, has been appointed advance representative of Co. B. of "My Four Years in Germany," which opens its season at Burlington, Ia. Harry Mitchnick, treasurer of the local Orpheum, will be back with this company.

Des Moines Rialto in Summer Dress.

E. Metzger, manager of the Rialto, is enjoying a two weeks' vacation, and Billy O'Hare, manager of the Majestic, is doing double duty at both houses during the time. Mr. O'Hare is getting cool summer atmosphere at the Majestic, covering the seats with tan slip-ons, replacing valour tapestries with khaki hangings, and attiring his girl ushers in attractive gray silk-mohair uniforms with soft white collars. The Majestic also has a new sign, which is one of the biggest in Des Moines. It has a clever arrangement which gives the effect of two reels of film running continuously. The center panel lifts out and permits the placing of the name and painting of the star of the current attraction. On each side of the sign a color wheel reflects and causes a constant shifting of lights on the advertising surface. The front of the house has been repainted entirely and new lobby fixtures put in place.

L. A. Crawford Assists at the Laemmle.

Manager Friedman, of the Laemmle office, announces the appointment of L. A. Crawford as assistant manager. Mr. Crawford has been with Universal for some time past as special road representative, and his long experience in the business should make him invaluable to Mr. Friedman as his right hand man.

Lorber and McIntyre Visit Des Moines.

Messrs. Herman Lorber and Robert McIntyre, traveling representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky offices, New York, spent several days last week with Manager R. C. Li Beau, of the Des Moines office. Mr. Lorber was suddenly called to New York to answer to the draft board, Mr. McIntyre remaining for a few days to work out the details of the new booking and accounting systems which are being installed in the Paramount offices.

Exhibitors Registered at Des Moines.

Visitors at local exchanges during the week included George Vanteicher, of the Royal theater, Carroll; Ed. Awe, of the Strand, Fort Dodge; J. Jolly Jones, of the Strand, Marshalltown; John Kock, of the Orpheum, Oskaloosa; J. A. Price, of the Empress, Indianola; Harry DeBaggio, of the Star, Colfax, and Pete Lemen, of the Rialto, Newton.

Notes of Interest From Des Moines.

Norman Samish, manager of the A-Muse-U and Family theater at Clinton, announces that both houses will be redecorated during the summer and reseated throughout. Mr. Samish is planning several innovations, which will include a new ventilating system at the Family.

Jesse J. Goldburg stopped in Des Moines one day recently for a conference with A. H. Blank. Mr. Goldburg was two days behind his schedule on a tour to the Pacific Coast.

Manager Arrested for Running Sunday Show.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—W. H. Wassman, manager of the Nashville Knickerbocker, was arrested a few days ago for operating his moving picture house on Sunday. Although no admission was charged, it was alleged that ushers were instructed to tell the people who entered that contributions could be made, if desired, and that such action was a violation of the Sunday closing laws in Nashville. Wassman gave bond and asked postponement of the trial, which was granted.

Interesting developments are expected when the case is tried, for the feeling in Nashville is high in favor of Sunday moving pictures, and it seems that this is one town where the pictures would be permitted if submitted to a vote of the people.

Nothing But Pictures in Nashville.

The week of May 12 in Nashville marked an "all-picture week" in local showhouses. Every playhouse in town in the uptown district with the exception of the Orpheum was open, and every house, both legitimate and picture, showed moving pictures. At the Vendome, the largest house showing road shows, Arthur Guy Empey's "Over the Top" held the boards the entire week at prices of 30 cents for any seat, including war tax.

At the Knickerbocker Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" played to splendid houses during the week, with full orchestral accompaniment, prices running from 25 cents to $1.

With other houses all in full blast, it was truly a gala week in picturedom.

Kansas City Film Corporation Grows Bigger

By a $12,000 Deal It Takes over the Foursquare Branch and Also the Business of United States Exhibitors Booking—May Get More.

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Within the last few days a twelve thousand dollar deal has been negotiated whereby the Standard Film Corporation, of Kansas City, has taken over the Kansas City Hoffman Foursquare office and the Kansas City office of the United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation. The transaction was handled by Jerry Abrams, of the New York Foursquare office; Phil Ryan, general manager, and F. J. Warren, treasurer of the Standard. This brings the pictures, "The Eagle's Eye," "The Belgian," "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay," and many others to be released by the Kansas City Standard office. There are also a number of travel pictures involved in the deal. The Standard Film Corporation is also negotiating for the transfer of several other offices in this territory. The local Standard office is in the Boley building on the fourth floor, sharing that floor with the Vitagraph Company. It is now undoubtedly the largest independent exchange in the city.

Bell Engages a Secretary.

Miss Berenice Brown has been made secretary to W. H. Bell, head of the newly organized Camp Bell Company. She had formerly held a similar position with the Kansas City Hoffman Foursquare office.

A. A. Bourg Joins Universal.

A. A. Bourg, formerly a salesman for the Kansas City Vitagraph office, has been added to the sales force of the Kansas City office of the Universal Film and Supply Company.

L. E. Trainer Gets New Territory.

L. E. Trainer has been given a territory in western Missouri and in eastern Kansas with the Camp Bell Company. He was lately with the Kansas City Hoffman office. On his first trip over his territory he will concentrate on Billy West comedies.

Celluloid Pushers Meet.

The Kansas City Celluloid Pushers, an organization of Kansas City film salesmen, held their first meeting since the organization of the body at the Kupper Hotel, Kansas City, the evening of May 11, at which meeting there were about twenty present. This meeting was attended by several of the managers of the local exchanges, as well as by several others interested in local exchanges although not directly engaged in selling pictures. There was a banquet following the meeting.

Sloan Wilson Will Now Go to Sea.

Sloan Wilson, formerly shipping clerk for the Kansas City Kleine office, has enlisted in the navy. He had held this position for over a year and a half. He is succeeded by Harry Cameron, who was formerly shipping clerk at the Kansas City Feature Film Company.

Miss Locy with Mutual Office.

Miss Freddie Locy, formerly billing clerk at the Local Keine office, is now occupying a similar position with the Kansas City Mutual office.

Robertson May Soon Have New Job.

Howard Robertson, Goldwyn salesman, is another of the Kansas City film men to be called to the colors. However, it is not likely that he will have to leave the city before fall, although for a while it was thought that he would have to report May 26 at Camp Funston, Kansas. He has been with the local Goldwyn office since its opening, coming here from the Pacific Coast. Before going West he was a salesman for the Kansas City World Film Corporation office. It is certain that when he does get into service the new National Army will become very familiar with the attractiveness of Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh, Mary Garden, Mabel Normand and other Goldwyn stars, for Mr. Robertson lives as well as sells Goldwyn pictures.

Among Kansas Exhibitors.

Yates Center, Kan.—The Star theater, of this city, is now under the management of A. W. Crosby.

Coffeyville, Kan.—A new theater, the Tackett, is being erected at the corner of Eighth and Maple streets.

Parsons, Kan.—After being closed for some time while repairing and remodeling was being done the Elks theater is to be opened to the public in the near future. The owner of the building, S. D. Newton, has leased the opera house to Manager Bray, of the Blub theater at Joplin.

Tipton, Kan.—John Ritter has opened his picture show in the New theater.

Fort Scott, Kan.—Thomas M. Henneberry and J. R. Everett, of Paola, who recently bought the Pictureland, will make some improvements in the theater.

Newton, Kan.—Mr. Harson, of Wichita, has purchased the Pearl theater. It will be enlarged so as to seat 400 people.

Concordia, Kan.—F. F. Davis & Co., owners of the White Way theater, have purchased the Iris theater from Geo. Beach.

Girard, Kan.—The Bluebird theater has been sold to Howard C. Collins, of Salina, Kansas, who has taken charge.

Abilene, Kan.—The Gem theater, recently damaged by fire, will be reopened as soon as the new equipment can be secured.

Concordia, Kan.—F. F. Davis & Company have taken over the Iris. This is the same company which operates the White Way.

Eldorado, Kan.—Parton & Everton will erect a theater here with two stories and basement of brick and stone to cost $10,000.

Theater Notes from Oklahoma.

Billings, Okla.—S. C. Crail has purchased lots a block north of Main street, and will construct a large theater building.

Duncan, Okla.—The new airdome will be opened immediately.

Sulphur, Okla.—The new Ramona theater is ready to be opened to the public. This was formerly the Palace.

Duncan, Okla.—Frank Miller, theater manager at Marlow, has closed a deal with the Pastime theater, and will begin remodeling at once.

Duncan, Okla.—Burns & McDaniel, proprietors of the Bungalow theater, will erect a commodious airdome on West Main street.

Pawnee, Okla.—Geo. Toler, of the Toler & Clark Dairy, are here looking for a location for putting in a picture show in connection with the Dairy.

Scattered Theater Notes.

Kirksville, Mo.—The Gem theater has installed two new machines, and are again open for business.

Jackson, Mo.—The present manager of the Gem theater will move to Charleston, and Joe Williams, of this city, will conduct the Gem until other arrangements can be made.

Sheffield, Ia.—A. C. Finch has leased the Star theater to Henry and Edwin Timmerman.

Hermleigh, Texas.—A picture show was destroyed in the big fire here May 1.

Snyder, Tex.—The Cozy theater under the new management has leased the building they now occupy for two years.

Rockport, Texas.—The new managers of the Opera House have added a new picture machine to their equipment.

Beaumont, Tex.—A new airdome theater of brick, tile and concrete will be erected on Front street.

Patriotic Films Enjoying Extended Runs

Many of the New National Interest Features Come for Definite Times and Stay Longer with Continued Popularity—Some Splendid Records.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Moving pictures of a patriotic order are much in demand at the present time and some of those now being offered are meeting with phenomenal success. "My Four Years in Germany," recently shown at the Tivoli theater for one week, doubling former records for receipts, has been brought back for a two-week run and has been booked for the entire T. & D. circuit at the highest prices ever charged by this concern. The T. & D. theater at Sacramento is closed for repairs, but the owners of this house have rented the Strand and the film will be shown there for a full week, under the direction of A. M. Bowles.

Great success is being met with in booking "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," and the success attained at the Strand in this city is being duplicated in the smaller communities. M. E. Cory, of the Jewel productions, recently completed a fourteen-day trip by automobile through the Coast territory, the Sacramento Valley field, the mining district of the Sierras and the San Joaquin valley, booking this feature into every town visited, with the exception of three.

"The Unbeliever" has also been going over with a bang wherever shown, and its success as a money geter is illustrated by the manner in which engagements have been extended. The original booking for one week in San Francisco was changed to a two-week run; the four-day booking for Oakland developed into an eleven-day run; the Berkeley booking was for three days, but the film was shown for two days more; the showing at Alameda was extended from two days to four, while the houses at Fresno, Sacramento, Stockton and San Jose, which booked it for four days, finally wound up with a full week each.

The Government films, booked through the film division of the State Council of Defense, are also in big demand and are proving to be distinct drawing cards, the anonuncement that they are official Government productions appealing to many. The six-reel feature, "The Re-making of a Nation," which was recently shown with so much success at the Casino theater of this city, is booking well out of town and Government officials express a desire that it be as widely distributed as possible. Special slides and advertising matter have been prepared for this production to assist in its drawing powers.

Louis S. Levin Visits City.

Louis S. Levin, an executive of the Fox Film Corporation, was a recent visitor in San Francisco from New York, this being his first visit to the Pacific Coast exchanges. He stated that he found the branches in this territory in excellent shape, with business conditions satisfactory. Local moving picture theaters compare with the best in the United States, he declared, and he found exhibitors using the most advanced business methods. The local Fox exchange, which occupies an entire building built to meet its special requirements, came in for much favorable comment. After a short stay here Mr. Levin resumed his tour of inspection, going to Los Angeles.

Universal Representative Visits.

Arthur S. Dowd, general sales representative of the Universal, spent several days recently at the San Francisco office of the California Film Exchange introducing new ideas in salesmanship and incidently getting some new ideas to be passed on to other exchanges. One of the most interesting of the new departures inaugurated by him has been the installation of a publicity department designed to assist exhibitors in making the most of the Universal releases booked by them. This department has been placed in charge of Edward Lansing Cowles, formerly associate editor of Photoplay Art, Los Angeles, and is to be a permanent institution. Mr. Dowd will return shortly to Los Angeles, but will visit San Francisco again on his way to the Northwest.

Peerless Buys Many Chaplins.

The Peerless Film Service, 100 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, has bought twenty-five sigle-reel and seven two-reel Chaplin re-issues, and has booked these to the Portola theater for first run in this city. E. H. Emmick, head of this concern, is preparing to leave shortly on a trip by automobile through the territory north of here.

Drummond Goes to Seattle.

W. J. Drummond, formerly manager of the San Francisco Mutual Exchange, but more recently with the George Kleine System, has been promoted to the position of manager of the Seattle Kleine office and has left for the north.

Empire Theater Changes Hands.

The old Empire theater, on Market street, which was recently closed by the exhibitors who conducted it for many years, has been taken over by A. Goldberg, who conducts the Peerless theater on Third street. Remodeling and renovating work is now under way and several thousand dollars will be expended before the house is reopened.

Sol Lesser on Eastern Trip.

Sol L. Lesser has left for New York on business connected with the State Rights Distributors and expects to return with several large productions of merit.

Edward Benedict Returns.

Edward Benedict, who filled a limited engagement as organist at the California theater earlier in the year, has returned to San Francisco for an indefinite stay and is delighting audiences at this house with his art.

Douglas Color Films Shown.

Leon F. Douglas, whose work in color photography has attracted much attention of late, recently showed his first complete moving picture in natural colors before a gathering of invited guests at Elks' Hall, San Rafael, about five hundred being present. The picture is entitled "Cupid Angling," and the scenes are in Marin County.

San Francisco Brevities.

The Strand theater has booked the first Chaplin release, "A Dog's Life," for two additional weeks, planning to make a run of a full month.

The California Film exchange has purchased an automobile for the use of its salesmen and J. H. Goldberg, manager of the Bluebird division, is making a trip through the San Joaquin valley.

George Mann, Western representative of Fox, paid the local branch a visit recently.

William Citron, who has had charge of the local Fox exchange since this branch was opened, will leave for New York shortly to attend the annual meeting of branch managers.

The York theater has been reopened by M. Seager, a feature of the opening program being a Sunshine Comedy.

Peter Boyle is now filling the position of business agent for the local operators' union.

The Strand theater, San Francisco, has booked the Jester Comedies released through the Western Feature Film Company.

P. E. Clinckert, assistant cashier at the San Francisco Pathe branch, has been promoted to the position of cashier at the Dallas, Tex., office.

Harry Lustig, division manager for the Metro Pictures Corporation, paid the San Francisco office a visit early in May.

W. O. Edmunds, of the Majestic theater, Reno, breezed into San Francisco recently to arrange his bookings and to see friends on Film Row.

J. Schaeffer, assistant manager at the Pathe office at Dallas, Tex., is in training at a local cantonment.

Jack Harrison, a brother of Marcia Manon, and formerly a scenic decorator for Triangle at Los Angeles, has returned to that city after having held a position in the shipping department of the Progressive exchange, San Francisco, for some time.

Northern California Jottings.

Lodi, Cal.—Work is under way on a new theater to be conducted by A. A. Richards.

Benecia, Cal.—W. B. Crooks, of the Orpheum theater, has joined the colors.

Martinez, Cal.—The Royal theater has been closed for the summer by H. E. Case.

Stockton, Cal.—The Empire theater is being operated Saturdays and Sundays only during the summer months.

The Yosemite theater is being remodeled and will be reopened in September.

Portland Censors Arrest on Technicality

Exhibitor Draws Heavy Fine for Technical Violation of Pre-Publicity Inspection Law—Trade in the Northwest.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Leon Sax, manager of the Princess theater, Sixth and Burnside streets, was fined $50 in the municipal court for exhibiting a film without a permit. Whether the film which was the cause of Mr. Sax's arrest was one which should be run in the city of Portland or not was not in issue; his offense was that he did not have the permit.

Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the censor board, at whose direction the arrest was made, said the board was back of her in the matter, and that she was acting upon their instructions to inforce the ordinance, numerous violations of which had been reported.

F. P. Wittenberg also came into the toils of the law for showing a picture from which, it was alleged, the eliminations had not been made. The trouble in Wittenberg's case was said to be due to a Seattle film company furnishing a print to its local office that had been used in Seattle territory in place of the expurgated print that had been prepared for Portland.

New Select Manager Visits.

Hugh B. Dobbs, the new manager for Select, with headquarters in Seattle, was a recent visitor, accompanying Jack Woody, former manager, and whose promotion made the office vacant, on the first leg of his trip to New York. Mr. Dobbs was former road man for Select, and is one of the most genial and best known film men in the Oregon territory.

The Brooklyn Theater Sold.

F. P. Wittenberg, now owner of the Grant theater in South Portland, has purchased the Brooklyn on the east side, and will make a few alterations immediately. Mr. Wittenberg has been a successful exhibitor in his territory, and the Brooklyn should go big under his management.

Herman Brown Progresses.

Reports from Boise are that Herman Brown has joined the United Theaters Circuit, and thereby road men indicated that Brown had gone on "the war path," whatever that means. Inasmuch as he controls the situation in Boise his new move will put some film companies to looking for a new spot to put their product.

Herman Brown is one of the most progressive exhibitors in this territory, as is shown by the class of pictures he runs. Recently in three successive days he played "Carmen of the Klondike," "Kaiser, the Beast," and "Tarzan of the Apes."

With the Oregon Road Men.

E. B. Howe, traveling auditor for Universal, was a recent visitor in Portland en route to San Francisco. Mrs. Howe, who has been ill in Denver, will join her husband in the Bay City.

H. C. Arthur, Portland manager for De Luxe, is back from a trip through Washington and Montana, and reports "Carmen of the Klondike" booking well.

Sol Baum and Beverly Griffith, of Universal, are back from Seattle with glowing reports of business conditions.

Ben ("Scar Top") Collier, formerly proprietor of the Superba theater, Los Angeles, is working the Northwest territory, with headquarters in Butte, for Paramount-Artcraft.

Short Film Row Notes.

McMinnville, Ore.—The Star theater, M. F. Morris, is installing new equipment furnished by the Service Film Company, of Portland.

Burley, Idaho.—S. J. Osika, Burley theater, is going into road shows in connection with pictures.

Gooding, Idaho.—A new theater is being constructed here by A. J. Schubert.

Spokane Trade Letter

Pictures That Drew Well.

SPOKANE, WASH. — Moving picture houses of Spokane have been drawing capacity audiences in many instances recently due to having excellent bookings which appeal to the Spokane moving picture fans.

During the week starting with the shows Sunday, May 5, packed houses, with the waiting line extending out into the street, greeted the presentation of Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" at the Liberty. This waiting line continued from the first show until the last one started at night, and those finding no opportunity to get inside left. There were large crowds the three days following.

Mae Marsh drew well at the Clemmer during the same time in "A Face in the Dark"; Mary Miles Minter was a good drawing card at the Class A in "A Bit of Jade"; Nazimova played to good sized audiences at the Casino in "The Revelation," and Billie Burke in "The Mysterious Miss Terry" was the leader at the Lyric.

The Casino presented "Eyes of the World" the latter part of the week, and Ann Pennington, a Spokane girl, was witnessed in "Sunshine Nan" by many of her friends at the Clemmer.

E. P. Coffey Gets Divorce.

E. P. Coffey, assistant manager of the Stilwell theaters, obtained a divorce from Goldie Coffey, his wife, through Judge Hugo Oswald. He told the judge that his wife had deserted him, and was "doing a shredded wheat dance" with a Hawaiian troup.

SEATTLE NOTES.

He Ought to Be Good at It.

R. C. Montgomery, for several years a film salesman on the Pacific Coast, the last two of which he spent in the Northwest territory, is now devoting his time to the promotion of the sale of whale meat. He expects to give a banquet soon at the Hotel Washington where only whale steak will be served for the meat course. Mr. Montgomery will eventually extend his operations throughout the Northwest.

Born Into Film Circles.

C. O. Winrick, the popular accountant in the Seattle Goldwyn office, called up C. F. Hill, the Goldwyn manager, the other day and informed that he would have to look to his laurels, as he had just become father to a seven-pound baby boy who already had his eyes on Mr. Hill's job.

Orpheum Finds that Film Shows Pay Well

Lets Vaudeville Walk the Streets for a Week While the "Kaiser" Film Keeps the Great House Filled at Good Prices—May Turn to Pictures.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—The Orpheum theater, built for Orpheum Circuit vaudeville and leased last year by Eugene Levy for the Seattle home of his own vaudeville circuit and a combined bill of feature photoplays, was used recently for the first time for showing pictures exclusively. This is one of the finest and most beautiful theaters in Seattle, and Mr. Levy has heretofore withstood all urging when film managers came to him with their super-features; but when he was offered the Universal production, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," and was assured that he could make enough on the picture to pay the vaudeville acts booked for that week to walk the streets and make a good profit besides, he consented to put it on as an experiment. The result was so encouraging that Mr. Levy is now seriously thinking of turning his house into a motion picture theater and eliminating vaudeville altogether. The success of this picture in a legitimate house is the more remarkable because of the stiff competition of the regular motion picture theaters of that week, when the regular 20-cent admission price was being asked, while the prices at the Orpheum were raised to 30 cents and 50 cents.

If the Orpheum does enter the motion picture field exclusively, it will make Seattle the finest "theatered" city of its size in the country, even if it has not already gained that position. It is indeed doubtful if any city save New York will surpass it in the number of houses that can truly be called motion picture palaces.

Walter Porges Goes Back to New York.

Walter Porges is leaving Seattle this week for his home in New York. Mr. Porges has been chief booker and office manager of the Seattle Select office for the past year, during which he made many friends among both exhibitors and exchange men. He will continue in the film business in New York.

Mark Goldman Was Once a Youngster.

Mark Goldman, who is the Northwest manager of Bee Hive exchanges, has a novel advertising stunt that he is using to popularize his Billy West comedies. He is organizing in every city clubs for boys that are called the Billy-West-I-Am-Your-Pal Club. The boys all receive badges that have on them a picture of Billy West and reads that the bearer is a member of the club.

Dobbs Made Select Branch Manager.

Hugh B. Dobbs, Select salesman, has made a remarkable record since joining ranks with Mr. Woody (recently made field manager, as noted in this paper last week), and has been promoted to the rank of branch manager of the Seattle office. Mr. Dobbs' success as a film executive is assured, both because of his popularity among the entire trade of the Northwest and because of his previous executive experience as district manager of the Remington Typewriter Company. He has a very magnetic personality which has gained friends for him wherever he went.

Mr. Dobbs has announced the appointment of J. P. Perry to the Seattle Select sales staff. Mr. Perry is one of those decidedly out-of-the-ordinary fellows with a great deal of experience in the distributing end of the business, but he has a big personality coupled with an aggressive disposition. He has not had a knowledge of the production, and, considering his sales record in the automobile tire business, he is going to make good and go up.

Is Building Two Alaska Theaters.

Mrs. Rose Johnson, who has been in the motion picture business in Alaska for several years, is building two new houses, one in Valdez and one in Chitna. She left for Alaska this week with two new outfits for her theaters. Besides operating several motion picture theaters and producing some pictures, Mrs. Johnson has just secured the contract from the Government to carry the mail over the Fairbanks-Chitna route. She will use an automobile during this summer, but next fall she plans to carry the mail by airplane.

Several Managerial Changes Noted.

Several shiftings are being made this month in the managerial offices of the various houses of the Greater Theaters Company.

F. A. Tate, who has been manager of the Coliseum since C. S. Jensen went to open the new Rialto in Butte, resigned to take a position in the film business in Los Angeles.

Frank Steffy, for the past year manager of the George Kleine exchange in Seattle, is the new manager of the Coliseum.

C. S. Jensen has come from Butte to Portland to take charge of the Columbia.

Ralph Ruffner, who has been managing the Columbia for the past six months, took Mr. Jensen's place at the Rialto.

Carl Stern Is Metro Seattle Head.

Harry Lustig, special representative for Metro, before he left Seattle recently on a tour of all his offices, announced the appointment of Carl Stern to the managership of the Seattle office. Mr. Stern had been salesman out of this office for the past few months, and previous to that had been manager of the Pathe exchange in Denver and of the George Kleine Seattle office. He has been in the film business on the coast for the last eight years and is known and liked by exhibitors in every state in the far West. He has the reputation for fair, conscientious dealing, so Metro exhibitors in the territory will be glad to welcome him to the managerial post.

"THE MATING OF MARCELLA"

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

JOSEPH FRANKLIN POLAND is the author of "The Mating of Marcella," a five-part Paramount picture produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince and directed by R. William Neill. The story has some novel angles, and is put together so that the interest is well sustained. A faithless wife and her desire to go to Reno and obtain a divorce and to go on a yachting trip with her lover at the same time permits the heroine of the story to fall heir to a rich husband and to be transformed from a modiste's model to a lady of position in the fashionable world.

Marcella Duranzo, the part played by Dorothy Dalton, the star of the cast, is a Spanish girl who is sent to the home of Robert Underwood with some new frocks, and attracts the attention of Lois Underwood, his wife. Lois is in love with Count Louis Le Favri, and has agreed to get a divorce from her husband. Having her choice between a trip to Reno and a yachting tour with the count she prevails upon Marcella to go to Reno in her place and pose as Mrs. Underwood. The husband goes to Reno himself with his little son. The boy is taken ill, and Marcella helps to nurse him back to health. Underwood had met the girl in New York, and is surprised when he learns that she is known in the hotel as his wife. The real Mrs. Underwood discovers that Marcella spent the night at the bedside of the child in company with her husband, and names her as co-respondent in her divorce suit. She then quarrels with the count, and he ends her life when she tries to throw him over. Underwood and Marcella are married later on.

"THE GOLDEN GOAL."

A Fine Picture and a Real Feature Is Vitagraph Blue Ribbon.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE truth to human nature in the central character of "The Golden Goal," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, will give the picture a powerful appeal to the cultured and to the spectator in the rough. The opening situation is not pleasant, though it convinces. The development carries a rough but strong-willed man through episodes dramatically convincing to a knowledge that his own humanity is the only golden goal worth attaining.

Harry Morey plays the chief character of the picture with much understanding and artistic ability. Rough tramp of the seas, he is ignorant and uncouth; but is toyed with by a rich girl who gets him a job on her father's country place. This girl, the Delilah type, is played by Florence Deshon, who supplied the marked physical attraction necessary to make us comprehend her influence on the man. The reaction between these two runs all through the story and is as freshly interesting as is life itself. The third woman, the girl who becomes the intellectually growing man's good angel, is played without art, but in any case it would have been merely a propping part and to keep the character from competing with the other woman would have been its chief artistic aim. This is perfectly accomplished.

The man leaves his first job as the rich man's gardener to make much money so that he may become the "equal" of the girl. He drifts to a shipbuilding company, where the stenographer starts him on the path to an education by teaching him arithmetic. He becomes the labor leader. The other girl again enters the action when her father tries to gain control of the shipbuilding plant. He learns of the man's position and has his daughter invite him to the house as an "equal" in order to get him to call a strike and ruin the company so that he can step in. The daughter gladly acquiesces. He listens to the tempting offer; takes the money; calls a strike, and only at the last minute and with the help of the stenographer wakes up to the self-disgust his action makes him liable to. That the attraction is the woman and not merely money is kept clear and convincing. This is the picture's big thing.

Both Lawrence McCloskey, the author, and Paul Scardon, the director, deserve much credit for this picture. It is both written and directed with wisdom and dramatic ability.

"THE WINNING OF BEATRICE"

Five-Part Metro Comedy-Drama with May Allison and Hale Hamilton.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SPIRITED comedy acting by May Allison and Hale Hamilton go a long way in carrying "The Winning of Beatrice" on the road to success. Adapted by June Mathis and Katharine Kavanaugh from a story by May Tully, this five-part Metro comedy-drama is much more convincing with its comedy than with its drama. The plot follows along familiar lines, but Harry L. Franklin, the director, has not neglected any of his opportunities, and the picture will create a favorable impression with many patrons of the screen.

John Maddox and his son are the villains of the story. The elder Maddox forces Henry Jenkins to steal a note for a large sum from James Buckley, the father of the heroine. Buckley is killed in the struggle, and every one thinks he has committed suicide. The loss of the note bankrupts the Buckley estate, and Beatrice has to earn her own living. The younger Maddox has been engaged to Beatrice, but he promptly throws her over when he learns that she is penniless. The heroine is a candymaking expert. She goes into the business, and Robert Howard, a live wire advertising man, starts in to get orders and to make love to his boss.

Prosperity becomes a side partner in the firm, and Maddox, who is in the same line of business, trys to start a strike in the factory. Jenkins is put on the job, but he goes over to the enemy and reveals the truth about the note. James Buckley's name is cleared, Maddox is forced to pay full price for the rival concern, and Howard wins Beatrice.

Aside from the breezy work of May Allison and Hale Hamilton, Frank Currier, Stephen Grattan, John Davidson, Peggy Parr, Rean Raymond, Frank Joyner, and Baby Ivy Ward contributed satisfactory impersonations. Arthur Martinell was the cameraman.

"TOYS OF FATE"

Seven-Part Metro Screen Romance Shows Nazimova in Strong Dual Role.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE necessity for making "Toys of Fate" a seven-part feature has forced June Mathis, the author, to stretch her story to the limit. This Screen Classic, produced by Metro, successfully answers its purpose of providing Nazimova with her full share of forceful acting. The construction and direction of "Toys of Fate" fall considerably below the high level reached in "Revelation," but the star dominates the picture with her graphic personality and illuminating art, and is supported by an excellent body of actors in the other roles. A tendency to move too quickly is the only blemish on Nazimova's performance. George D. Baker, the director of the picture, has worked out most of the business cleverly, but many of the backgrounds in the long shots are too full of moving figures.

Nazimova plays two gypsy women, mother and daughter. In the prologue, Hagar, the wife of Pharos, a gypsy chief, deserts her husband and child for Bruce Griswold, a wealthy man, who soon tires of her. Hagar kills herself. When Azah, her daughter, grows to young womanhood her father's tribe camp on the Southern estate of the man who deserted her mother. Griswold becomes infatuated with the girl, and has her educated, after promising to make her his wife. The story is further complicated by having Azah in love with Henry Livingstone, a young lawyer, with whom Griswold's daughter, Blanche, is infatuated. Livingstone really cares for Azah, but Blanche traps him into proposing to her.

The Gypsy girl, believing she has lost Livingstone, forces Griswold to keep his promise and marry her. Later she is accused of his murder, and is defended by Livingstone. The couple are finally married, Azah's father having a hand in all that happens, and being anxious to revenge himself on Griswold.

Charles Bryant, Frank Currier, Irving Cummings, Dodson Mitchell, Edward J. Connelly, and Nila Mac form the support. Photographed by Eugene Gaudio.

"SOCIAL BRIARS"

American Subject Features Mary Miles Minter in Moderately Entertaining Story.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE five-reel production, "Social Briars," made at the American studios and released on the Mutual program May 13 is not strongly entertaining for the reason that the chief essentials of the drama do not make themselves felt as vigorously as they should. The opening scenes of the picture, which take place in a village Sunday school, are very amusing, and had the entire production been developed with the same fascinating quality as these first few scenes wherein the human side of the rural Sunday school scholar is excellently depicted, "Social Briars" would have been a winner. As it is it is neither very good nor very bad, but just mildly entertaining.

As the story runs an orphan girl who has been given a good home but no love grows tired of the village with the little it has to offer and tries her luck in the city. She accidentally falls into a position as soloist in a church choir, and later becomes the star of a musical comedy. During this period she meets again a young man, son of a prominent member of the church who had offered her a ride in his automobile on her way to the city, and who has also insulted her, and the two fall in love wth each other. Because of his entering her dressing room in a drunken state the girl severs her connections with him, and goes back to her native village, where he meets her again after he has decided to work for a living as a traveling salesman for his father's business. Here the romance comes to a climax, and the two become bethrothed.

"A DAUGHTER OF THE WEST"

Pathe-Diando Subject Features Baby Marie in Story of East and West.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS number, directed by William Bertram, contains an enjoyable series of events which bring out a strong child interest in the opening reels. Later, while the juveniles still hold the scene at times, their work is largely superseded by some exciting melodramatic occurrences. The first of the story is pictured in the East and the latter part in the far West.

Baby Marie Osborne appears as June, daughter of Ralph and Stella Gordon, the parents being portrayed by Frank Whitson and Marion Warren. June has a little colored boy playmate who remains in the production throughout adding much of the comedy; he is very laughable at times. Ralph and Stella Gordon are mismated, the wife being shallow and discontented. She is tired of her husband, who is older than she, and finally goes to the beach, where she has a flirtation with Allan Standish.

Ralph Gordon catches his wife making love to Standish and casts her off, he, himself, taking June with him on a trip West. Gordon had formerly lived in the mining town of Hell's Gulch, and is elected sheriff soon after his reappearance. There are some pleasing comedy scenes here, but the later events have to do with the sheriff's battles with a gang of outlaws and the reappearance of Standish. The story gives evidence of some padding toward the close, but is one that will hold the interest. There is a love story in which June's governess and her father figure, as well as Standish, who had deserted June's mother just prior to the latter's death.

TWO FOX COMIC OFFERINGS

"Fisherless Cartoon" Will Compel Laughter and "A Neighbor's Keyhole" Is Funny.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE new Fisherless cartoon, released by the Fox Film Corporation, is one of the best Mutt and Jeff comics in some time. We see Lieutenant Fisher at work on a picture with Jeff still unfinished. The telephone rings and the soldier is called to arms, leaving poor Jeff with only a leg to stand on. Mutt rises to the occasion and supplies the missing member and then orders poor Jeff to draw the thousands of pictures needed to complete the story which Mutt has written. The "grinds" on the motion picture business are fresh and good. They are such as will be readily understood by everybody, and the picture, written by Mutt and finished, even to the photography by Jeff, is a sure winner.

"A Neighbor's Keyhole."

The Sunshine comedy, "A Neighbor's Keyhole," by the Fox Film Corporation, is all kinds of a comic and is surely uproarious. The wealth of incident makes it impossible to describe it in detail. One of its characters, Mr. Adam Sapple, has a throat that goes up and down, up and down, whenever he drinks. He and another character are saving a bottle together, and the other wise guy gets a pretty bell to hang around the throat so that when he hears a tinkle, tinkle, he knows what's up and what's going down. There are rivals for the hand of the heroine, school girls in bathing a la Coronado Beach, cops, crazy automobiles, and other wheels of many kinds, an indomitable swan and a most pugnacious ram. It is to laugh all right and that's all one needs to say about one of these fertilly invented Sunshine comedies. It doesn't skimp in anything.

"ROSE O' PARADISE"

Bessie Barriscale in Fair Paralta Picture Written by Grace Miller White.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ANOTHER of the simple girlish heroines that Grace Miller White is so fond of creating heads the list of characters in "Rose o' Paradise," a six-part Paralta, with Bessie Barriscale in the title role. The picture was directed by James Young and photographed by Clyde De Vinna. The author of "Tess of the Storm Country" lays the scene of this story in the South, and Virginia Singleton, the young heroine, finds her path in life beset with enemies, chief of which is her father's brother.

The girl's mother dies in childbirth, and her father goes insane from grief. The mother's fortune is left to Virginia, and her uncle is appointed guardian. When Virginia is sixteen her father recovers his reason, escapes from the asylum where his brother has had him confined, and returns home. His daughter is in the care of an old colored mammy. Fearing that his brother will injure the girl he sends Virginia to live with a lame shoemaker who was once his gardener. The shoemaker lives in Paradise Row, and is very poor. Virginia grows up in an atmosphere of kindly poverty and deep affection. At the proper time the wealthy young man appears on the scene, and the girl eventually becomes his wife.

Melodramatic interest is injected into the last two reels of the picture by having the wicked uncle commit murder and a tough character named Bates attempting to assault Virginia. Bessie Barriscale plays the heroine cleverly, and Howard Hickman, David M. Hartford, Norman Kerry, Edythe Chapman, William Dehmar, Lucille Young, and Arthur Allardt round out a competent cast.

"THE OLDEST LAW"

World-Picture Features June Elvidge as a Country Girl in Metropolis.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS subject is unusually pleasing in certain respects, and quite disappointing in others. It makes a welcome departure from the familiar story of the country girl who comes to the city to earn her living, so far as her experiences are concerned, but there is a certain lack of plausibility in some of the action which weakens the plot. A touch of the sordid in a number of instances is also a bad feature. The film might be reedited to decided advantage and converted into a strong subject. As it stands certain episodes lack balance and conviction.

June Elvidge makes a strong figure as Jennie Cox, though the character is loosely developed, and her step from rural life to complete sophistication is rather hurried. She finds herself alone in New York after the death of her one friend, the old professor. She loses her position as typist through the trick of a jealous girl in the office, and is finally reduced in funds to three dollars. She decides to spend this last money on a good meal in a big hotel, a decision which carries the sympathy of the observer. At this point the story weakens. Her ordering of a Bronx cocktail gave a touch of the ridiculous under the circumstances, and considering the fact that she was unused to drinking. The heroine loses sympathy here.

After leaving the hotel the girl meets a former married man whom she had seen in the country, and reluctantly becomes his housekeeper. This situation is well handled, but the scenes with the gambler were prolonged and unnecessarily unpleasant at time. The divorced wife makes a good character, and is well portrayed by Eloise Clement. John Bowers appears as the husband, and Frank Norcross as the gambler.

"THE GUILT OF SILENCE"

Bluebird Offering Features Monroe Salisbury in Story of Snow Country.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

HUGE drifts of snow piled on mountains and valleys give an excellent Alaskan atmosphere to this story of the gold fields. The subject is full of entertaining action, and quite unusual in plot. It is a story of primitive emotions in the gold fields of the Northland, and makes altogether a striking feature.

Monroe Salisbury, always an interesting performer, has a strong part in this. He appears as David Matthew, a successful miner, about to start back over the home trail with his bags of gold dust. He is victimized by Frank and Amy Marshall, who drug him and steal his gold. In the chase across the snow fields, in which dog teams are used, Matthew becomes lost in the snow, and loses his voice. He is rescued by a miner named Harkness, who takes the victim home. Matthew recovers in every way except that he cannot speak.

Matthew's rescuer, Harkness, is then victimized by the same couple, and he even consents to marry Amy, though she is already the wife of Marshall. Matthew, unable to make his story known, witnesses this marriage, which he is unable to stop. Later, when Harkness' daughter appears,

Matthew falls in love with her and she with him despite his mute condition.

The situation in the cabin where all are snowed in for weeks at a time is very unusual and full of dramatic possibilities. Harkness is away, having gone to the gold fields to look after his claim, and Matthew discovers the relationship between Amy and Frank. Matthew, himself, is shot by Harkness, though not fatally, when the latter returns. The effect of this second injury restores Matthew's vocal powers, and he succeeds in making the truth known.

This interesting story was produced by Elmer Clifton from a story by Ethel Hall. The cast includes Ruth Clifford, Betty Schade, and Alfred Allen.

"THE FIREBRAND"

Virginia Pearson Has Melodramatic Role—Story Starts Poorly But Picks Up.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

BEGINNING with the usual type of melodrama in which the evil villains cultivate the facial expression of vultures and the good heroes look ardent as well as noble and the heroine glances around her in her loveliness from armchair or table or in pretty localities out-of-doors, this picture, "The Firebrand," a Fox five-reel offering with Virginia Pearson playing the part of a Russian princess, does get a vigorous situation in the final reaches of its action and works up dramatic interest enough to hold strongly. Its chief fault is that it is neither sheer melodrama nor is it a "slice of life" type of production whose object is reality. It mixes both, and spectators may feel the clash between states of mind that are mutually unreal to each other. It is not one of the best vehicles for Virginia Pearson.

In the last reel a true tragic situation is developed, but when the princess has shot her husband who has made himself president of Russia to save his country from the Germans, she discovers that he had murdered her uncle merely because that evil aristocrat had sold out to the Huns and furnished defective ammunition to the Russian Tenth Corps to which her only brother had been assigned. That corps had in consequence been wiped out. Now the princess, who has married the revolutionist, sees the poison coils of the plot, and taking the supposedly dead body in her arms she recalls it to life and they live happily ever after.

It is a picture of many players and many scenes. It has some extremely well furnished interior sets and several excellent location pictures. There is a scene in a quarry where political prisoners are working, the revolutionist hero among them. A cave-in of rock takes place and the prisoner saves the life of the princess who has come there to express sympathy with him on account of his hard fate, due to his book against the aristocrats. This is the beginning of their friendship.

TWO WOLFVILLE TALES

Western Stories Adapted from the Works of Alfred Henry Lewis.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

THE first two offerings of a new series of two-reel Broadway Star Features founded on the popular "Wolfville Tales" written by Alfred Henry Lewis were shown recently by the General Film Company. They are interesting and entertaining productions dealing with various phases of human nature as exemplified in a Western settlement.

"The Clients of Aaron Green."

A lawyer comes to Wolfville, but is not received with open arms. Things move slowly, so the boys decide to try out his "oratory." They stage a fake murder. After freeing the "murderer" the dead man joins in the drinks. Later three criminals are brought to the jail, and the lawyer is hired to defend them. His fiery oratory has such an effect on the crowd in the courtroom that it seems the criminals will be freed, when one of the gang interrupts the proceedings, takes the lawyer out, and shows him his clients who have already been strung up. The lawyer, disgusted, leaves the settlement. The cast, including Bob Burns as Aaron Green, and Sidney Hayes, William Lester, and Texas Allen, all give a good account of themselves.

"Cynthiana."

Cynthiana Bark comes into camp and opens a "votes for women" saloon. She makes the men understand that she will stand for no nonsense. A tenderfoot loses his heart, and proposes. She chases him out with a rifle, then changes her mind, and as he flees from town in a stage she follows him, holds up the stage, and makes him marry her then and there, a minister fortunately being a passenger on the stage. About this time the poor fellow's father appears, and falls in a fit. Cynthiana nurses him, and he wants to marry her, but she has to decline, saying she is already married to his son.

There is considerable humor and a number of clever touches in this picture, which was directed by George Sargent. Patricia Palmer makes an excellent Cynthiana, and Jack Dill does good work as Oscar, the soft tenderfoot. The remainder of the cast includes George Holt, Tex Allen, William Lester, and Hattie Buskirk. The photography and settings are adequate.

"BELIEVE ME, XANTIPPE."

Wallace Reid in Rattling Good Paramount Comedy from Ballard Stage Success.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

BELIEVE me, gentle reader, "Believe Me, Xantippe," is a rattling good picture, and Wallace Reid is capital as the hero. John Barrymore, who created the part in the stage version of the Frederick Ballard success, has nothing on the star put forth in the screen arrangement of the play produced by Jesse L. Lasky. And let it no longer be said that stage plays do not lend themselves cleverly to the screen.

"Believe Me, Xantippe," was put into scenario form by Olga Printzlau, and skips along on its merry way without hitch or stumble. Before the first reel is half over the story is well started, and there is no lagging of the fun right up to the finish. Donald Crisp has caught the spirit of the comedy and maintained it through the entire production, of which he is the director. Henry Kotani was the cameraman.

"Believe Me, Xantippe," is the favorite expression of George MacFarland, a young college chap, who bets $20,000 with two of his pals that he can commit a crime and not be caught by the police within a year. He forges the name of one of his friends, and departs for the West. Brown and Sole, his two chums, expect to trap him by notifying the police to look out for a man who is always saying "Believe Me, Xantippe." MacFarland manages to elude arrest until the year is almost up. Then he meets a girl, and trouble starts at once.

Dolly Kamman, the daughter of Sheriff Kamman, of Colorado, is spending the night alone in her father's hunting lodge when MacFarland gets lost in the woods and drops in to get his bearings. Before he realizes just what has happened, Dolly has identified him and made him a prisoner. From then on the complications are rapid and amusing, and Mac wins both the wager and the girl.

The easy and taking comedy method of Wallace Reid is matched by the deft characterization of Ann Little as Dolly. Ernest Joy, Henry Woodward, James Farley, Noah Beery, Charles Ogle, James Cruze, Winifred Greenwood, and Clarence Geldert help on the good work. A most entertaining picture, "Believe Me, Xantippe."

"WHO IS TO BLAME?"

Picked Cast in Novel Triangle Picture With Well-Acted Japanese Hero.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is considerable novelty in "Who Is to Blame?" a five-part Triangle picture written by E. Magnus Ingleton. The story has little speed, but reaches a satisfactory conclusion, and the atmosphere of the Land of the Mikado is reproduced with a fair amount of skill. The cast is headed by the Japanese actor, Jack Abbe. Frank Borzage directed the production, Pliny Horne having looked after the photography.

Jack Livingston as the wealthy Grant Barton, Maud Wayne as Marion Craig, Lillian Langdon as her mother, and Lillian West as Tonia Marsh are seen to advantage. Jack Abbe impersonates a Jap rickshaw boy whose devotion to his American employer reunites that gentleman and his wife after a vampirish lady has nearly succeeded in separating them forever. The Japanese actor gives an ingratiating performance of the character, and plays with commendable restraint.

The opening scene of "Who Is to Blame?" takes place in Japan. Grant Barton, an American tourist, is unmarried, when he meets Taro Sam and prevails on him to become his valet. After his return to the United States, Barton meets Marion Craig, and marries her. They are both very happy until Marion is called away to the bedside of her mother, and Barton meets Tonia Marsh, a young woman who lives by her wits. When Marion returns home she surprises her husband embracing Tonia in the parlor. She goes to her mother's home, and that worthy woman does her best to keep the couple apart.

Taro Sam determines to cure Barton of his infatuation. He contrives to make Tonia believe that he is a prince in his own country, and is successful in his attempt to take his master's place in her favor. Barton calls unexpectedly, and finds Taro Sam and Tonia embracing each other. He discharges the boy and goes back to his wife. Taro Sam returns to Japan and invests in a new rickshaw.

Bushman and Bayne Are Featured in an Entertaining Light Comedy.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

THE Metro five-reel feature for May 13, "Cyclone Higgins, D. D.," presents Francis X. Bushman in an eccentric character role, that of a parson in a backwoods settlement, and Beverly Bayne is featured along with him as a harum scarum village girl. The roles of the two stars differ materially from their previous efforts. The production is entertaining, and there are a lot of good laughs combined with considerable heart interest.

Cyrus Higgins, an itinerant preacher, accompanied by his Chinese servant, reaches Yellville. Soon after several robberies occur, and the guilty deputy sheriff causes the arrest of Abner Phillips. His daughter, Sally, seeks refuge in the parson's home, which starts a scandal. Cyrus thrashes the deputy who starts the rumors, and sends Sally to his sister in Virginia to be educated. A waif is left on his doorstep, and he adopts her. Soon after the deputy sheriff attempts to kill Higgins, but does not succeed. Sally, realizing that she loves Higgins, returns home, but Higgins tells her she must share his love with another lady, and brings in the little waif.

Much credit is due to Director Cabanne for the manner in which he has built up this simple story. There are a number of well handled scenes, including the fight between Higgins and the deputy, the attempt of the deputy to shoot Higgins, and, in a lighter vein, the scenes where Sally chases a rooster to get a feather for her hat, and where the waif, following Bushman, imitates his walk. Bushman does good work as Cyrus Higgins, or Cyclone, as he is called after the fight, and Beverly Bayne ably assists him with her characterization of Sally Phillips. Some of the best work in the picture is performed by Baby Ivy Ward as the little waif. Charles Fang as the Chinese servant shows that he is a good actor. The remainder of the cast are entirely satisfactory in their respective roles, and the photography and locations are excellent.

"HIS OWN HOME TOWN."

Paramount Presents Charles Ray in a Story by Larry Evans.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

HIS own home town sees him as a tramp when he returns on a freight train to the disgust of his clerical father, but he tells his sweetheart, a budding actress, "I intend to make good right here in my own home town." He thereupon bids her good-bye, also her father, owner of the only independent newspaper in a graft-ridden town, and goes away for a period of two years—a slight contradiction—in order to "make good." While absent from home he, James Duncan, writes some successful plays under the nom de plume of Duncan James in which his sweetheart stars without suspecting the pseudonym. Both return about the same time, her father having died and left his newspaper to Duncan instead of to his daughter. Duncan takes off his coat, gets out extra editions, and frightens the grafters stiff. So he really does make good in the end. He also embraces the young actress at the end, though he announces with some annoyance that it is the conventional conclusion.

The story is intended to show the power exerted by the press, especially, it would seem, when conducted by young men of no previous training or experience in the newspaper publishing business. Duncan does not need either. He has the enthusiasm of youth, high ideals, and the courage of conviction, the real essentials of a campaign for reform, and these qualities enable him to win out so overwhelmingly that he wipes a great political organization out of existence. It is done in jigtime, a marvelous accomplishment for one so young, but it is not impossible. Sound judgment is the prime essential of success, while experience often gets men into a rut. Mr. Ray and the supporting cast are entirely equal to the requirements of their modest roles, and the settings are convincingly appropriate.

"OLD HARTWELL'S CUB"

William Desmond and Mary Warren in Triangle Five-Part Heart Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ADMIRERS of homely pathos and simple humor will welcome "Old Hartwell's Cub," a five-part Triangle story written by Mable Richards and adapted to the screen by George E. Jenks. The picture was directed by Thomas N. Heffron and photographed by Alfred Gosden. William Desmond and Marry Warren having the principal roles. The story is told in novel form, and its characters are such as are found in the usual tale of small town life. Some of the incidents are rather far-fetched, but the hero's heart is in the right place, and he wages a fight in defense of his drunken old father that will win the respect and sympathy of most spectators.

Bill Hartwell, a young village blacksmith, has the misfortune to live in a place where the neighbors have developed only the mean side of their natures. Bill's father is the town drunkard, and when he is locked up in the jail Bill promptly batters in the door with a sledge and takes him home. The neighbors are all against Bill except the Reverend David Lane and his daughter, Mary. Bill falls in love with Mary, but she gets entangled with a worthless scamp named Edward Jones, and marries him. Jones, who has a wife in Chico, Ariz., promptly deserts her, taking with him money that had been intrusted to Mary. She follows him to Arizona, and Bill follows Mary. They both have lively experiences in the West, and when they start for home Mary and Bill are man and wife.

William Desmond has the physical qualifications for the part of the blacksmith, and, aside from doing rather too much posing, acts it effectively. Mary Warren is a pleasing Mary Lane. Eugene Burr, Walt Whitman, Percy Challenger, Dorothy Hagar, Graham Pette, Edwin J. Brady, and William Ellingford complete the cast.

"THE WRONG FLAT"

Twede Dan Does Good Work and Performs Several Stunts in This Two-Reeler.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

IN this two-reel comedy, the fourth or May release of the Jester Comedy Company, Twede Dan shows his versatility as an actor, and his unusual ability as an acrobat. He appears as a young man who has imbibed too freely, and later, in endeavoring to get away from an unpleasant situation, disguises as a woman. He also performs several stunts, such as falling from one theater box into the one directly beneath, and sliding down a rope from the top of a building, then making a good fall after the rope burns.

The picture opens in a theater, where Twede Dan succeeds in interfering with all of the performers and is thrown out. He goes home, gets into the wrong flat much to the distress of the lady occupying it. The husband returns, Twede goes out on the fire escape, and then a chase ensues in which various obstacles are encountered.

The star is assisted by a capable cast, including Nilde Babette. There are a number of laughs, and the picture should provide good entertainment in the majority of theaters.

Comments

General Film Company.

THE CLIENTS OF AARON GREEN (Broadway Star).—This two-reel picture is the first of a series adapted from the Wolfville Tales written by Alfred Henry Lewis. It deals with a lawyer is a western settlement who, by his fiery eloquence, is about to succeed in freeing his guilty clients, when one of the gang of cowboys reveals the fact that they have been executed in the meantime. The production is interesting and well acted.

CYNTHIANA (Broadway Star).—Another of the Wolfville stories, written by Alfred Henry Lewis. This two-reel picture deals with the romance of a very breezy western girl and a tenderfoot. After refusing him at the point of a winchester she changes her mind and goes after him. The acting of the entire cast, headed by Patricia Palmer and Jack Dill, is excellent, and the production is interesting and has a number of good scenes with several humorous touches.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE GUILT OF SILENCE (Bluebird).—A strong five-reel subject, featuring Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford. The scenes occur in the Alaskan gold fields and are full of good drama. The snow landscape, dog teams and settings in general give a pleasing atmosphere to the piece. It is altogether an unusual subject.

Famous Players-Lasky.

THE MATING OF MARCELLA (Ince), May 20.—Dorothy Dalton plays a modiste's model in this five-part picture which has an interesting story. The locations are attractive and the production is well handled. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

BELIEVE ME, ZANTIPPE (Lasky), May 27.—Taken from Frederick Ballard's stage play, this picture is one of the most entertaining screen comedies ever made. It is capitally played by Wallace Reid, Ann Little and the rest of the company. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

A FISHERLESS CARTOON (Fox), May 5.—One of the best Mutt and Jeff comedies in some time. Lieut. Fisher being called to arms has to leave Jeff with only one leg, so Mutt not only supplies him with the missing member, but writes a scenario and has Jeff working till it is on the screen. They finally try to sell it to the Rialto, and, discouraged with its reception, send a S O S to Fisher for help.

A NEIGHBOR'S KEYHOLE (Fox Sunshine Comedy), May 5.—Has a wealth of incident and situation that is astonishing. It is uproariously funny and a sure winner. We have noticed it at more length on another page of this issue.

THE FIREBRAND (Fox Special Feature), May 26.—A five-reel picture with Virginia Pearson taking the role of a Russian princess who finds her ideal at the last in a revolutionist. The picture is very melodramatic till almost the close, when it works a real situation of much tragic effectiveness. We have reviewed it on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

THE GOLDEN GOAL (Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature), May 20.—A five-reel picture of solid merit and would be a good box office attraction if properly publicized. It is a picture of the soul of a man rough but ambitious. He starts in ignorance and works his way up to a knowledge that glory of his own humanity is the only golden goal worth his striving for. He finds that certain things that glimmered before him in the beginning are tinsel and trash. Harry Morey and Florence Deshon distinguish themselves in the two interesting roles of the plot.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

ROSE O' PARADISE (Paralta), May 20.—A Grace Miller White story, this picture has a simple, childish heroine, cleverly played by Bessie Barriscale. The production was directed by James Young. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Jester Comedy Company.

THE WRONG FLAT.—This two-reel offering is the fourth release of the Jester Comedies. There are a number of amusing situations, first in a theater, then in a flat. Twede-Dan again demonstrates that he is not only an excellent actor, but a good acrobat. One of the best scenes is where he masquerades as a woman.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

CYCLONE HIGGINS, D. D., May 13.—There are a number of good laughs and several scenes rich in human interest in this five-reel production in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are featured, assisted by a very clever little girl. The story deals with an eccentric minister's experience in a mining camp.

THE WINNING OF BEATRICE (Metro), May 20.—May Allison and Hale Hamilton do a lot of breezy comedy work in this five-part picture, written by June Mathis and Katherine Kavanaugh. The dramatic portion of the story is only fair. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

TOYS OF FATE (Screen Classics).—A dual role in this seven-part picture gives Nazimova a chance for vivid acting. The story was written by June Mathis and directed by George D. Baker. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SOCIAL BRIARS (American), May 13.—A Mary Miles Minter production directed by Edward Sloman. The picture is much more entertaining and more ably directed than many of the former productions in which this youthful star has appeared. A full review will be found elsewhere.

HER TERRIBLE TIME (Strand), May 14.—This is one of the best of the recent Billie Rhodes comedies. In it the heroine, being entertained at the home of a friend with whose brother she is in love, unintentionally places herself in a compromising position when she accidentally leaves her diary in his room and is found there with him (also an accident) by his parents and sister. Some truly funny complications attend her thwarted efforts to regain the diary before the young man arrives on the scene.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 22 (Mutual), May 15.—An unusually interesting number, containing such items as a yacht race at New Orleans, logging in Louisiana, Toronto, Ont., in prayer for the victory of the Allies, the King of Italy reviewing the Parade of Triumph and other equally attractive events.

HER RUSTIC ROMEO (Strand), May 28.—Rather a meaningless comedy featuring Billie Rhodes. The heroine of the play, a musical comedy star, is sent to the country to learn the dialect and manners of the rural community, in anticipation of playing the star part in a rural drama. The new leading man of the company also happens to be sent there, and the daughter of the farmer falls in love with him. Finally the players land back in the city followed by the farmer and his daughter. The latter surprises her father when he is about to insist that the leading man marry her, by stating that she is about to marry her country lover.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

BRITAIN'S BULWARKS, No. 3 (Pathe) May 26.—This interesting installment pictures the movements of British troops in the present campaign in Turkey and Asia. The military base at Basra is shown, with non-war side lights, such as Arabian fete days. Trench scenes on Sinai desert and the movement of wounded troops is also shown. This has a valuable historical interest.

IN SOUTHERNMOST RUSSIA (Pathe), June 2.—A descriptive reel, devoted to scenes on the peninsula of Crimea. This gives an excellent idea of conditions in this part of Russia prior to the war. Scenes are taken in Sebastopol and numerous villages, showing the arches, monuments and architectural features of the country. The glimpses of the varied peoples, which include Greeks, Turks, Bulgars and others, as well as Russians, are also interesting.

ENEMY ALIENS (Pathe), June 2.—Episode No. 13 of "The House of Hate." An unusually interesting installment. Gresham rescues Pearl from the suburban cottage after seeing her S. O. S. light flashes from the windows. They encounter The Terror again. Later, after shadowing Haynes Waldon, they learn of his communication with a German spy from whom he is taking illegal pay. The number closes with a strong melodramatic climax.

THE CITY SLICKER (Rolin-Pathe), June 2.—A characteristic comedy number, featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Polard and Bebe Daniels. Harold becomes clerk at a country hotel, which he proceeds to brighten up with all sorts of new appliances and time-saving devices. He has a funny love affair with a girl at the hotel and finally elopes with her. There are some amusing new tricks in this.

Triangle Film Corporation.

OLD HARTWELL'S CUB (Triangle), May 19.—Founded on a story by Mable Richards, the picture has homely humor and real pathos. William Desmond and Mary Warren play the leads. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

WHO IS TO BLAME? (Triangle), May 19.—The hero of this five-part picture is a Jap, played by Jack Abbe. The story has some novel points and is well acted. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Company.

CURRENT EVENTS, NO. 53 (Universal), May 11.—With the "Blue Devils" at West Point; opening of yachting season in San Francisco; mile-a-minute pigeons; British monarch visiting marines; Italian line holding firm against Huns, and numerous other features of interest appear in this number.

CURRENT EVENTS, NO. 52 (Universal), May 4.—With the Yankee Flyers at Morrison, Va.; Anzacs and Blue Devils in New York; food conservation; Liberty Loan scenes; greeting new Japanese ambassador, and numerous other war side lights are given prominence in this number.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 23 (Universal), May 8.—Scenes from the Evening Mail Marathon race in New York; Canadians celebrating first gas attack; what women of England and America are doing in the war; a California swimming contest, and numerous other entertaining features are shown in this number, which closes with Hy Mayer cartoons.

PRETTY BABIES (L-KO), May 15.—A two-reel subject, featuring Dave Morris, Rube Miller and a group of pretty girls. The latter appear in bathing suits and pajamas, being entertained at a house party by Billy Bingo while his father is away. The story, which is very indefinite in plot, is told in poetical subtitles. The subject is inoffensive, but contains little humor and is not at all strong.

THE LION'S CLAW (Universal Special), May 20.—Episode No. 8 of this serial. This instalment is packed with thrills, all well staged. Beth is rescued from the quicksand by Capt. Harris. They go to Bonda, where they attempt to release the prisoners. But Beth herself is made prisoner. Rex De Roselli does excellent work as Rej Hari.

WHO'S ZOO? (L-KO), May 22.—A one-reel comedy, featuring Kathleen O'Connor, Rube Miller and a trained elephant. The latter furnishes much of the comedy, doing some rather surprising stunts. This number is entertaining and will go strong with children.

THE LION'S CLAWS (Universal Special), May 27.—Episode No. 9. Beth is lowered in a tank by Rej Hari's men and finally gives up the proclamation but later recovers it. She is thrown into the lion's den and rescued by Harris in an exciting manner. She is placed in the harem, but escapes. The number is full of stirring action, the serial on the whole being strongly built.

THE BULL'S EYE, NO. 17 (Universal), May 27.—This begins with Cody gathering himself together after a fall over a cliff, tied to the back of a horse. The number is full of exciting action, which includes knife throwing, the rescue of Cora from drowning, the capture of North and Sweeney and their escape, and Cody's recapture. The installment comes to a climax with Cody tied to a railroad track before an approaching train.

U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corp.

MEN (Bacon-Backer).—Written by Harry S. Sheldon and produced with a fine cast, this six-part photoplay has a strong theme and has been ably directed by Perry R. Vekroft. It is reviewed at length in last week's issue.

World Pictures Corporation.

VENGEANCE, May 20.—A six-reel subject, which features Montagu Love, Barbara Castleton and Madge Evans. The story occurs in India and London, and concerns the revenge taken by the son of an exiled English gentleman upon the latter's brother, the cause of his disgrace. This is a well built story, with a number of quite dramatic situations. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

THE OLDEST LAW (World-Picture), May 27.—A five-reel subject, featuring June Elvidge as a country girl who comes to the city. The subject holds the interest well and is strong in certain situations, but there is a lack of conviction in the plot at times and the sordid note is struck in some scenes, which could well be modified or cut. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

MAIN 1-2-3 (Fay Tincher Comedy).—The first of a series of comedies featuring Fay Tincher, who has done excellent work in this line. This first two-reel offering does not lend itself well to comedy purposes and fails to get over with any degree of strength. The plot contains elements which interfere with the natural, spontaneous humor for which this commediene will be remembered. But future numbers will be awaited with interest.

Hodkinson to Release Louise Glaum Series

OWING to the success achieved by "An Alien Enemy," the first Louise Glaum Paralta Play, it has been decided by the executives of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and Paralta Plays, Inc., to release a series of Glaum pictures as part of the regular Hodkinson service.

Miss Glaum's first appearance on the Hodkinson program was to fill the vacancy made in the Warren Kerrigan series caused by the latter fracturing his leg. As Henry B. Walthall has been released from his Paralta contract to do special work the Glaum series will take Walthall's place in the production line-up.

While Louise Glaum has made a big reputation for herself as a portrayer of the so-called vampire woman her characters have always possessed a certain human quality of redemption that wins sympathy from her audience.

It is Miss Glaum's ambition always to portray roles that have a deeply sympathetic appeal, and it is such a part she essayed in "An Alien Enemy" and again in "Shackled," her forthcoming picture, to be released May 27.

Exchange managers all over the country have wired their appreciation of the Glaum series, it is said at the home office of the Hodkinson Corporation, and the officers of that organization are preparing for a large volume of bookings on their new star.

Tom Ince Lays Out Work For His Chief Players

THOMAS H. INCE, producer for Paramount and Artcraft, discussed recently his plans for three of his stars —Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray and Enid Bennett.

"Having demonstrated that she is wholly as capable in society roles as in more virile types Dorothy Dalton will be presented hereafter, at least for a number of productions, in society dramas," said Mr. Ince.

"Enid Bennett has proved that she is able to play roles of a more mature character than those of the ingenue type. So that for her forthcoming pictures, beginning with 'A Desert Wooing,' she will have parts that are, so to speak, between ingenue roles and those portrayed by Miss Dalton.

"Charles Ray will continue to do his typical young American characters, not altogether of the country boy type, but those in which he depicts a youth who is placed under stress of circumstances and must fight his way to the front by sheer determination and physical as well as mental prowess."

"LEND ME YOUR NAME"

Metro Presents the Popular Star, Harold Lockwood, in a Sprightly Adaptation of Francis Perry Elliott's Novel of the Man Who Ran Away From a Shrewish Wife.

Cast.

The Earl of Gilleigh } ..Harold Lockwood
Warren Ellis }
Rosalind.....Pauline Curley
Sophronia.....Bessie Eyton
Dr. Dinger.....Bert Starkey
Hastings.....Stanton Heck
Phyllis.....Peggy Prevost
Smithers.....Harry de Roy

Directed by Fred J. Balshofer.

The Story: The Earl of Gilleigh, dyspeptic and henpecked, is about to commit suicide because his wife is coming home, when a noise rouses him, and he finds a burglar in his dining room. To his amazement, when unmasked, the burglar is his double, and they exchange identities, Ellis, the intruder, becoming the earl and the earl seeking the free life of the road. He establishes himself upon one of his estates to which Ellis presently comes. He falls in love with Rosalind, pupil at a nearby boarding school, and wins her affection, but the wife follows, and charges the girl with flirting with a married man. Ellis, as the best way out, proceeds to break the wife of her nagging tricks, and with the earl once more in his rightful position he is free to win Rosalind all over again.

Feature Harold Lockwood, who plays the dual roles of the Earl of Gilleigh and Warren Ellis, and Bessie Eyton as Sophronia.

Stunt Suggestions: As the story hinges upon a double offer to admit free any doubles who present themselves at the theater. For a throwaway use the catchline, "Would you rather be an earl or a happy man?" In the lobby work offer to show two Harold Lockwoods for a single price of admission. Back this with cutouts of the star in his two characters.

"HIS OWN HOME TOWN"

Thomas H. Ince Presents Charles Ray in an Intimate Story of American Small Town Life and a Man Who Cleaned Up His City by Smashing the Ring.

Cast.

Jimmy Duncan.....Charles Ray
Carol Landis.....Katherine MacDonald
T. Elihu Banks.....Charles French
Tivotson .....Otto Hoffman
Rev. John Duncan.....Andrew Arbuckle
David Landis.....Carl Forms
Justice Jameson.....Milton Ross

Directed by Victor L. Schertzinger.

The Story: Feeling that he can never rise to any great heights in the little town in which he is living, Jimmy Duncan leaves for the big city, but after meeting with many rebuffs and his capital gone, he returns home on a freight train. He is accorded such a frigid reception by his father that he goes away again, vowing never to return. In extending aid to a man being robbed by gamblers Jimmy becomes involved in a fight which results in his arrest and exile from the city. He becomes a famous playwright and two years later returns to take possession of a newspaper which has been bequeathed to him by the death of the father of the girl he loves. Through the press he rounds up his political enemies and rehabilitates the community.

Feature Charles Ray as Jimmy Duncan and Katherine MacDonald as Carol Landis.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Ambitious Youth Defying Fate and Local Opposition Makes Good Against Villainy and Intrigue in His Own Home Town.

Local Politics and Youthful Ambitions Come to Grips in Exciting Plot.

Brave Youth Overcomes Local Opposition in Redeeming His Home Town.

Resourceful Young Reformer Finds Time to Love While Busy Saving His Own Home Town.

Plot and Counterplot Heighten Interest in Exciting American Play.

Stunt Suggestions: Get grocery and drug stores to make a window display of cleansing compounds of all sorts. Centre with a large picture of the star and a card reading: "These goods will clean up most things, but you should see Charles Ray, as Jimmie Duncan, clean up His Own Home Town. Jimmie was surely some cleaner. It's at the Chouse and dates." A jeweler's display of rings could say that these rings cannot be broken with the ease with which Charles Ray breaks the political ring. Use the stills for the lobby.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

Released May 27.

"THE DEVIL'S PLAYGROUND"

The Fraternity Players Offer a Striking Expose of the Evils of the Dancing Craze Through the Medium of a Fascinating and Gripping Story.

Cast.

The Woman.....Vera Michelena
The Boy.....Harry Spingler
The Father.....Robert Cummings
The Lawyer.....W. H. Tooker
Man-About-Town.....George S. Trimble
The Girl.....Lillian Cook

Directed by Harry McRay Webster.

The Story: An employer finding that his stenographer is fond of dancing and has a sick mother takes her to cabarets, and finally she leaps from a window to escape from his attentions, and returns home and finds her mother dead. Soon after the man falls dead from heart failure. His son, fresh from school, meets a vampire, and becomes infatuated with her. To meet her demands for money he robs the bank in which he is employed, and is sent to prison. The vampire then again welcomes the man of wealth whom she had cast aside. On being released from prison the boy, having learned his lesson, returns to his mother whom he had left for the vampire, and finally marries the girl who was formerly employed by his father.

Feature Vera Michelena as the woman, Harry Spingler as the boy, and Lillian Cook as the Girl.

Tense Scenes, Thrilling Episodes, and Dramatic Climaxes Abound.

Stunt Suggestions: This story is a preachment against the dancing craze. Get the company's literature and get the local paper to take the question up, giving it a local tinge if possible. The smaller the town the more the editor can be induced to froth at the mouth against the evils of New York. For a lobby card cut out as many dancing poses as possible. If you can get hold of some old Ladies' Home Journals giving the Castles in their dancing poses this will be just the thing. Use in large letters, "The Danger of the Dance."

Advertising Aids: One style each of three, six and 24-sheet posters. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. One, two and three-column cuts. Heralds. Press sheet.

Released by Atlantic Distributing Company.

"WE SHOULD WORRY"

William Fox Presents Jane and Katherine Lee, the Baby Grands of Photoplay, in Five Acts of Screened Sunshine.

Cast.

Jane.....Jane Lee
Katherine.....Katherine Lee
Miss Ashton.....Ruby De Remer
Jack Fenton.....William Pike
Percival Gilpatrick.....Henry Clive
Mike.....Edward Sturgis
Bill.....Tammany Young
Rev. Haughty.....Charles Craig
Pierre Picard.....George Humbert
George Steele.....Henry Hallam
Mrs. Gilligan.....Sarah McVicker
Ann Haughty.....Ann Egleston

Directed by Kenean Buel.

The Story: Jane and Katherine, living with their aunt, Miss Ashton, who has many suitors, decide that Jack Fenton is the best one. Miss Ashton also prefers him until she meets the suave Percival Gilpatrick, who in reality is a crook. The children detest him, and foil him in his many attempts to propose to Miss Ashton. Gilpatrick, incensed, had his two confederates imprison Jane and Katherine, but the little imps make it so unpleasant for their captors that they are soon given their liberty. A staged rescue act makes a hero of Gilpatrick in the eyes of the unsuspecting Miss Ashton, but when Jane and Katherine reveal his true character Miss Ashton sees that she has been tricked, and returns to Jack Fenton, and they are married.

Feature Jane and Katherine Lee, Ruby De Remer as Miss Ashton, and William Pike as Jack Fenton.

Stunt Suggestions: Use as many stills as possible of the Lee children. Nothing attracts more attention than good kid pictures. For a throwaway start with, "Mothers, Avoid Kidnappers," and advise parents to bring their children to see how to act when kidnapped. Use cuts in the advertising if at all possible. For the lobby use a banner, "Lees bring laughs. The Lee kiddies are here today."

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Press sheet and mats (mats can be secured free by writing to the Fox Film Corporation, Publicity Department, New York City). Cuts are made on special order at the rate of 20 cents per column.

"BAREE, SON OF KAZAN"

Greater Vitagraph Presents Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman in a Screen Adaptation of James Oliver Curwood's Famous Novel of the Northland.

Cast.

Marie.....Nell Shipman
Jim Carvel.....Alfred Whitman
McTaggart.....Al. Garcia
Perriot.....Joe Rickson

Directed by Paul Scardon.

The Story: Henry Carvel, a Western newspaper owner, exposes the intrigue of a steal ring and is shot by the political boss. An intimidated jury frees the slayer, who is killed later by Jim, Carvel's son. Jim escapes to the Northwest, where he becomes a fur trader. McTaggart, the brutal factor of the trading post, having tired of his Indian woman, sets about to victimize Marie, the daughter of Pierre, a trapper. McTaggart, who says that he is leaving for a distant trading post, gets Marie's father to run his store during his absence. Instead, McTaggart goes to Pierre's cabin, where he attacks Marie. Pierre, fearing that harm might befall his daughter, goes home, and is killed in a fight with McTaggart. The factor sets the Indians upon Jim's trail, telling them that he is responsible for the murder, but he is rescued by De Bar, a half-breed, whom Jim befriended. Meanwhile, McTaggart abducts Marie, and the Indians are unable to overtake him. Marie's dog, Baree, however, assumes the role of the avenger, and downs the murderer.

Feature Nell Shipman as Marie and Alfred Whitman as Jim Carvel.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Stirring and Picturesque Drama of the Great Woods and Wilds of the Northwest.
Half Wolf, Half Dog, Protege, Protector and Final Avenger of Heroine's Wrongs.
Beautifully Vizualizing the Snow-Capped Grandeurs of the Sierra Nevada's.
James Oliver Curwood's Famous Novel Brought to the Screen.
Gripping Tragedy of the Great Northwest Screened in Vivid Scenes.
Greatest Glorification of the Dog Since Jack London's Masterpiece.

Stunt Suggestions: Hook up with the book sellers on the display of Curwood's books, generally, featuring Baree. For a throwaway use, "Do you like dogs? Of course you do. In 'Baree, Son of Kazan,' shown at (house and date), a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, five genuine malamute dogs were used to show the canine hero at various stages of his growth. A real woods story by James Oliver Curwood." If you can get a dog that will pass for half wolf use him for street work, with a blanket lettered, "I am 'Baree, Son of Kazan.' See me at the (house) today." For the lobby use skins and other hunting trophies, or roughly suggest a post store in one corner if you have the space.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Window cards. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Heralds. Slides. Plan book. Press sheet.

Released May 27.

"THE CAILLAUX CASE"

William Fox Presents as a Contribution to the Cause of Democracy the Supremely Sensational Visualization of a Story of Real Life That Startled the World.

Cast.

Joseph Caillaux.....Henry Warwick
Henriette Caillaux.....Madaline Traverse
Bolo Pasha.....George Majeroni
Gaston Calmette.....Eugene Ormonde
Leo Claretie.....Philip Van Loan
M. Renouard.....Emile La Croix
Germaine Claretie.....Norma McCloud
Albert Calmette.....George Humbert
Emperor William of Germany, Frank McGlynn

Directed by Richard Stanton.

The Story: Against her father's advice Henriette Renouard elopes with Leo Claretie, a writer on the Paris newspaper, "Le Figaro." The years pass, and Claretie's failure to make a glowing success embitters his wife. With the assistance of Gaston Calmette, editor of the paper, she meets Joseph Caillaux, the French Minister of Finance, whose brilliant career has impressed her. Henriette and Caillaux are mutually attracted to each other. After divorcing his wife, Caillaux, through his political influence, secures a divorce for Henriette from Claretie, who commits suicide. Caillaux and Bolo Pasha scheme to bring about a separate peace between France and Germany. Calmette, the political enemy of Caillaux, hears of the intrigue, and announces his intention to expose the plotters. But he is killed by Henriette before he can carry out his plan. Caillaux employs his political power and secures an acquittal for his wife. Data is discovered in the United States relating to the conspiracy, which, when given to the French Government, results in the execution of Bolo Pasha and the imprisonment of Caillaux.

Feature Henry Warwick as Joseph Caillaux, Madaline Traverse as Henriette Caillaux, and George Majeroni as Bolo Pasha.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Picturizing the Greatest of International Intrigues as Exposed by Startling Turns of the Wheels of Avenging Justice.
Screen Version of the Greatest International Tragedy of the War.
"The Evil Genius of France" Pilloried in Convincing Photoplay.
Authentic Progress in Bola Pasha Case Recorded in Convincing Episodes.
Doing Murder to Save Husband from Just Punishment for Treason.
Appalling Treachery and Treason That Nearly Prostrated Bleeding France.

Stunt Suggestions: At the present time your capacity and enterprise alone will limit the audiences you can draw to this showing. Use the billboards generously, and post smaller towns if there are transportation facilities. Use window paper as well as the billboards. Make your newspaper advertising sensational, and take as large displays as you can afford. Interest the local defense societies, and, if possible, get them to attend the opening performance in groups. Keep a street wagon out for a day or two before the showing as well as during the run, and work the papers for all the space they will give to reading notices. The fact that the story has a recent news value that is still alive will give you a good showing if you can make your stories hinge on the late developments in the news. Hammer away on the spy menace and get the press stirred up. Give a midnight matinee following the regular showing "to accommodate the crowds turned away from the regular performance."

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Press sheets and mats. (Mats may be secured free by writing to the Fox Film Corporation, Publicity Department, New York City.) Cuts are made on special order at the rate of 20 cents per column.

Released May 19.

"PAY DAY"

Metro Presents Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in a Five-Act Dramaturgical Nightmare with Farce-Comedy Trimmings and a Wealth of Rare Humor.

Cast.

Kirke Brentwood.....Sidney Drew
Doris Fenton.....Mrs. Sidney Drew Vampire.....Florence Short
Isabel, Mrs. Brentwood I.....Linda Farley
Ruth, Mrs. Brentwood II. Mrs. Samuel Zucker
Mrs. Fenton, Doris' mother. Emily Lorraine
Dr. Grayson.....Charles Riegel
President Richard A. Rowland, of Metro, Himself
Treasurer Joseph Engel.....Himself
Watkins, Brentwood's valet.....Dan Baker

Directed by Sidney Drew.

The Story: President Rowland grants permission to the Drews to produce a five-reel drama, but Mr. Drew objects on the ground that it may spoil their reputation attained by their one-reel comedies. So, Mrs. Drew begins to read the story of the plot. Doris Fenton, employed by Dr. Grayson at the instigation of her fiance, Kirke Brentwood, steals a large sum of money from the doctor. The loss is discovered, and when Brentwood ignores her requests to make restitution she pleads guilty, and is sentenced to prison. Upon her release two years later she finds that Brentwood has married Isabel, a society girl, whom he strangles to death when she threatens to leave him after seeing his true character. Through an artifice Brentwood has Doris convicted of the crime, but after five years of imprisonment she escapes, and from Dr. Grayson hears that Brentwood has married again. Going to Brentwood's home she finds him alone, and is about to slay him when his wife, Ruth, appears. Quickly disarranging her hair and clothing she throws her arms around his neck, and assumes an appealing attitude. Ruth, placing but one construction on the scene, leaves. Dr. Grayson, who has trailed her, is horrified to discover that she is afflicted with leprosy, and that Brentwood has contracted the disease. The two are transported to the leper colony. Mrs. Drew finishes reading the scenario, and Mr. Drew declares that it will never do, but when he is told of the big money in the proposition he agrees to produce it.

Feature Sidney Drew as Kirke Brentwood and Mrs. Sidney Drew as Doris Fenton.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Fantastic Revelation of a Movie Star's Ambitions in Serious Offering by the Comedy Twain—Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew.
Saddening Story of a Ruined Life Revealed in Mock Tragedy.
Oddest of Screen Entertainments by Cleverest of Screen Entertainers.
Original Theme Surrendering Ideals to Demand of Profits.
Stars of Comedy Expand Their Artistry to Encompass Serious Drama.
Vengeance of a Bride Revealed in a Story Never Told in Pictures.

Stunt Sugegstions: About two weeks before the showing set up in the lobby a child's blackboard with a simple sum in multiplication in which it is made to appear that five multiplied by one amounts to ten. Decline to explain or to correct the seeming error. When ready to advertise add on the board, "If the Drews are funny in their one reel comedies they are ten times as entertaining in this five-part travesty, 'Pay Day'." Make this the basis of your window work and newspaper advertising. Advertise that salary will be paid all attending a certain performance. Hand out with the tickets the small pay envelopes containing a herald or other advertisement for "Pay Day," or distribute these from a special cashier's window.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Press sheet. Ten-minute novel for newspapers. Lobby sheet. Slides. Heralds. Cuts. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Filler sheet.
Released May 27.

"BELIEVE ME, XANTIPPE"

Jesse L. Lasky Presents Wallace Reid in Frederick Ballad's Harvard Prize Play of the Man Who Dodged the Police for One Year.

Cast.

George MacFarland.....Wallace Reid
Thornton Brown.....Ernest Joy
Dolly Kamman.....Ann Little
Arthur Sole.....Henry Woodward
Detective Thorne.....James Farley
Sheriff Kamman.....Noah Beery
Wrenn Wrigley.....Charles Ogle
Simp Calloway.....James Cruze
Violette .....Winifred Greenwood
Williams .....Clarence Geldert

Directed by Donald Crisp.

The Story: The apartments of wealthy George MacFarland are robbed and, in discussing the situation with his two friends, Brown and Sole, he bets them $20,000 that he can commit a crime and escape capture for a year. According to the wager MacFarland forges a check, signing Brown's name. His friends plan to play a trick on him and capture him, but MacFarland succeeds in eluding them. The check is brought to the bank, MacFarland is pronounced a fugitive from justice and the police are given a description of him. His photograph, on which is written his favorite expression, "Believe Me, Xantippe," is circulated throughout the country. Nearly twelve months later in the west, where MacFarland has gone, he meets Dolly, daughter of Sheriff Kamman, who, having, received one of the circulars showing his picture, recognizes him at once when he remarks "Believe Me, Xantippe." Dolly covers him with her gun and MacFarland tells her his story. According to the terms of the wager MacFarland is to be caught by a real officer of the law, and Dolly, not being one, it is decided that MacFarland has won his bet. Brown and Sole agree that the joke is on them, and MacFarland makes Dolly his wife.

Feature Wallace Reed as George MacFarland and Ann Little as Dolly Kamman.

Clubman Wagers Fortune That He Can Commit Crime and Elude Police.
Famous Stage Success Now Translated to the Screen.
Harvard Prize Play Finds Revival in Fascinating Screen Version.
Criminal Sought by Police Betrays Himself at the Door of Liberty.

Stunt Suggestions: In the press work make capital of the fact that this play won the prize in the 1913 play contest at Harvard University, and that its Boston success induced professional presentation in New York and on the road. Use snipe teasers with only the title and liners in the newspapers. Get the stores to use the phrase in window dressing of "Believe Me, Xantippe, our dollar shirts are the best value you ever saw." This is good only if you can get a majority of the stores to use the catch phrase. If you use the press book stunt suggestions, it might be well to remember that Xantippe was a lady and not a man as suggested.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

"TOYS OF FATE"

Metro Presents the Famous Actress Mme. Nazimova in a Seven-Part Story of a Gypsy's Vengeance that Worked in Unexpected Ways.

Cast.

Azah }
Hagar } .....Mme. Nazimova
Henry Livingston.....Charles Bryant
Pharos, the gypsy chief.....Frank Currier
Greggo .....Irving Cummings
Bruce Griswold.....Dodson Mitchell
Howard Belmont.....Edward J. Connelly
Blanche Griswold.....Nila Mac

Directed by George D. Baker.

The Story: Hagar, the young wife of Pharos, the gysy chief, leaves him for Bruce Griswold. When Griswold tires of her he tells her to go, and in despair she throws herself from an upper window. Pharos finds the body and swears vengeance upon Griswold. Some years after, the gypsies again camp on the Griswold estate. Griswold tells his lawyer, Henry Livingston, to evict them. Henry seeks to do so, but becomes enamoured of Azah, the daughter of Hagar and Pharos. Griswold, visiting the camp, also becomes enamoured of Azah, and as a means to gaining possession of her he offers to have her educated. Thinking to make herself more worthy of Henry, Azah assents, but Pharos warns Griswold that she may be won only in honorable marriage. Later Griswold, infatuated, offers to marry her, but is poisoned by the draught Azah intended for herself, and her mother is avenged. She is tried for murder, but is saved by Henry's clever defense and no longer is the toy of fate.

Feature Mme. Nazimova, who portrays Azah and Hagar, and Charles Bryant, as Henry Livingston.

Program and Advertising Phrases: High Lights of Love and Tragedy in Gripping Details of Romany Romance.
Gypsy Love and Gypsy Vengeance Mingle in Sensational Scenes and Incidents.
Heritage of Hate Fulfilled in the Strange Outcome of a Vengeful Life.
Photodrama of Intense Interest Splendidly Acted by Select Company.
Romance and Adventure Mingle in Gripping Drama of Love and Vengeance.
Sensational Scenes and Tense Episodes Provide Thrilling Screen Entertainment.

Stunt Suggestions: Play up the star strongly, making heavy use of her name and photographs in newspapers and window work. You may be able to contrive a gypsy encampment for the lobby display with a pretty girl in gypsy dress telling fortunes the burden of which is that the listener should see Toys of Fate on the playing date. You can rig up a gypsy street wagon with a girl and a man in gypsy dress on the driver's seat and banners or lithographs on the sides, but emphasis on the star and the feature will probably bring the best returns.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Press sheet. Ten-minute novel for newspapers. Lobby sheet. Slides. Heralds. Cuts. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Filler sheet.

"A DAUGHTER OF THE WEST"

Pathe Presents Baby Marie Osborne in a Vividly Pictured Melodramatic Story of the Untamed West.

Cast.

June.....Baby Marie Osborne
Ralph Gordon.....Frank Whitson
Stella Gordon.....Marion Warren
Sarah Malcomb.....Leota Lorraine
Allan Standish.....J. W. Foster
"Rawhide" Pete.....William Quinn

Directed by William Bertram.

The Story: Owing to the inequality of age between Ralph Gordon and his wife, Stella, the young woman at the seaside resort where she has gone accompanied only by her baby daughter, June, harkens to the call of youth, and becomes enamored of Allan Standish, a social parasite. Stella shamefully neglects June, who finds happiness in playing with a little colored boy. Gordon is advised anonymously of his wife's infatuation, and hurries to the scene. After thrashing the masher, Gordon goes to Hell's Gulch to protect his mining interests from the depredations of "Rawhide" Pete. Gordon falls in love with Sarah Malcomb, the governess to his child, June. Standish arrives, buys a low dancehall, and, with "Rawhide" Pete, defies Gordon, now the sheriff. Pete is captured, and Standish, who has escaped, compels Sarah to hide him. Gordon locates Standish, and a pistol duel results. From here to the end the action is of the rapid fire order, with a startling surprise in the climax.

Feature Baby Marie Osborne as June and Frank Whitson as Ralph Gordon.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Gripping Melodrama Full of Thrills and Quick Action.
Mating of December and May Brings Happiness Through Wild Adventure.
Desperadoes of "Hell's Gulch" are Thwarted by Clever Child.
Stirring Encounters Lend Thrills and Excitement to Photoplot.
Screen's Baby Star Makes Great Record in Crime Exposures.
Domestic Tragedy Turned Into Love Romance by Child's Cleverness.

Stunt Suggestions: Play up strongly the pictures of Baby Osborne, using them for window displays with, "See Baby Osborne foil the state robbers," "See Baby Osborne capture the desperado, Rawhide Pete," and similar phrases, with the addition of house name and date. For the lobby use the picture display, with a suggestion that this Western play is different from the usual stories in which the child has appeared. The same line should be followed in the newspapers.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 11x14, both in sepia and color. Also 22x28. Slide. Campaign book. Cuts.

Released May 26.

"ROSE O' PARADISE"

Paralta Plays Present Bessie Barriscale in a Story by Grace Miller White, Author of "Tess of the Storm Country" and Other Famous Books and Plays.

Cast.

Virginia Singleton.....Bessie Barriscale
Lafe Grandoken.....Howard Hickman
Jordon Morse.....David M. Hartford
Theodore King.....Norman Kerry
Peg Grandoken.....Edythe Chapman
Maulding Bates.....William Delmar
Mollie Merriweather.....Lucille Young
Thomas Singleton.....Arthur Allardt

Directed by James Young.

The Story: The wife of Thomas Singleton dies giving birth to a daughter, Virginia. The tragedy unbalances Singleton's mind, and he is put in an asylum. Jordon Morse, Singleton's half-brother, becomes the legal guardian of the child. Knowing that Virginia has inherited quite a fortune, he plots to secure it. When Virginia is eighteen years old her father escapes from the sanitarium. After establishing his identity and revealing Morse's scheme he sends Virginia to "Lafe" Grandoken, an old friend. The death of Singleton occurs shortly after the departure of his daughter. While picking flowers in the woods near Grandoken's home, Virginia is accosted by Maulding Bates, the town bully, but aid comes in the person of Theodore King, with whom she had become acquainted some time ago. For threatening to tell Grandoken of his plot to get Virginia's money Morse kills Bates, and by a subterfuge fastens the blame on Grandoken. Virginia is a witness to the murder, and Morse, fearing that she will inform the authorities, imprisons her in a dilapidated house, but she escapes, and at the crucial moment during the inquest she appears and tells her story. Morse is placed under arrest and King, who has fallen in love with Virginia, finds that his love is reciprocated, and the two are subsequently married.

Feature Bessie Barriscale as Virginia Singleton and Norman Kerry as Theodore King.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Intrigue and Violence, Following Villain's Plot to Rob Heiress of Fortune, Fails When Justice Avenges Foul Murder and Bestows Happiness Upon Pretty Orphan Girl.
The Lengths to Which Villainy Will Go to Further Selfish Ends Diclosed in Gripping Photo-Drama.
"Tess of the Storm Country" Has Sequel in Gripping Photoplay.
Engaging Entertainment Provided in Photoplay of Thrilling Episodes.
Excitement and Thrills Create Sustained Interest in Clever Plot.
Fast-Moving Photo-Plot Creates Interesting Entertainment.

Stunt Suggestions: Get some energetic woman to start a "Happy in Spite" club along the lines of that suggested in the story. Announce that all of those who have seen the story and understand the scope of the club are eligible to membership, or announce the formation of the club at a matinee performance. Much can be done with the press in a small town with such a club, which can be made to live (and work for the house) long after the play is gone. For window work try a pail with three or four toy kittens, a violin and a bundle done up in a cloth, using a card announcing "This is all the baggage the heiress carried, but she found love and fortune at her journey's end. See Rose o' Paradise at (house and date). Bessie Barriscale is the star."

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one and three-sheets. One six-sheet. Thumbnail and one to three-column cuts in electro or mats. Press book.

"BROADWAY SCANDAL"

Bluebird Presents Carmel Myers and Edwin August in the Story of a Man Who Learned the True Worth of the Women of the French Nation.

Cast.

Dr. Kendall.....W. H. Bainbridge
David Kendall.....Edwin August
"Kink" Colby.....Lon Chaney
Nenette Bisson.....Carmel Myers
Armande Bisson.....Andrew Robson
Paul De Caval.....S. K. Shilling
Falkner .....Frederick Gamble

Directed by Joseph De Grasse.

The Story: Nenette Bisson, a young French girl, is brought to the private sanitarium operated by David Kendall and his father. She has a bullet wound in the shoulder, and young Kendall, intoxicated, fails to notify the police. Nenette becomes enamored of David, but he, believing that all French women are not to be taken seriously, does not reciprocate her affection. When she has fully recovered, Nenette returns to continue her dancing in her father's cafe. Kendall follows sometime later and reaches the cafe just as Nenette has consented to become the wife of a man she does not love. The police trail her and she is arrested. The shame thus heaped upon her father causes him to drive her from home. Nenette becomes a stage favorite, and David, who has joined the United States medical corps, realizes while in the thick of battle the valor and devotion of French women.

Feature Edwin August as David Kendall and Carmel Myers as Nenette.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Side Lights on Stage Life Supply Surprising Trend of Gripping Photo-story.
Dancing Girl Wins Happiness Through Strange Pranks of Fate.
Brief Journeys Into Mysteries of Stage Life.
Love Finds the Way to Dispose of Suspicion and Mistrust.
Unusual Photoplot Presented in a Series of Surprising Episodes.
Mystifying Advance of Engaging Photoplay Baffles Plot-Detectives.

Stunt Suggestions: Use the French and United States flags for drapes for window displays and lobby use. For a display in a jewelry store surround a wedding ring with a display of handsome diamonds with a card lettered "David Kendall was willing to give Nenette any ring save the plain gold band, and learned late that not all French women are shallow and inconstant. See Broadway Scandal at (house and date)." Work some special press paragraphs on the question raised in this story and the misconception as to the real nature of the French women.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Player cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two-columns wide. Press book.

Released June 1.

"OLD LOVES FOR NEW"

Triangle Presents Margery Wilson and Lee Hill in the Story of a Society Dangler Who Was Made a Man Because His Wife Was Flirtatious.

Cast.

Gwendolyn Alcot.....Margery Wilson
Mrs. Alcot.....Blanch Gray
Harvey Marton, Sr.....George Pearce
Harvey Marton, Jr.....Lee Hill
Rose Harrison.....Irene Hunt
Mugs.....Leo Willis
Jerry Marquis.....Pete Morrison
Hennessey.....Lee Phelps

Directed by Raymond Wells.

The Story: When Harvey Marton, Jr., the son of a wealthy banker, marries Gwendolyn Alcot he is amazed to find that she is not the innocent girl she appeared to be before becoming his wife; she has a fondness for cigarettes and cocktails. The two enter a life of riotous living, but his father's demands that he cease or be repudiated as a member of the family decides him to go West. In Mohawk, Ariz., where Harvey and his wife have gone, the young man finds himself the butt of many practical jokes by the cowboys, and Gwendolyn revolts against the life she is forced to live by flirting with Jerry Marquis. Being an uncouth man, Jerry takes her forcibly to him, and she is struggling in his arms when Harvey comes upon the scene. A fight ensues, and Harvey is whipped. But Harvey, determined to show the man in him, takes boxing lessons, and returns later to knock out Jerry. Gwendolyn realizes her love for her husband, and after explanations they are reconciled.

Feature Margery Wilson as Gwendolyn Alcot and Lee Hill as Harvey Marton, Jr.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Merge in Questionable Marriage of Convenience.
Society Girl's "Baby Stare" Changed to Intelligence by Strange Adventure.
Love Comes to Fickle Jade When Real Manliness Opens Her Eyes.
The Way of the West Makes a Man of Eastern Fop.
Tenderfoot Turns Tables on Western Disciples of Force.
Society Manners and Boxing Gloves Bring Surprising Climax.

Stunt Suggestions: Arrange with dealers handling sporting goods to make a display of boxing gloves and books on pugilism, with a card reading, "When Harvey Marton caught his wife in the arms of his foreman he didn't knock him down—he got knocked down. Learn to handle your hands and save a similar embarrassment. See 'Old Loves for New' at (house and date)." Use the stills for other window displays, with a line, "A baby stare made a man of Harvey Marton in the long run. See how it worked out in 'Old Loves for New' at (house and date)." For the lobby ask, "Can you flirt politely," explaining in smaller type that the ranch foreman couldn't play the game according to New York rules.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Special process art heralds. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Photographs. Slides. Electros and mats. Triangle Magazine. Press sheet.

Released May 26.

"HIGH STAKES"

Triangle Presents J. Barney Sherry in a Story of a Society Thief Who Baffles Scotland Yard to the Very End.

Cast.

Ralph Stanning.....J. Barney Sherry
Inspector Reginald Culvert.Harvey Clark
Marie Stanning.....Jane Miller
Chakiff .....Ed Washington
Lady Alice.....Myrtle Rishell
Clyde Harrison.....Ben Lewis
Janitor .....J. P. Wilde
Jimmy .....Dick Rosson

Directed by Arthur Hoyt.

The Story: A famous jewel has been stolen from Kensington Museum, London, and Inspector Culvert, of Scotland Yard, is baffled. He suspects Ralph Stanning, but is unable to obtain any direct evidence, and Stanning eludes him at every turn. Stanning rescues a young girl from officers who have arrested her for attempted suicide and marries her. The marriage works a great change in his life and he abandons his evil ways, doing good where once he planned only evil. At last Culvert, unwilling to admit defeat, thinks he has Stanning trapped, but finds instead that he has but paved the way for Stanning's greatest triumph and his own complete undoing.

Feature J. Barney Sherry as Ralph Stanning; Myrtle Rishell as Lady Alice.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Interest-Gripping Detective Story Involving the Unfolding of a Famous Scotland Yard Mystery.
Thrills of Adventure Provide Fascinating Interest in Detective Tale.

Trickery of Photography Increases Thrills in Mystery Screen-Drama
Daring Plot Spiced with Thrills of Intrigue and Excitement
Detective Crime-Plot Reveals Mysteries of Famous Scotland Yard

Stunt Suggestions: Borrow some pairs of handcuffs and attach them to window cards reading "A famous Scotland Yard detective sought to place these on the wrists of Ralph Stanning, but his every effort led to fresh defeats in the splendid battle of wits in High Stakes, to be shown at (house and date). J. Barney Sherry never had a better chance than in this splendid Triangle." If you can borrow a safe for the lobby use a card, "The man who stole the famous Southern Cross worked the combination of the vault through the sense of touch. A season ticket will be given to anyone who can open this safe. The ticket is inside the safe. Get it." Be careful to change the combination of the safe or the owner may pass around the tip.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, one each three and six-sheets. Heralds in rotogravure. Slides. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Electros and mats. Press sheets.

Released May 26.

"MEN"

Foursquare Pictures Presents a Star Cast in a Screen Version of the Striking Dramatic Success by Harry S. Sheldon.

Cast.

Laura Burton.....Anna Lehr
Mrs. Burton.....Charlotte Walker
Mrs. Fairbanks.....Wilette Kershaw
Alice Fairbanks.....Gertrude McCoy
Mrs. Hamilton.....Ida Darling
Roger Hamilton.....Robert Cain
George Fairbanks.....William Tooker
Tom Courtney.....Huntley Gordon
Anthony Gerard.....Bradley Barker
Doctor Forbes.....Fred Radcliffe

Directed by Perry R. Vekroft.

The Story: Mrs. Fairbanks, the wife of the wealthy George Fairbanks, has become slightly mentally deranged through the death of her child, and in following out the advice of his doctor to secure a child if his wife's health is to be restored. Mr. Fairbanks adopts the infant daughter of Mrs. Burton, who is unable to support her two children. Years later the two sisters, Laura Burton and Alice Fairbanks, meet Roger Hamilton, a scion of a wealthy family. Roger falls in love with Laura, but a little later decides that a match with Alice would be more to his advantage. When Alice and her fiance, Tom Courtney, quarrel, Roger pushes his suit the harder, but finds his efforts unproductive. True love finally triumphs in the marriage of Alice to Tom, and Laura to Anthony Gerard.

Feature Anna Lehr as Laura Burton, Gertrude McCoy as Alice Fairbanks, Huntley Gordon as Tom Courtney and Bradley Barker as Anthony Gerard.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Mother-Love Mistakenly Surrenders Babe to the Mercy of Men Through Cold-Hearted Action of Remorseless Society Woman.
Sociological Photodrama Presents Age-Old Problem in Odd Solution.
Promptings of Poverty Surrenders Babe to Cold-Hearted Foster Parent.
Reason Saved from Tottering Throne Through Mother's Sacrifice.
Gripping Situations Dominate An Unfolding Plot of Tense Interest.

Stunt Suggestions: The story does not offer much chance for special stunts, but a throwaway can be prepared asking for a child for adoption, and explaining the circumstances as related in the story. Give emphasis to the strength of the cast which includes many screen favorites. Use this last argument for a special lobby sign displaying the names.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one and three-sheets. One style each 24 and 24-sheet. Photos, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. 8x10 heralds in two colors. Cuts. Mats. Slides. Press sheet and music cues.

"THE OLDEST LAW"

World-Pictures Present June Elvidge in the Story of a Girl Who Found That the Law of Self-Preservation Was the Oldest Law of All.

Cast.

Jennie Cox.....June Elvidge
Daddy Cox.....Capt. Charles
Billy West.....John Bowers
Cora West.....Eloise Clement
Rolfe.....Frank Andrews
Henry Walker.....Frank Norcross

Directed by Harvey Knoles.

The Story: While hunting in the words of Maine, Professor Rolfe, a botanist, injures himself. He is found by Jennie Cox, who helps him to her father's cabin, where he is nursed back to health. During the professor's convalescence a strong friendship develops between him and Jennie and her father. It is not long after the departure of the professor that Jennie's father dies, and the girl goes to the city to earn her living. She meets the professor, who offers her the shelter of his home, but her happiness is soon blasted again by his death. She manages to secure a position as typist, but a disgruntled employee causes her discharge. Jennie, deciding to have a little pleasure before searching for another position, enters a famous New York Cafe, where she encounters Billy West, whom she met in the Maine woods, and who is now winding up the affairs of his divorce suit. She becomes his housekeeper, and it is here that a series of thrilling incidents enter her life. It culminates, however, in her favor, for she becomes the wife of West.

Feature June Elvidge as Jennie Cox and John Bowers as Billy West.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Mountain Girl's Battle Against Adversity in Great City Won by Surprising Combination of Circumstances That Culminate in Life's Happiness.
Resisting Temptation Brave Girl Wins Happiness in Great City.
Gay Life in a Great City Reveal Temptations to Young Womanhood.
Modern Story of City Life Filled With Thrilling and Unusual Episodes.
Surprises and Thrills Lend Tense Interest to Gripping Photoplot.

Stunt Suggestions: Use a throwaway, "What is the oldest law? If you don't know come to the Blank theater (date) and find out. If you do know, we can't keep you away." For window work use a few law reports with a card, "These are the newest laws—the laws of man. 'The Oldest Law' is the law of nature. See what it is at the (house and date). A World feature with pretty June Elvidge." For lobby work use the stills and the query as to what is the oldest law.

Advertising Aids: Two styles, each one, three and six-sheets. Free advance poster. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Two-color heralds. One and two-column cuts. Slides. Press sheet.

"$5,000 REWARD"

Bluebird Presents Franklyn Farnum in a Vivid Adaptation of Charles Wesley Saunders' Story, "My Arcadian Wife."

Cast.

Henry Arlington.....William Lloyd
Dick Arlington.....Franklyn Farnum
Norcross.....J. Farrell MacDonald
Tracy.....Wharton Jones
Hammersley.....Marc Fenton
Margaret Hammersley.....Gloria Hope
Ackley.....Frank Brownlee
Aunt Kate.....Lule Warrenton
Jeanette.....Grace McLean

Directed by Douglas Gerrard.

The Story: Dick Arlington's wife is the daughter of the farmer for whom he works. Dick is a fugitive, having been accused—but unjustly so—of the murder of his rich uncle. He finally tells Margaret, his wife, and she, having implicit faith in her husband, leaves with him for the city where the crime was committed. After having caused Dick many a heartache, Margaret solves the problem which has been mystifying the police. It turns out that a foxy, old lawyer was at the bottom of the affair, and Dick, with a great load off his mind, returns with his wife to their country home.

Feature Franklyn Farnum as Dick Arlington and Gloria Hope as Margaret.

Program and Advertising Phrases:
Country Bride Turns Actress to Free Her Husband from Suspicion of Crime and Captures Real Criminal Through Her Artistry.
Groom Beset With Suspicions Mistrusts Bride Who Gives Him Freedom.
Odd Twist of Plot Brings Mystery Play to Surprise Finish.
Screen Comedian Turns to Serious Effort in Latest Photo Hit.
Crime Story Mingles Love and Mystery in Gripping Proportions.
Wins Bride, Freedom and Happiness While Dodging the Law.

Stunt Suggestions: The reward bill suggested in the press matter is an excellent idea and should be followed in some form, with or without the cut. Work it in all possible forms for window and lobby display, for the title will work harder than any special stunt you can devise. Also play up in your advertising the fact that in this story Farnum does dramatic work instead of the serio-comicy style of acting he has been following. Offer it as a novelty.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Player cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two-columns wide. Press book.
